WRITERS OF WADHAM COLLEGE.

" WALTER POPE, uterine brother to Dr. Joh. Wilkins sometime bishop of Chester, was born at Faulstey in Northamptonshire, was first scholar of Wadh. coll. and submitting to the parliamentary visitation, he was, by the authority of the committee sitting in Westm. for the regulation of the university, admitted prob. fellow of the said house 9 July, an. 1651, being then bach. of arts. Afterwards proceeding in that faculty, he entred upon the physick line, but did not take any degree in physick regularly, and in 1658 he became one of the proctors of the university; in the latter end of which year obtaining leave to travel, or rather to be absent for the avoiding the making of a speech, which he was to do before he resigned up his office, Mr. Tho. Gourney of Brasen-n. coll. was his substitute for the remaining part of the year, and made an eloquent speech in the natural philosophy school, on the last Saturday of Lent term, commonly called Absolution Saturday. At the king's restoration he turned about, as many, who had submitted to the presbyterians and independents, did, kept his fellowship for a time, was actually created doct. of phys. in 1661, he being then or about that time astronomy professor of Gresham coll. in the place of Dr. Christoph. Wren, and a fellow of the royal society. After his said brother Dr. Wilkins became bishop of Chester, he made him his registrar for that diocese, which I think he keeps to this day (1693). After he was settled in his professorship, he spent¹ much time in observing the motions and appearances of the heavens; the result of which he did afterwards deliver in his astronomical lectures read in Gresham coll. which was hoped by my author here quoted, that he might be prevail'd with to make public, but as yet they are not. This person who leads an epicurean and heathenish life, much like to that of Dr. John Donn the son, hath written several frivolous things, which must according to the method that I have hitherto observed be put down, tho' rather fit to be buried in oblivion with the author, than remembered. They are these

" The Memoirs of Monsieur Du Vall, containing the History of his Life and Death. Lond. 1670. qu.

" His last Speech and Epitaph—These two things, with The Author's Apology why he conceals his Name, in the title or book it self, were all printed together in 3 sh. in qu. The reader may be pleased to note, that the said Mon. Du Vall, whose Christian name was Claude, and his birth in Normandy, had been a notorious highway-man in England, and having been a brisk, smart, gay, and handsome fellow, and of about 27 years of age when he was hang'd at Tyburn (which was on the 21st of January 1669) did draw the loves of many females in London towards him: Among which was the miss of our author Pope, who taking it in great indignation that his person, doctorship and merits, should be so slighted for the sake of an ignorant rogue; he did therefore write the said Memoirs, wherein are many satirical girds against the females. Soon after came out a little thing entit. To the Memory of the most renowned Du Vall. A Pindaric Ode. Lond. 1671 in 2 sh. in qu. Said in the title to be written by the author of Hudibras (viz. Sam. Butler) but by some curious persons then in being, it was judg'd not to be his. Quære. Dr. Pope hath also written,

" The Catholic Ballad: or, the Invitation to Popery, upon considerable Grounds and Reasons. Lond. 1674, printed in an Engl. char. on one side of a broad sheet. Soon after, viz. in Oct. 1674. came out an answer to that ballad, or a ballad written in opposition to it, entit. The Geneva Ballad said to be written by one.....Griffin a minister. Dr. Pope hath also written

" Rome for a Ballad: or, a Ballad for Rome: Being a Continuation of the Cath. Ballad inviting to Popery, &c.—This or the Cath. Ballad, or both, were put into Latin verse, that rhimed, as I have heard, but they were not made public. Dr. Tho. Tully was thought by some knowing persons of St. Edm. hall, to have had a considerable hand in that translation.

" The Salisbury Ballad—This was a satyr written against Seth bishop of Sals. for depriving him of his miss, which caused a difference between them for a time; but this I have not yet seen.

" The Old-man's Wish, a ballad—printed 1684.

" The additional Part to the Old-man's Wish.—This, which went about the great city in manuscript, runs thus,

" May I live far from Tories and Whigs of ill nature,

" But farthest of all from a sly Observer:

" May I ne'er live so long, as to write for my bread,
" And never write longer than wise men will read.

" These I say were dispers'd about the city of London in Nov. 1685, king Jam. II. being then " in the throne, and many being pleased with them, they were sent to sir Rog. L'estrage, the author of certain Mercuries called The Observer to be licensed. Whereupon in his Observer, vol. III. numb. 126, which came out on the 9th of January 1685, we have this account dialoguing those verses.—' Trimmer. Pray hark ye a little, before we part yet. How chance you would not license Mr. what d'ye call'ums poems? The town is so full on't, that there is a little paper of verses given out against ye in the coffee-houses, and upon the Exchange, like a play-ticket: And they say 'tis in revenge for not licensing those verses. There are only four of 'em, but they are dev'lish bitter; as for example—May I live, &c.

" " Observer. The answer to the first couplet is short. The farther off, the better, for I hate doggrel, as much as he does dialogue: And for his two last verses, the Wish came too late, for (if I do not mistake the man) he's under both those curses already. Writing for bread, are words of course; and a trade, I find, that he'll make but a sorry living of. And then for wise men's not reading my papers, I do not desire they should. For my business lyes more among fools than philosophers. The story is most damnable false, but the honest truth on't is this. One Gibson, formerly a footboy to a gentleman of my acquaintance, brought me some of my old master's verses to license. I was afraid that he might have stoll'n 'em, and therefore told him, that it could not be done, without some note from the author, of his consent to the printing of them. In return to this civility, I received a letter with a kind of a maggot in't, upon Trimmer and Swimmer (and I can't tell what) to be tack'd (as I conceive) to an old ballad. Now this whimsey took air, I perceive, and serv'd some retainer, perhaps, to a band of London fiddles, for a conceit to work upon. This is the bottom of the matter: And all, not worth one dash of a pen, but that the poet has a mind to be public, and would needs take a turn in an Observer.'—Dr. Pope hath also written

" The Wish. Lond. 1693. in one sheet in fol. 'tis there called Doctor Pope's Wish, being the only correct and finish'd copy, never before printed. The beginning of this Wish is, ' If I live to be old,' &c. He hath translated into English or paraphras'd

" The Twenty third Ode of the second Book of Horace, which is in a book called—Examen Poeticum. The third Part of Miscellany Poems, &c. Lond. 1693. oct. p. 405. 406. This book, which is an account of the presbyterian or true protestant plot, was published about a fortnight before James duke of Monmouth landed with his rebels at Lyme, which was on the eleventh of June 1685. Soon after came out another edit. with one or two cuts in it. Some time after the overthrow and execution of the said duke, king James II. required our author Sprat to undertake such another task, and presently to set about a second part: And to that purpose his majesty gave him a sight of multitudes of original letters and papers, together with the confessions of several persons then in England and Scotland; who did seem all to outvie one another, who should reveal most, both of men and things relating to the old conspiracy, as well as to the duke of Monmouth's and the earl of Argyle's invasion. But finding the^s innocence of divers persons of worth and honour touched in those papers, and by that time beginning vehemently to suspect things were running apace toward the endangering of our laws, and religion, he never could be induced by all his majesty's reiterated commands to go on with that work.

"CAREW REYNELL, descended from sir George Reynell marshal of the King's-bench (who died in Jul. 1628) and he from an antient family of his name living at West Ogwell in Devonshire, was born in Hampshire, became a gent. com. of Wadham coll. in 1652, left it without a degree, and went as I think to the inns of court, and thence to his patrimony at Riverhill in Bensted in the said county of Southampton. He hath written "The true English Interest: or an Account of the chief national Improvements, in some political Observations, demonstrating an infallible Advancement of this Nation, to infinite Wealth and Greatness, Trade and Populacy, with Employment and Preferment for all Persons. Lond. 1674. oct.

"SAMUEL WOODFORD, the eldest son of Rob. Woodford of the antient borough of Northampton, gent. was born in the parish of Allhalowes in the wall in London, on the 15th of April an. 1636, became a commoner of Wadham coll. in 1653, took one degree in arts in 1656, and two years after he retired to the Inner-Temple, where he was chamber-fellow with Tho. Flatman the poet. After the restoration of king Charles II. he lived at Aldbrook, and afterwards at Bensted in Hampshire in a married and secular condition, and was about that time a member of the royal society. On the 14th of the cal. of Jan. an. 1669, he took holy orders from George bishop of Winchester, and soon after became rector of Hartley-Malduit in the said county by the favour of sir Nich. Stuart bart. On the 27th of May 1676 he was installed preb. of Chichester, in the latter end of 1677 or thereabouts, he was made doct. of div. by the diploma of Will. archb. of Canterbury, and on the 8th of Nov. 1680 he was installed preb. of Winchester, by the favour of his great patron the bishop of Winchester before-mention'd. He hath written " In the month of June 1663 this our author sir

" Ch. Sedley, Charles lord Buckhurst (afterwards
" earl of Middlesex) sir Tho. Ogle, &c. were at a
" cook's house at the sign of the Cock in Bow-street " near Covent-garden, within the liberty of Westm.
" and being inflam'd with strong liquors, they went " into the balcony belonging to that house, and " putting down their breeches they excrementiz'd
" in the street: which being done, Sedley stripped " himself naked, and with eloquence preached blas" phemy to the people: whereupon a riot being " raised, the people became very clamorous, and " would have forced the door next to the street
" open; but being hindred, the preacher and his " company were pelted into their room, and the " windows belonging thereunto were broken. This " frolick being soon spread abroad, especially by
" the fanatical party, who aggravated it to the ut" most, by making it the most scandalous thing in " nature, and nothing more reproachful to religion
" than that; the said company were summoned to the " court of justice in Westminster-hall, where being " indicted of a riot before sir Rob. Hyde, lord chief " justice of the common pleas, were all fined, and
" sir Charles being fined 500*l.* he made answer, that " he thought he was the first man that paid for " shiting. Sir Rob. Hyde asked him whether ever
" he read the book called The Compleat Gentleman,
" &c. to which sir Charles made answer, that set " aside his lordship, he had read more books than " himself, &c. The day for payment being ap" pointed, sir Charles desired Mr. Henry Killegrew, " and another gent. to apply themselves to his ma" jesty to get it off; but instead of that, they beg'd
" the said sum of his majesty, and would not abate
" sir Charles two pence of the money. Afterwards
" sir Charles taking up, and growing very serious,
" he was chosen a reeruit of that long-parliament

"Pindaric Ode; being an Hymn on the Works of the six Days. Both these were printed at London in 1682 in oct. and midwiv'd into the world by the poems of Robert Sharrock, LL. D. John Speed, doctor of physic of Southampton, Tho. Butler de Portu Trisantonensi, George Lloyd his brother, Tho. Lardner, &c. The said Paraphrase of our author having been committed privately to a friend in London, (and not intended to trouble the press) it was, under pretence of being only borrowed, transcribed by a stranger, and printed without his leave and knowledge, with not so much as an epistle, introduction, name, or key to it: and not only so, but was owned by the same person for a thing of his own composure: and therefore it was that this perfect edition by the genuine author was made public, as he himself tells you in the epistle to the reader before it. Beza (as he said) was the first that turned the Canticles into verse, and that very unhappily in some respects. Next to him was Dudley Fenner, an old puritan, who dedicated his piece to the company of merchant-adventurers of Middleburgh, anno 1581, esteemed then a good work, but since accounted mean and ordinary. After him Henry Aynsworth turned the Song of

“A brief and clear Confutation of the Doctrine of the Trinity. These two things were printed together about the beginning of Dec. 1693, and sent inclosed, by way of penny-post letters, to several parliament men, who thereupon supposed that they had been written by a quaker. But the books being communicated, and laid open before the house of commons, they, upon perusal of, finding much blasphemy in, them, voted them to be burnt; and accordingly on Wednesday morning, 13 Dec. 1693, they were burnt in the Palace-yard at Westminster. Afterwards the author of them being discovered, and indicted for the same, was arraigned at the King's-bench bar on the 12th of Feb. following; to which pleading not guilty, the matter was deferred till the next term following. On the 19th of May therefore, an. 1694, he was tried at the King's-bench bar for writing the said Socinian pamphlets against the trinity; and, being found guilty, was fined 500*l.* and obliged to give good security for his good behaviour for 3 years, and to make a recantation in the four courts in Westminsterhall.

⁸ [We are desired to acquaint the world, that there is one John Humphreys, who of late hath written several books; and more particularly 1 or 2 sheets which reflect upon some ministers in London, by way of narrative, containing his birth, breeding, &c. That he was born at Salop in the year 38, and is about 42 years of age; that he was bred up at the grammar-school till 18 and then went to the Indies, and is now a preacher about this city, &c. These are to give notice, that the said person is not John Humphrey who was born at St. Albans bred up at Oxford, and Mr. of arts of Pembroke colledge, and afterwards minister of Fromm, and writ some books in the late times, and several since his majesty’s happy return, and all in a middle way of opinion tending to union, and is now about 60 years old; Therefore

“in the study of astrology. But leaving the said university he retired to London to practise and gain by his art, set forth bills under the name of John Humphrey, master of arts of Cambridge, intimating his abilities for resolving all manner of questions astrologically. At length coming accidentally into the company of Will. Lilly the astrologer, anno 1640, seeing him give judgment in a figure then set, he was so taken with the excellency of it, that he forthwith gave Mr. Lilly 40*l.* (tho’ an hundred was required) to teach him that, and improve him farther in his art; which he did accordingly. While they were at supper together, at which time Humphrey paid Lilly 35*l.* of the forty, a client came to speak with Humphrey, and so up into the closet he went with him. Lilly thereupon call’d him to him before he set his figure, or resolved the question, and instantly acquainted him how he should discover the moles or marks of his client. Afterwards Humphrey did set his figure, and instantly discovered 4 moles the querent had: whereon being overjoyed with it, he came tumbling down the stairs, crying, ‘Four by God! Four by God! I will not take one hundred pounds for this one rule!’ After the time that Lilly had spent upon him, he became a judicious person, and laborious in his profession, yet vain-glorious, loquacious, fool-hardy, and especially desirous of all secrets which he knew not, insomuch that he would have given Lilly 200*l.* to instruct him in some curiosities, wherein, he persuaded himself he had, but ‘ars est celare artem,’ especially to those who live not in the fear of God, or cannot be masters of their own counsels. He, the said Humphrey, was in person and condition such another as that monster of ingratitude the quondam taylor, John Gadbury, who dealt most unworthily with his master Will. Lilly before-mention’d, who had also instructed him in astrology. In the time of the war J. Humphrey did, as it seems, side with the royal party, was in Colchester, when it was besieged by the parliament forces in 1648, where he deluded sir Charles Lucas the governour with expectation of relief; but failing many times with his lies, was at last bastinado’d, put in prison, and enforced to be a common soldier, and well it was he escaped so. After the siege was over, he wrote a book against his master Lilly, called Anti-Merlinus Anglicus, and other little trivial things of his profession, married a second wife, (his first living in Cambridgeshire) then practised physick by a contrary name. Afterwards having intentions to practise in Ireland, he went to Bristol, but understanding there that the parliament forces

To Dr. Richard Rawlinson, &c.

S^r. I received your letter with Mr. Anstis's enclos'd. This is to assure you that I had no title to have my name in the ATHENÆ OXONIENSES, for I was born in Dublin, and bred up in the college of Dublin, and was never a servitor, but spent my own money there; many better men have been servitors, but I never was. Whatever is mentioned of me in the last edition of that book, is scandalously false in fact or circumstance in every particular, therefore you will doe a justice to the truth and me, to leave me out of the edition, and make me some reparation for the abuse done me in that defamatory character.—

I must tell you, that I was an ensign upon the duke of Monmouth's landing in earl Ferrer's regiment, and a lieutenant in the regiment before the duke of Berwick had it, so that I turn'd soldier

¹ [Thomas Southerne was educated in Westminster school. So Mr. John Jones in a MS. communication to Dr. Rawlinson. The letter from Southerne however shews that the information was given without due enquiry.]

² [Sir Anthony Love; or the rambling Lady, was printed again in 1698. Coxeter, in his MS. notes to Gildon's Supplement to Langbaine, says that this play met with extraordinary success, which was chiefly owing to Mrs. Monfort, who most masterly performed that part which entitles the play.] See Coxeter's Gildon (in the Bodleian library) page 136.]

before y^e revolution. If anything I have sayd here will be of any use more than leaveing me out of that book, and doeing me justice in my character you will much oblige, sir, your most humble serv^t. Tho. Southerne.—From Mr. White's oylman in Tothil Fields against Dartmouth street, 17th of Nov^r. 1737.³

Southerne was born at Oxmantown in Dublin in 1660. He remained in that university four years, and in 1678 came over to England, when he immediately entered himself of the Middle Temple. Quitting the study of the law, he commenced poet, then became soldier, and finally retired with a good fortune first acquired by his pen and his sword and encreased by an exact economy. He died May 26, 1746, in the 86th year of his age.

His dramatic pieces, besides those enumerated by Wood, are,

Sir Antony Love, or the rambling Lady, a Comedy, Lond. 1691 4to.

The Maid's last Prayer, or any-thing rather than fail, a Comedy. Lond. 1693, 4to.

Oroonoko, a Tragedy. Lond. 1696, 4to.

The Fate of Capua, a Tragedy. Lond. 1700, 4to.

The Spartan Dame, a Trag. Lond. 1719, 8vo. This play, says Jacob, 'was written in king James's reign the year before the revolution, but has not yet been allowed to come upon the stage, tho' every winter he is in hopes of its being permitted to appear.' Jacob's Lives of the Poets were published in the very year The Spartan Dame was permitted to be played, and it has been said the author gained 500l. by his production.

Money the Mistress, a Play. Lond. 1726. 8vo.

His works were first collected in 2 vol. Lond. 1713; but the best edition is in 3 volumes, printed for T. Evans Lond. 1774.]

Wilkins (afterwards bishop of Chester) by whose instruction he profited much beyond his years, in logic and philosophy. But his geny soon after leading him to the study of physie, he, in short time, made as great progress in that faculty, as he had before in arts, and therefore by the favour of king Charles I. was actually created doctor thereof in Feb. 1642, and about that time made one of his physicians in ordinary, he being then observed by those that knew him, to set an high value upon his own worth and parts, as he always afterwards did. Upon the declining of that king's cause, he retired to London, practised his faculty there, became one of the coll. of physicians, physician in ordinary to king Charles II. in his exile, and after his restoration, a member of the royal society. He was chosen president of the coll. of physicians 30 Sept. 1689, and continued till 1691. I think he hath been some few years, as he is now (1695) in the isle of Jersey, a learned and an unhappy man, aged and grave, yet too much given to romances.—He hath written many books (but great part of them are collected from other authors) whose titles are as follow.

Before I go any farther, it must be known that one Inigo Jones a Londoner by birth,* a great traveller, and most excellent in the art of architecture, was, after his return from visiting most parts in Europe, made surveyor general of the works of king James I. queen Anne, prince Henry, and Christianus the IVth, king of Denmark, and afterwards to king Charles I. of England. This person did at the command of king James I. an. 1620, draw up a discourse, from the knowledge he had in mathematical science and history, concerning that memorable and antique fabric called Stone-henge, standing on Salisbury-plain: wherein, after many arguments produced pro and con concerning its antiquity, and meaning of its erection, he doth conclude⁵ that it was a temple built by the Romans (while in Britain) and by them dedicated to Cælus or Cælum; from whom the antients imagined all things took their beginning. This discourse being left imperfect at his death (which hapned about⁶ midsummer day, an. 1652, aged 79 or more) it came into the hands of Joh. Webb of Butleigh in Somersetshire (the husband of the daughter of Inigo Jones his cousin german) who making a full view thereof, perfected and published it with this title, The

Which book, tho' few copies of it were printed, coming into the hands of many persons curious in antiquity, and architecture, was by them approved, and what the author had conceived concerning its antiquity, and original, was as a real truth believed by them. But so it was, that our author Charlton being not at all satisfied with that discourse, he sent, or caused others to send, a copy of the said book to Olaus Wormius the great antiquary of Denmark: who thereupon returning his sentiments of Stone-henge, in several epistles to Dr. Charlton, he did thereupon draw up a discourse, with the help of the books of Wormius, and other Danish authors, concerning the said monument of antiquity, entitling it

"EDWARD PHILLIPS, son of a father of both his names⁶ by Anne his wife, dau. of Joh. Milton, and sister to Joh. Milton the defender of the murder of king Charles I. was born in the Strand near Charing Cross within the liberty of Westminster in Aug. 1630, educated in grammar learning under his uncle J. Milton before-mentioned, became a student of Magd. hall in the beginning of March 1648, where continuing till 1651, he left the university without the honour of a degree. Afterwards retiring to London, and improving that foundation which he had laid in Magd. hall, became so noted for the trivial arts, the refined English tongue, and knowledge in several languages, that he became afterwards 1. tutor to John son of Joh. Evelin of Say's-court near Deptford in Kent; 2. to sir Phil. Herbert, afterwards earl of Pembroke; and 3. instructor to Isabella dutchess of Grafton, dau. to Hen. earl of Arlington, and to Hen. Bennet nephew to the said earl. Afterwards, or about that time, he married a woman with several children, taught school in the Strand near the May-Pole, lived in poor condition (tho' a good master) wrote and translated several things meerly to get a bare livelihood, was out of employment in 1684 and '85. He hath published,

At length the said Tho. Blount publishing his master-piece entit. A Law Dictionary, &c. Lond. 1670. fol. our author Phillips did involve most of it into another edit. of the said New World of Words, &c. which he was then about to print, as the said Th. Blount in his letter to me dated 14 Mar. 1670, thus attesteth, 'But I am much discouraged in my so much fancied scrutiny of words, since I am lately assured my last dictionary (meaning the Law Dict.) is at the press surreptitiously, being transcrib'd, mutilated, and disguis'd with some new title; and this by a beggarly half-witted scholar, hir'd for the purpose by some of the law-booksellers, to transcribe that in four or five months, which cost me twice as many years in Second 1662. First the names of those learned gentlemen and artists, as also of those arts and sciences to which they contributed their assistance; then a dedication to the most illustrious and impartial sisters, the two universities: a second ded. to sir William Paston: a third to sir Robert Bolles and Edward Hussy esq.: next follows 'a preface by way of introduction to the right knowledge of our language,' after which a brief and familiar advertisement to the reader, and lastly the work itself. It seems that the work had by this time obtained the credit of a standard book, for in the Bodleian is a copy interleaved and bound, with a letter from Brooke the bookseller to some person, whose name I cannot discover, in which he requests him to make observations and enlargements, evidently with a view to some future edition.

Third, 1669.

Fourth, 1678, a Latin ded. to James duke of Ormond, then a second in English to the dutchess of Grafton; the preface, as before; and the names of the contributors.

Fifth, 1696, this edit. has no dedications, but professes in the title to contain large additions and improvements from the best English and foreign authors, and to be 'a work very necessary for strangers, as well as our own countrymen, to the right understanding of what they discourse, write or read.'

Which said edition (the third I think) coming out soon after, and Blount finding, "all to be true, what he before had been told, answered the said book in another entit. A World of Errors discovered in the New World of Words, or General English Dictionary, and in Nomothetes: or, the Interpreter of Law Words. Lond. 1673. in 5 sh. and an half in fol. which Nomothetes, &c. was published by Tho. Manley of the Inner Temple, an. 1672. fol. But notwithstanding the said Mr. Blount's answer, came forth a fourth edit. of the said New World of Words, &c. Lond. 1678. fol. with very many additions, which made it quite another thing. But before Mr. Blount had taken notice of him and his work, a greater person than him had done it, namely Dr. Steph. Skinner in his Etymologicon Linguae Angl. wherein, in one place, he saith, 'et pro more authoris exponitur absurdissimè.' In another, 'Ridiculè ut solet omnia.' In a third, 'Ubi notare est miserrimam authoris ignorantiam.' Notwithstanding which reprehensions, our author Phillips makes use, in his later editions of his New World, &c. of many things in the said Etymologicon. Mr. Phillips hath also written, "Tractatulus de Carmine Dramatico Poetarum, præsertim in Choris Tragicis, & veteris Comædiæ."

"Compendiosa Enumeratio Poetarum (saltem quorum Fama maximè enituit) qui à Tempore Dantis Aligerii usque ad hanc Ætatem claruerunt: nempe Italarum, Germanorum, Anglorum, &c. These two things were added to the seventeenth edit. of Joh. Buchlerus his book entit. Sacrarum profanarumq; Phrasium poeticarum Thesaurus, &c. Lond. 1669. oct.

At the end of which is a supplement of some persons and things omitted in the said two alphabets: and at the end of that are two alphabets more, one containing an account of women among the ancients, and the other of women among the moderns, eminent for poetry. All which collections may serve as a guide or apparatus for a curious man to proceed in a greater and more exact discourse on the same subject. But now observe, as

An Introduction to Astrology, by Montelion, Lond. 1661, is attributed by Mr. Godwin to John Phillips. This is written in ridicule of Lilly's Christian Astrology.

Pharamond: or the History of France; a fam'd Romance, in twelve Parts. The whole Work never before Englished. Written originally by the Author of Cassandra, and Cleopatra. Translated by J. Phillips Gent. Lond. 1677, folio. Ded. to the duchess of Albemarle.

Almahide; or the Captive Queen; an excellent new Romance, never before in English. The whole Work. Written in French by the accurate Pen of Monsieur de Scudery Gouverneur of Nostre Dame. Done into English by J. Phillips Gent. Lond. 1677, folio. Ded. to the honourable Thomas Thynne esq.

The Six Voyages of John Baptista Tavernier, Baron of Aubonne, through Turkey into Persia and the East Indies for the Space of Forty Years. Giving an Account of the present State of those Countries, viz. of the Religion, Government, Customs, and Commerce of every Country; and the Figures, Weight and Value of the Money current over all Asia. To which is added, a new Description of the Seraglio. Made English by J. P. Added likewise, a Voyage into the Indies, &c. By an English Traveller, never before printed: Published by Dr. Daniel Cox. London, 1677, folio. Phillips dedicates his portion to Dr. Daniel Cox, and to sir Thomas Davies, lord mayor of London. I may here notice a mistake into which Mr. Godwin has fallen, and which has led him to bestow considerable praise upon John Phillips, to which, in the present instance, he certainly had no claim. The publisher of the Voyage into the Indies, or as it is more properly called, in another title, of A short Description of all the Kingdoms which encompass the Euxine and Caspian Seas, prefixes a 'preface containing several remarkable observations concerning divers of the fore-mentioned countries,' and in this preface he mentions A Discourse concerning the Begin-

[Edward Phillips probably died between the years 1696 and 1698; in the former the fifth edition of the World of Words appeared with Edward Phillips's name in the title as the author, and in 1698

nings and Progress of the Turkish and Tartarian Nations and Empires, which he professes to have long ago written, and probably may speedily publish. Now Mr. Godwin, supposing Phillips the publisher of this latter portion of the volume, ascribes of course this preface to him, gives him credit for the composition of the Discourse already written and hereafter to be published, and contemplates with great respect a man who, as he says, 'having undertaken no task, and being imposed on by no necessity, performs a great literary labour for the pure love of the occupation in which he is engaged.' But the fact is, Phillips was not the writer of the preface in question, nor was he the author of the promised Discourse. Dr. Cox a physician of eminence, a man of learning, and an author, was the publisher of this part of the book, and to him the preface is to be attributed. Mr. Godwin was in all probability misled by referring to a copy of Tavernier's Voyages with a title-page dated in 1678, in which Dr. Cox's name as publisher was omitted, possibly in order to vary the title, and so impose it upon the world as a new book. I merely state this circumstance to correct Mr. Godwin's narrative, which now contains an error that would not have appeared if that gentleman had met with both the title-pages to the book in question. They are in the Bodleian, and in St. John's college library.

History of Ethiopia, from the Latin of Ludolphus, Lond. 1682.

The Art of Physick made plain and easie, translated out of the Latin of the learned D. F[r]ambresarius, Physician to the most Christian King, by J. P. Gent. Lond. 1684. This, which may possibly be rightly ascribed to Phillips, is a translation from the Scholæ Medicæ ad Candidatorum Examen pro Laurea impetranda subeundum. Printed at Paris in 1622, and written by Nic. Abr. Framboisiere, who Latinized his name into Frambesarius.

An humble Offering to the sacred Memory of the late most serene and potent Monarch, Charles the Second. Lond. 1685, folio. And Winstanley mentions his Anniversary to his Majesty, (James the second,) composed by Dr. Blow.

Modern History: or a Monthly Account of all considerable Occurrences, civil, ecclesiastical, and military. Lond. 1688. 4to.

The Turkish Secretary, containing The Art of Expressing One's Thoughts, without Seeing, Speaking or Writing to one another; With the Circumstances of a Turkish Adventure: As also A most curious Relation of several Particulars of the Serrail that have not before now ever been made publick. Translated by the Author of the Monthly Account. Licensed July 3. R. Midgely. Lond. 1688. 4to. On the back of the title,

'To the reader.

'The book now presented to thee, kind reader, was written some few weeks ago in French by a god-son to the most Christian king, and one that had been a secretary of an embassy of his majesty at Constantinople. It was dedicated to the grand-duke of Tuscany, and met with so very kind a reception at the courts of France and Florence, that the author had extraordinary praises and presents conferred upon him by the two sovereigns, and this his performance has an universal vogue among the two nations. As the translator flatters himself he has done the original justice; and as no country is more fam'd than old England for hospitality, he does not question but the Turkish Secretary will meet with as kind treatment here as among the French and Italians. He has, at least, the charm of novelty. All our other relations concerning Turkey, treat only of policy, fire and sword, whereas this displays nothing but flowers, fruits and gallantries, which I should think most seasonable: so that I may well expect it to be kindly taken. And as a long grace to a good meal and appetite is unmannerly: so gracious reader, adieu.' At the end of the pamphlet is a single leaf containing 'An advertisement. Modern History, or a Monthly Account of all considerable Occurrences, civil, ecclesiastical, and military. Eight of these Monthly Accounts have already been publish'd and the ninth is in the press, and they are to be had for sixpence a-piece, &c. besides their containing (as we have already said) the whole history of all modern occurrences, they will be intermixt and beautified with tracts of geography, criticism, and generally all that falls within the commonwealth of learning; as, for example, the foregoing Turkish Secretary being to be bound up with them.'*

The Present State of Europe, or a Historical and Political Mercury, Lond. 1690, 4to. Duntou calls this one of the finest journals of the kind the world has ever seen: and as a proof that it met with extraordinary success, it was thought adviseable to render the work more compleat by publishing a preliminary volume, the narrative of which should commence with November 1688. This was accordingly done in 1692, under the title of *The general History of Europe, contained in the historical and political Monthly Mercuries, from the late happy Revolution in November 1688, to July 1690, where the Translation was begun, and is continued to this Time, &c. Phillips's Victory of the Gods and Godesses.

This second (says Mr. Rodd) I take to be Scarron's Typhon, of which a translation appeared in the year 1665, with the following title, Typhon: or, the Gyants War with the Gods, a Mock-Poem in five Canto's. Lond. 1665. 8vo.

Phillips wrote also A Song upon the Tombs in Westminster Abbey; printed in Mysteries of Love and Eloquence 1658, again in Wit and Drollery 8vo. 1682; and he has commendatory verses to Lawes's Ayres and Dialogues, 1653; to The Gentleman's Journal 1694; to Tutchin's Search after Honesty 1697; and to Blow's Amphion Anglicus, 1700.

Toland in his Life of Milton says, he perused the papers of one of Milton's nephews, and learnt what he could in discourse with the other, by which we may conclude that Edward was dead, and that Toland procured access to his library, since John, as we have seen in the notes, was living some years subsequently. And o'er the dark a silver mantle threw,
But dusky gloom had drove receding sun
To western seas, and form'd a night obscure."

[Robert Plot was the son of a father of both his names by Rebecca Patenden, his wife, widow of Edward Knight of Woodnesbury.⁵ The family were settled at Stockbury in the reign of Edward IV., and became possessed of Sutton Barne in the second of Elizabeth, by purchase from William Cromer, esq. made by Robert the son of Alexander Plot:⁶ which Robert was succeeded by his son and heir Robert Plot, a captain of the militia for the county of Kent,⁷ who died April 20, 1669, æt. 63 leaving a son and heir, Robert, born in 1641.

To what Wood has already related of this celebrated naturalist, we may add, that about 1676 he left Magdalen hall, and entered as a commoner at University college.⁸

Upon the decease of Dr. James, the warden of All-souls college, in 1686, he made application to the earl of Peterborough and sir Edward Hales, who had then a great influence upon king James II. to be nominated warden of that house, but was prevented by a previous promise made to Mr. Leopold William Finch, who obtained the wardenship.

August 21, 1690, Plot married Rebecca, widow of Henry Burman, by whom he had two sons, Robert and Ralph Sherwood Plot.⁹ Besides the offices already recorded by Wood, Dr. Plot was, in 1688, appointed historiographer royal; in 1694 Mowbray herald extraordinary, and in the same year register of the court of honour. He died at the age of 55, April 30, 1696, at Sutton Barne, and was buried in the church of Borden, where there is a handsome monument erected to his memory, with an inscription, that is printed in the second edition of the Nat. Hist. of Oxfordshire, in the Biographia Britannica, and in the Gentleman's Magazine: the rough draught of which, with Dr. Charlett's corrections, will be found in the Bodleian, MS. Ballard xiv. 43.

One of Plot's designs in order to promote a knowledge of the history and antiquities of his country, was to make a survey in person of the whole of England and Wales. For this purpose, and to explain the nature and intention of his plan, he drew up a very interesting letter to bishop Fell, which has been printed by Hearne in the appendix to vol. 2 of Leland's Itinerary, by Hearne, and reprinted in Shaw's Hist. of Staffordshire. He proposed to follow the example of Leland and Camden, searching for and collecting all antiquities, records and customs; and to this he intended to add a diligent survey into the natural history of the country, with whatever was remarkable, and deserving of notice or preservation.¹

Dr. Plot had drawn up a list of his manuscripts for the general Catalogue of MSS. of England, printed 1697 in folio, among which the following may be considered as his own productions.

Curll 1714 8vo. page 43, is A Copy of a Letter from Robert Plott L.L.D. design'd to be sent to the Royal Society in London. This has been reprinted in the first volume of Nichols's Bibliotheca Topographica Britannica, page 62, and has been attributed to Plott by the writers of his life in various places. He had however no claim to the authorship. The original letter is now among Dr. Rawlinson's collections in the Bodleian (miscell. 390.) and the fabrication of Plott's name must be ascribed to the Dr. who was editor, or rather the collector, of Curll's Miscellanies. The original letter was written by some person to his father, and the writer after desiring his duty to his mother and grandmother, his love to his brother and sister, and some doubts whether his money would hold out to carry him home, signs himself a 'moste obedient son.' The latter part of the letter Dr. Rawlinson has omitted, and altering the word son to servant has completely erased the name and substituted the initials R. P. Why he should have been guilty of so unnecessary a forgery, is not easy to determine; unless he fancied Plott's name of greater celebrity than that of the real author, and adopted it accordingly to give credit to his book. I may add, that in the same volume (390) will be found a fragment of a Kentish tour in the same hand-writing as that of the letter just mentioned, which differs from the usual style of Dr. Plott as much as well can be.]

Dr. Plot's MSS. came after his death into the hands of John Burman, his son-in-law, who gave those connected with Kent to Mr. Harris when he was collecting a history of that county: ³ one, entitled *Analecta Ro. with his friend Dr. Charlett, the master of University, preserved in the Bodleian, give us a good insight into many of his projects, and no bad idea of his private character and pursuits.⁵

London, Octob. 24, 1691.—‘I think the university have very well secured themselves in point of vending what they print, but if they think that 4s. in the pound above prime costs, a sufficient reward for preparing books for the press, I think they will fall short of their aime, for at this rate a book of a hundred sheets will amount but to 20*l*., too meane an encouragement for any learned, judicious man, and to make use of any other I think could be to little purpose. However if you can afford to think me fit for any such purpose, and can admit of a certain drudg I have lately met with to assist me, or some other such like person whose time lyes upon his hands, to transcribe and collate MSS. I could find in my heart to put forth one volume of English Historians meerly for your sake. As to the quære in one of your former letters, viz. how I have employed my time this last long vacation? I answer that beside my acting the part of a surveyor in no small quantity of building, I have written three large letters: One of 4 or 5 sheets, entituled Directions for the Education of a young English Earle, now not above six years old. Another, of 3 sheets, being Directions to a Nobleman (well inclined to such a designe) for the Settlement of a new Institution in the University of Oxon for Promotion of Learning, in a different Method from what has hitherto been practised. The third is but a resumption of my former Discourse concerning the best Method of Felling and Seasoning Timber, which I have augmented to double what it was before. The two first are finisht, and long since delivered to the parties concern’d, and I believe well approved; the latter (which I designe for the earle of Pembroke, first commissioner of the admiralty) lyes yet before me, wanting only transcribing.’ Feb. 16, 1691-2.—‘Your’s of the 9th inst. was very welcome to me, tho’ it brought proposalls never like to be answer’d by me, especially that of publishing a select volume of MSS. out of the musæum, or a new edition of Pliny’s Nat. Hist. either of which would be works agreeable enough to me; but where can they possibly be well done, but at Oxford, which I have now left, and cannot returne without a family, which here is no charge to me, but would be a great one there. What may be done in the spring towards a nat. hist. of Middlesex and Kent, I cannot yet fully resolve you, but believe that if Harrington can make good what he seems not to doubt, those will be the provinces I shall endeavour to adorne.’ In another letter dated Mar. 26, 1694, he says he has waited on Mr. Bridgman upon the subject of Middlesex, and that gentleman promises to use his best endeavours with the lord mayor, aldermen, and sheriffs of London; he continues ‘If these attempts are successful, I shall enter upon the work forthwith; if not, returne again to Kent, and there spend the remainder of my life in planting, &c. which I hope will be something better than sitting still and doing nothing for nothing.’ In a further letter dated August 2, 1694, he informs Dr. Charlett, ‘I think we shall now at last have a Natural History of London and Middlesæx; Mr. Bridgman has procured me the subscriptions of most of the privy councill, also of the lord maior, and most of the aldermen, most of which have subscribed ten, and none under five, pounds.’ These hopes however were frustrated, as appears from another letter dated in January 1696.—‘My designe of coming was partly to trye what further encouragement I could get toward the Hist. of Middlesæx, but here I find affaires so very much perplext, that I see little hopes of proceeding in it, insomuch that I am fully resolved, that in case I receive not a fairer prospect in a little time, to returne that little money I have collected toward it (which was rather thrust upon me than received) to the respective persons from whom I received it, and so totally to desist.’

This dread of a want of sufficient patronage seems to have been verified, and he once more returned to a life of rural pursuits. In one of his letters he says, ‘I have now left London, and have set up my staff here, (at Borden) where I think to shake hands with the world, and trouble it no more with natural histories, or any thing else. I have here a little cottage, with a little land belonging to it, which I hope I may be able to manage myself, and get enough out of it to feed my little family, which was the condition of Aglaus Pausidius who, as Pliny tells us, the oracle pronounced the happiest man in Greece. But my happiness will not begin till about Michaelmass next, for as the bearer can

⁵ [Ed. Lhwyd, Dr. Plot’s successor in the museum, gives a very indifferent character of him in a letter to Dr. Martin Lister, now preserved in the Ashmolean. ‘I think he is a man of as bad morals as ever took a doctor’s degree. I wish his wife a good bargain of him, and to myself, that I may never meet with the like again. In requitall of my attendance at the museum this last year, he allow’d me six pounds seven shillings, and two Histories of Staffordshire, out of 34 pounds I received and payd him, all except three pound ten shillings whereof he made me give him a note. He has sold and sent to London all his houshold stuffe, even to an old brasse candlestick, tongues, tinder-box and fire-fork. Lately at London he bought an Arabick monument, and told Mr. Ashmole he had purchas’d it to bestow on the museum, and which indeed he has sent down, and told me, I must enter it in the book of donations as his gift; but when I was with him at the vice-chancellor’s, I saw the vice-chancellor pay him the money he layd out for it, and render him thanks for his care therein. But enough of Dr. Plot at present, and for the future.’]

WRITERS OF NEW-INN HALL.

“ GEORGE LAWRENCE, son of George “ Lawrence of Stepney near London, was born in “ the county of Middlesex, became a com. of New-“ Inn, an. 1632, aged 17 years, took the degrees in “ arts, but whether holy orders from a bishop I “ cannot tell. Sure it is that he being a most “ violent puritan and a great admirer of the Scotch “ covenant, preached seditiously in these parts, but “ more especially at London upon the breaking out “ of the rebellion in 1642, at which time he was “ lecturer of S. George's church in Buttolph lane “ by Little East-Cheap. Afterwards he took the “ covenant, was a preacher in another church in “ London, became minister of the hospital of S.
 “ Cross near Winchester, carried on the trade of “ preaching there against the afflicted king and the “ royalists, and was not wanting on all occasions to “ preach up and applaud the men and actions of “ those times. After his majesty's restoration, he “ was silenc'd and ejected, lived some time in those “ parts, carried on the trade of conventicling, as he “ did afterwards at London to the time of his death.
 “ He hath written,
 “ Laurentius Lutherizans: or, his Protestation

“ against certain Calumniation aspersed on him
 “ by the corrupt Clergy and their Lay-Proselytes, “ for some Particulars delivered in two Sermons at “ S. Michael's Cornhill, and elsewhere concerning

 “ it is but one sh. in qu. yet he had an assistant in “ drawing it up, and who should that be but his “ dear brother Christoph. Love, as I have told you “ elsewhere.
 “ Several sermons, as (1) Three Sermons con-

 “ To which, tho' the name of Mr. Lawrence be “ only set, yet I take it to be the sermon of George “ Lawrence before mentioned. He hath written “ other things, but which I have not yet seen. The “ reader may be pleased now to know, that whereas “ there hath been a common report, that Mr. Rich.
 “ Baxter the late pride of the presbyterian party “ was bred at New-Inn, while Christoph. Love and “ the said George Lawrence studied there (which I “ suppose arose upon account of the studying there
 “ of one Steph. Baxter, the minister's son of Little “ Wenlock in Shropshire, and who proceeded in “ arts in 1642) I did therefore send a letter to him
 “ to know the truth of the matter: upon the re“ ceipt of which, he very civilly return'd me this “ answer, ‘ As to myself, my faults are no disgrace “ to any university, for I was of none, and have “ little but what I had out of books and inconsider“ able helps of country tutors. Weakness and pain “ help'd me to study how to dye, that set me on “ studying how to live, and that set me on studying
 “ the doctrine from which I must fetch my motives
 “ and comforts: and beginning with necessities, I “ proceeded to the lesser integrals by degrees, and “ now am going to see that which I have lived and “ studied for,’ &c.

“ JOSIAS PLEYDELL, the minister's son of “ Stroud in Gloc. was born in that county, entred
 “ a student of Brasen-n. coll. the 9th of July 1659, “ aged 15 years, being then put under the tuition
 “ of Mr. Rich. Duckworth. Afterwards he trans“ lated himself to New-Inn, took one degree in arts, “ holy orders, and then administered his function in “ his own country. Afterwards he became minister “ of S. Peter's church in Bristol, where being a “great stickler against the presbyterians and fanatics, and a constant adherer to Dr. G. Carleton bishop of that place in his contentions with the factious party of that city, his lordship did, soon after his translation to Chichester, bestow on him the archdeaconry of that place, in which he was installed the 3d of Oct. 1679. On the 27th of Aug. 1681. he was installed one of the minor prebends of that church. He is the author of “Several sermons, as (1) Loyalty and Conformity asserted, in two Sermons: the first on Rom. 13. 4. and the second on Eccles. 5. 1. Lond. 1681. qu. (2) Sermon in S. Peter's Church in Bath, the 9th of Nov. 1680, at the Funeral of Mr. Joseph Glanvill lately Rector thereof; on Rom. 14. 13. Lond. 1681. qu. printed and bound with the Discourses, Sermons, and Remains of Mr. Joseph Glanvill, &c.

“THOMAS WAGSTAFFE was born of a genteel family in Warwickshire, became a com. of New-Inn in Lent term an. 1660, took the degrees in arts, and about the time that he proceeded in that faculty he entred into holy orders. Afterwards he became chaplain to sir Rich. Temple of Stow in Bucks, and minister there, chancellor of the cath. church of Litchfield, and rector of the united parishes of S. Margaret Patton's and S. Gabriel Fen-Church in London. He hath written “Several sermons, as (1) Sermon preached at Stow in the County of Buckingham, the 9th of Sept. 1683, being the Day of Thanksgiving appointed by the King's Declaration, for acknowledging God's great Mercy in discovering and defeating the late treasonable Conspiracy against his sacred Majesty's Person and Government; on Prov. 1. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. Lond. 1683. qu. “A Vindication of K. Charles the Martyr, proving that his Maj. was the Author of Εἰρὴν βασιλική, against a Memorandum, said to be written by the Earl of Anglesey, and against the Exceptions of Dr. Walker and others. Lond. 1693, in 3 sh. in oct.

“MAURICE WHEELER, the son of a father of both his names of S. Giles's in Dorsetshire, became a batler of New-Inn in the beginning of Vol. IV.

“the year 1664, aged 16 years, afterwards (when bach. of arts) one of the chaplains or petty canons of Ch. Ch. and when master, rector of S. Ebbe's church in Oxon for a time. Afterwards taking to him a wife he became rector of Sibbertoft in Northamptonshire, whence after he had for some years continued there, he was called to be chief master of the college school in Gloucester. He is the author of “The Oxford Almanac for the Year of our Lord 1673. Oxon. 1673. in oct. There were near thirty thousand of them printed, besides a sheet almanac of two-pence that was then and there printed for that year: And because of the novelty of the said almanac, and its title, they were all vended. But the printing of it being a great hindrance to the sale of other almanacs, the society of booksellers in London bought off the copy for the future; so only a sheet almanac wrought off from a copper cut was afterwards by the curators of Sheldon's press printed, which continues yearly to this day. Several things in the said Almanac relating to the university were taken from Hist. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon, then almost finished at the press in the theater. Mr. Wheeler hath also written

“A Letter to Dr. Rob. Plot, concerning a Movement that measures Time after a peculiar Manner, with an Account of the Reasons of the said Motion.—This letter, which was dated the 22d of May, 1684, was remitted into the Philos. Trans. that were published in July the same year, numb. 161. He had also a hand in translating from Greek, the second vol. of Plutarch's Morals. Lond. 1684. oct. ² [Letter wrote to Dr. Nat. Ellison by Mr. John Nicholson from Rose Castle in Cumberland, Oct. 9, 1703, about archbishop Usher being bishop of Carlisle.

I have now looked into our register and court rolls, and consideration of his great losses sustained in that kingdom by the rebellion that a little before that time broke out: the revenues of which, tho' much abated by the Scotch and English armies quartering there, as also by the unhappy wars that soon after followed in England, yet he made shift to subsist upon it, with some other helps, until the houses of parl. seized upon all bishop's lands: and tho' in consideration of his great losses in Ireland, as also of his own merits, they allowed him a pension of 400*l.* per an. in consideration of what they had taken away, yet he did not receive that sum above once, or twice at most: for the independent faction overtopping the presbyterian, an end was put to the payment thereof. From the time of his death, which hapned in the latter end of 1655, the see of Carlisle lay void till 1660, and then Dr. Rich. Sterne of Cambridge succeeded, installed or enthronized therein on the 4th of Jan. the same year. The said Dr. Usher, a most reverend man, famous for religion and literature throughout Europe, an eminent pillar of the protestant cause against the papacy, and of the commonwealth of learning, died on Friday the 21st of March 1655, and on the 31st of the said month (1656) Oliver lord protector sign'd a warrant directed to the lords of the treasury for the sum of 200*l.* to bear the charges of his funeral; which sum was paid to Nich. Bernard D. D.³ And this he did out of an honourable respect to the memory of so pious and learned a champion of the protestant cause as he was. On Thursday the 17th of Apr. following, his body was conveyed from Rygate in Surrey, where he died, to St. George's church in Southwark, at which place, about 12 of the clock, his friends and many of the clergy met the corps, and accompanied it thence to Somerset-

The letters patents registered here 13 June 1642, the said archbishop, as bishop of Carlisle, granted a commission (under his archiepiscopal seal) unto Mr. Isaac Singleton, archdeacon and chancellor, Dr. Lanc. Dawes, Mr. Rich. Smith, Mr. Lewis West, and Mr. Frederick Tunstall, prebendaries then of Carlisle, Will. Richardson B. D. John Hasty, Lanc. Lowther, Will. Fairfax, Chr. Peale, Charles Usher and Simo Tullie, cl. A. M. for giving institutions in his absence, and to visit, &c. Severall institutions were accordingly dispatched in the archbishop's name, the last of which (as here registred) is dated 3 Nov. 1643. He disposed of one of the prebends of Carlisle to one Mr. Hen. Hutton, the 16 Sept. 1643. There were severall courts held in his grace's name, and tenants admitted, &c. but I do not find, or have ever heard, that he was here in person. He seems to have had the revenue of this bishoprick for about two years, which was collected and managed for him by one captain or Mr. Sharpe.

GEORGE WEB or WEBBE some time of University, afterwards of Corp. Christi, college, was consecrated bishop of Limerick in Ireland, an. 1634, and died in the latter end of sixteen hundred forty and one, under which year you may see more of him among the writers, vol. iii. col. 29. In the see of Limerick succeeded one Rob. Sibthorpe bishop of Kilsnore, mentioned in the FASTI, the first part, col. 391, and in the second part col. 100.

ROBERT WRIGHT was born in the parish of St. Albans in Hertfordshire, and at 15 years of age, an. 1574, [June 7] he was elected scholar of Trin. coll. and in 1581 [May 25] fellow, being then bach. of arts. Afterwards proceeding in that faculty, he took holy orders, was made vicar of Sonning in Berks, of Hayes in Middlesex, chaplain to queen Elizabeth, doctor of divinity, rector of Burton on the Water in Gloucestershire, canon resid. and treasurer of Wells, chaplain in ord. to king James I. and in 1613 the first warden of Wadham coll. but resigned that office soon after, because he was not permitted to take to him a wife by dame Dorothy the foundress thereof. In 1622 he became bishop of Bristol, was consecrated thereunto at Lambeth on the 23d of March the same year (Dr. John Featley then preaching the consecration sermon on Joh. 20. 22.) but had not restitution made⁵ to him of the temporalities of that see till the 4th of Apr. following. In 1632 he was translated to Lichf. and Coventry, the temporalities of which he received⁶ on the 3d of Dec. the same year, at which time he gave up the treasurership of Wells, which he kept in commendam with Bristol. In Dec. 1641, when then he saw what mad work the members of the long parliament made, and what farther they would do concerning the hierarchy, he did, with eleven more bishops, draw up a protestation in behalf of themselves, against their unreasonable actions: which being first presented to the king, who refused to have any thing to do with it, it was transmitted to the house of commons, who thereupon impeaching the said bishops of high-treason, they were all committed to custody, viz. ten of them, of which Litchfield was one, to the Tower,⁷ and two (Durham and Norwich) to the black-rod; but before Litchfield was conveyed thither, he spoke an eloquent speech at the bar of the house of commons, in answer for himself, which was afterwards printed in one sh. in qu. After he had continued prisoner about 18 weeks to his great charge, he was released: whereupon retiring to Eccleshal-hall in Staffordshire, (the seat belonging to his bishoprick) which about that time was fortified for his majesty, and kept for his service by Dr. Bird a civilian, died therein in Jul. or Aug. in sixteen hundred forty and three, at which time the said place was besieged by sir Will. Brereton and his forces under the command of the parliament; but where his body was buried, unless in the cath. ch. at Litchfield, which he desired in his last will and test. dat. 3 May 1643, I know not. On the 17th day of the said month of Aug. his majesty nominated Dr. Accepted Frewen dean of Gloucester and president of Magd. coll. to succeed the said Dr. Wright in the see of Litchfield and Coventry, Dr. Will. Brough to be dean of Gloucester, and Dr. John Oliver to be pres. of Magd. coll. The reader may be pleased now to know, that the said Dr. Wright having been much given up to the affairs of the world, he did in short time gather up so much wealth from the church, as not only to purchase the rich manor of Newnham Courtney in Oxfordshire of Hugh Audley of the Inner-Temple esq; and Tho. Audley his brother, for the sum of 18000*l*. (which manor they some years before had bought of the Pollards) but lands also in other places. All which he leaving to his only son Calvert Wright, sometime gent. com. of Wad. coll. he proved so ill a husband, as to sell the said manor, some years before the restoration of king Charles II. to John Robinson of London, esq; afterwards a knight and baronet, and lieutenant of the Tower; in the church of which place he was afterwards buried. As for Calv. Wright he died in a mean condition in the prison called the King's-bench in Southwark, in the winter time 1666.

Dr. Wright collected and published in 4to. 1596, some Oxford verses on the death of sir Henry Unton, under the following title, Funebria nobilis- simi et præstantissimi equitis D. Henrici Untoni ad Gallos bis legati regii &c. a Musis Oxoniensibus apparata. (Wood's Study 460.) To this he prefixed a good Latin preface,⁸ and contributed two copies of verses of his own composition. One of these has been reprinted in Warton's Life of Pope, page 393: from the other now given⁹ it appears, that Wright accompanied sir Henry Unton in one of his embassies to France. It was in that to the French king's camp at Laferre, in 1595, in which sir Henry died.
VOL. IV.

Newton in his Encomia, so often quoted, thus celebrates our author:¹⁰ Davenant to Sarum, and Dr. Val. Cary to Exeter) by the bishops of London, Worcester, Chichester, Ely, Landaff and Oxon, on the 18th of Nov. 1621, the archbishop (Abbot) being then thought irregular for casual homicide. Thence he was translated to Bath and Wells, in Aug. 1626, thence to London in Jul. 1628, and at length to Cant. in Sept. 1633. He was beheaded on Tower-hill near London on the tenth of January, in sixteen hundred forty and four, under which year you may see more of him among the writers, vol. iii. col. 117, 118, &c. The see of Cant. lying void till 1660, was then supplied by Dr. Juxon bishop of London, as I shall elsewhere tell you.

MORGAN OWEN, a minister's son, received his first breath in Caermarthenshire, was admitted a student in Jesus coll. in the beginning of 1608, aged 23 years, and being afterwards made one of the chaplains of New coll. did, as a member thereof, take the degree of bach. of arts, by the name of Owen Morgan, an. 1613, he being then a preacher. In 1616 he was admitted M. A. as a member of Hart hall, was afterwards well benefited in his own country of Wales, and a useful man in the church there. When Dr. Laud became bishop of St. David's, he then knew the man and his zeal for the church, and therefore made him his chaplain, and when he became chanc. of the university, Mr. Owen was by his endeavours actually created doctor of divinity, as a member of Jesus coll. an. 1636. Soon after, that he might shew himself grateful to his mother the univ. of Oxon, he at his own charge (being a rich man) enclos'd the south-yard belonging to St. Mary's church, with a fair free-stone wall, and built also of the same stone, most curiously carved and engraven, the beautiful porch leading from the high street into the said church, with the image of our lady, and a babe in her arm, at the top of it. Which being finished "in the year 1637, "at the expence of 230*l*." 'twas not only disgusted by the puritan, and defaced by the parliament soldiers in the beginning of the troubles, an. 1642, but laid in Laud's dish as an article against him at his tryal, that he did oblige the said Dr. M. Owen to build it, permitted him as chancellor of the university, and connived at all when 'twas finished. About the beginning of March 1638 he was elected bishop of Landaff in the place of Dr. Will. Murray deceased (who before had been bishop of Kilfenore in Ireland) which election being² consented to by the king on the 19th of the same month, he was soon after consecrated, but the day when I know not; and on the 9th of Apr. following the temporalities of the said see were³ restored to him. In Dec. 1641, he was one of the bishops that were impeached of high-treason for subscribing the protestation mention'd before in Dr. R. Wright, and thereupon being committed prisoner to the Tower, remained there till about Whitsontide following.

Afterwards he retired to his own country, suffered there for his loyalty, and for being a bishop, and one promoted by Laud; much about the time of whose death, this Dr. Owen died also. By his will dated 14 Dec. 1644, and proved the 12th of Dec. 1645, it appears that he was rich and possessed of several lands, which went, I presume, to Morgan Owen his brother's son. He endowed the free-school at Caermarthen (where in his younger years he had taught) with 30*l*. per an. charged upon the impropriation of St. Ismael's in the said county, about which time the present fabric of the said school was erected.

THOMAS HOWELL, elder brother to Jam. Howell mention'd among the writers under the year 1666, vol. iii. col. 744, was born⁵ in Caermarthenshire, "at a place called the Brynn, or as Dr. Fuller "says that his brother James Howell inform'd him, "he was born in Llangammarch in Brecknockshire, "near Brecknock town." He was admitted into Jesus coll. (of which he was scholar and afterwards fellow) an. 1604, aged 16 years or thereabouts, took the degrees in arts, holy orders, and became a painful preacher in these parts for a time, and soon after elsewhere. Afterwards he was made chaplain in ord. to king Charles I. rector of West Horsley in Surrey, of St. Stephen's in Walbroke near London, D. of D. and canon of Windsor an. 1636, in the place of Dr. Tho. Horne deceased. But in the beginning of the troubles, he being forced through vexation, "occasioned by the presbyterians," to leave St. Stephen's, "who afterwards sequestered "him for his going away" (tho' by many accounted a puritannical preacher) and afterwards West Horsley, his majesty thereupon "promising himself good "effects from his great candour, solid judgment, "sweet temper, and good repute," nominated him to the see of Bristol, on the death of Dr. Tho. Westfield, in July 1644, and soon after he was consecrated at Oxon, Dr. Usher primate of Ireland assisting at the ceremony. This worthy person, who was accounted a meek man, and a good preacher, died in sixteen hundred forty and six; whereupon his body was buried in the cath. ch. at Bristol, near to the entrance out of the south-isle into the choir. Soon after was a plain stone laid over his grave, but no inscription thereon, only Epergiscar. One Mr. Thom. Howell published A Sermon preached at the Funeral of Sir Rob. Butler, An. 1622-23. Whether the same with him who was afterwards bishop of Bristol I know not. "It is said of the "right reverend the bishop, that like Gregory "Thaumaturgus (who being a Scythian bishop, "found but fifteen christians in his diocese, and left "but fifteen heathens there) he found at Bristol "few affected to the church, left but few disaffected, "upon which account that honourable city, as I "have been told, did take care for his children's "comfortable education, out of gratitude to their "father in Christ. (See Fuller's Worthies.) His "children were eleven in number. Mrs. Catharine "Phillips, Orinda, brought up one of his sons, "Charles Howell, who was her godson; there was "one of them call'd Griffith Howell a great herald, "another George Howell fellow of All-souls, who "took his master's degree in 1662, he liv'd near "Chichester, where his son Robert Howell lives at "present."

[Howell's sermons, like the waters of Siloah, did run softly gliding on with a smooth stream, so that his matter did steal secretly into the hearts of his hearers; a man not only flourishing with the verdure and spring of wit, and the summer of much learning and reading, but happy in the harvest of a mature understanding, and judicious in matters politick, both ecclesiastical and civil, one who like Diogenes confuted the enemies of his function and not his person ὁρθοποδοῦν by circumspect walking.⁶

LEWES JONES, was born in Merionethshire, became a student in this university in 1562 or thereabouts, but in what house I cannot tell. In 1569, being then bach. of arts, he was elected fellow of All-souls coll. and about that time taking holy orders, went, without the taking of any other degree in this university, into Ireland, where was made dean of Cashels, and afterwards being nominated to the see of Killaloe in that country, was consecrated thereunto on the 23d of Apr. 1633. In 1641 when the rebellion broke out there, and great miseries followed thereupon, he retired to Dublin, where dying⁷ on the second of Nov. in sixteen hundred forty and six, aged 104 years, was buried in the church of St. Werburgh, commonly called St. Warborough, in the said city. In the see of Killaloe succeeded Dr. Edw. Parry, father to John and Benjamin, successively bishops of Ossory, and after him succeeded Dr. Edw. Worth, who dying at Hackney near London in the beginning of Aug. 1669, was buried⁸ on the sixth day of the same month in the church of S. Mildred in Bread-street in London.

[Bishop Jones's son Henry was made bishop of Meath 1661, and his son Ambrose bishop of Kil-dare 1667. GREY.]

GEORGE ANDREW, received his first breath in a market town called Daventry, commonly Daintry, in Northamptonshire, became a batler of Magd. hall in Lent term, an. 1588, aged 15 years or thereabouts, took the degrees in arts as a member of that hall, and about that time holy orders. Afterwards journeying into Ireland, he was made dean of Limerick, and thence being advanced to the see of Ferns and Laighlin, was consecrated thereunto in St. Patrick's church (of which he was chauntor) near Dublin, on the 14th of May 1635. In the beginning of the rebellion he was forced thence, and retiring to London, lived for some time there in an obscure condition. At length he giving way to fate in the month⁹ of Octob. in sixteen hundred forty and eight, was buried in the church of St. Clement Danes without Temple-bar, within the liberty of the city of Westminster. In his bishoprick succeeded Robert Price, in the latter end of 1660, of whom mention shall be made hereafter.

LANCELOT BULKLEY the eleventh son of sir Rich. Bulk. was born at Beaumarish in the isle of Anglesea, entred a commoner of Brasen-n. coll. in the beginning of 1587, aged 18 years, where continuing till he was bach. of arts, translated himself to St. Edm. hall, and as a member thereof he took the degree of master in the same faculty, an. 1593. Afterwards he went into Ireland, became archdeacon of Dublin, doctor of divinity there, and at length archb. of the said city; to which being consecrated in the church of St. Peter at Tredagh, on the 3d of Oct. 1619, was soon after made by king James I. privy-counsellor of that kingdom. He lived to be spectator of the miseries that befel that realm, occasion'd by the rebellion that broke out in 1641, at which time securing himself in the city of Dublin, escaped the malice of the rebels, and lived in a disconsolate condition several years after. At length arriving to 82 years of age, departed¹ this mortal life at Taulaughta, on the eighth day of [Lanc. Bulkeley was born at Beaumares in Anglesey. He was the younger (and eleventh) son of the first sir Richard Bulkeley, of that place, by his second wife Agnes, daughter of Thomas Needham. He (being then A. M.) was ordained deacon by bp. Hugh Bellot, in the private oratory in the bp's palace at Bangor, on Tuesday the 15th of Nov. 1593, and was licensed to preach at the same time, and instituted the same day to the rectory of Llanddyffan. On the 4th of March following he was instituted to the rectory of Llandegfan (or Beaumares), and on the 25 of March 1594, he was ordained priest in the cathedral church of Bangor by the same bp. On Dec. 18, 1619, John Bayly, the bp's son, was instituted to Landdyffan, and the 15th of March following John Lloyd, A. M. was instituted to Llandegfan, both void by the promotion of the said Lanc. Bulkeley, then D. D. to the archbishoprick of Dublin, which is all we have of him in our register.

The pedigree books add, that he married Als, the daughter of Roland Bulkeley of Conway, and had by her several children; among others Mr. Bulkeley, archdeacon of Dublin, father of sir Richard Bulkeley of Old Baulm, formerly fellow of Trinity college near Dublin. He also studied in Oxon. as a member of Christ's church, and is a writer, being author of, Proposals for sending back the Nobility and Gentry of Ireland, &c. and some other things. The archbp. had a daughter married to Dr. Aungier, father to the present earle of Longford, and another daughter called Mary, married to William Bulkeley of Porthampt, esq. HUMPHREYS.]

JOHN PRIDEAUX, rector of Exeter coll. and the king's professor of divinity of the univ. of Oxon, was consecrated bishop of Worcester^a in the month of December 1641, and died in Sept. in sixteen hundred and fifty, under which year you may see more of him among the writers, vol. iii. col. 265, 266, &c. NATHANIEL CONOPIUS, a Cretan born, trained up in the Greek church, and became primore to Cyrill patriarch of Constantinople, who for his religious life and conversation had a respect for him. When the said Cyrill was strangled by the visier (the grand seignior of the Turks being not then returned from the siege of Babylon) Conopius to avoid the like barbarity fled thence and went into England, and addressing himself with credentials from the English agent at Constantinople to Dr. Laud archb. of Cant. that worthy person sent him to Baliol coll. and allowed him a comfortable subsistence during his abode there. Afterwards he became one of the chaplains or petty canons of Ch. Church, but whether he took a degree in this university, I know not.⁵ In the beginning of Nov. 1648 he was expelled the university by the barbarians, I mean the parliamentary visitors, and had nothing left to maintain him as a scholar and divine. So that because of the barbarity of such who called themselves saints, "and the godly party," he returned into his own country among the barbarians, and was made bishop of Smyrna called Le Smerne, about the year 1651. While he was in Oxon, he had a book of music lying by him, which as he said was of his own composition: and being well skill'd in that faculty, his countrymen in their letters sent to, stild him μεταφύτικος: but the notes were such, as are not in use with, or understood by any of, the western churches. When he died, or what he wrote after he had left England, I know not. It was observed that while he continued in Bal. coll. he made the drink for his own use called coffee, and usually drank it every morning, being the first, as the antients of that house have informed me, that was ever drank in Oxon. You may see more of this Conopius in the epistles of Ger. Joh. Vossius written to learned men, lately published, part II. p. 145.

1662, and then in June Dr. Isaac Barrow being elected to govern it, was consecrated thereunto in king Henry VII. chap. at Westm. on the 5th of July 1663, and not before, at which time his nephew, son of his brother Thomas, called Dr. Isaac Barrow master of Trin. coll. in Cambridge, preached the consecration sermon. This worthy and godly bishop, who was son of Isaac Barrow of Spiney-abbey in Cambridgeshire esq; was educated in St. Peter's coll. commonly called Peter house in Cambridge, of which he became fellow, but was turn'd out thence by the presbyterians an. 1643 or thereabouts: whereupon going to Oxon, and his eminency being known there, he was made one of the chaplains of New coll. by the most loyal and generous warden thereof Dr. Pink, where continuing till after the garrison of Oxon was surrendered for the use of the parliament, shifted afterwards from place to place, and suffered with the rest of the loyal and orthodox clergy, till the most blessed return of king Charles II. At which time he was not only restored to his fellowship, but also made one of the fellows of Eaton coll. near Windsor, which he held in commendam with the bishoprick of Man. In Apr. 1664 he was made governour of the Isle of Man by Charles earl of Derby, governed it piously and prudently, held that office all the time he was bishop of Man, and sometime after his translation to St. Asaph. He was a great benefactor to the island, especially to the clergy, did collect by his great care and pains, from pious persons, one thousand eighty one pounds, eight shillings and four pence, with which he bought all the impropriations in the island from the earl of Derby, and settled me with a most ready and obliging reply, from which I extract the following information.

* * * I have not been able to discover the exact period of bishop Parr's consecration, but his signature occurs in the episcopal registers during the year 1636, till 1645, at which time, I apprehend, he retired into England in consequence of the usurpation. He was rector of Eccleston in Lancashire previous to his promotion to this bishoprick. Bishop Parr was succeeded by Samuel Rutter in 1660. He was previously archdeacon of this diocese, and it appears that he was guardian of the temporalities from the year 45 to 59. He was also the friend and companion of the celebrated earl of Derby, during his confinement for his attachment to the royal cause. He was buried in the cathedral of St. Germans in this island. A flat stone, with a brass plate, marked the place of his interment, but the latter was stolen only a few years ago by an inconsiderate person, who was making the tour of this island: the inscription upon the plate was as follows:

Mutuo accepi confratribus meis,
Sub spe resurrectionis ad vitam

them upon the clergy, as every one had need. He ordered them all to teach school in their respective parishes, and allowed 30*l.* per an. for a free-school, and 50*l.* per an. for academical learning. He got also one hundred pounds a year settled (which was like to have been lost) upon the clergy, which was given by king Charles II. and gave 135*l.* of his own money, for a lease upon lands of twenty pounds a year, which is settled towards the maintenance of three poor scholars in the college at Dublin, that in time there might be a more learned clergy in the island. He gave likewise 10*l.* towards the making a bridge over a dangerous water, and did many other good works there. Afterwards going into England for health's sake, and continuing in a house of the countess of Derby in Lancashire called Cross-hall, he received the news of his majesty's conferring on him the bishoprick of St. Asaph. See more of him in Hen. Glemham among these bishops, under the year 1667.

[Bishop Parr was consecrated to the bishoprick of Sodor and Man June 10, 1635:⁷ He was an excellent bishop, rebuilt Ramsey chapel, and was eminent for his preaching,⁸ and instructing the natives of his diocese. I have little doubt but that he died in 1645, and was buried, as Willis says, in the cathedral of St. Germans. Wood is wrong in his statement, that Barrow was the next bishop. Samuel Rutter, who was archdeacon of the diocese, at Parr's death, became governor of the ecclesiastical matters of the isle, and was promoted to the bishoprick, probably immediately on the restoration, for in 1660, we find him collated to the prebend of Longden, in the church of Lichfield, by the title of bishop of Sodor. Certain it is that he was confirmed bishop October 8, 1661, and sat here till his death. According to Sacheverell, Rutter was a man of exemplary goodness and moderation.⁹]

ROGER MANWARING, was born at Stretton in Shropshire, educated in grammar learning in the King's school at Worcester, under Hen. Bright, entered a student in this university in the beginning of the year 1604, and soon after was made one of the clerks of All-s. coll. After he had run through the usual courses of logic and philosophy, he took the degrees in arts, being about that time, as I conceive, one of the chaplains of that house. At length being made rector of St. Giles's-in-the-fields near London, he took the degrees in divinity, and was made chaplain in ordinary to king Charles I. before whom, while he was in his attendance at Oatlands, he preached two sermons in July¹ 1627, entit. Religion and Allegiance, on Eccles. 8. 2. Lond. 1627. qu. and about the same time preached them at his country cure. In the year following, on the fourth of May, he preached on the same subject in his church of St. Giles's before-mention'd; for which, as also for his former sermons, he was the same year, June 14, censur'd in parliament to be imprisoned, fined 1000*l.* to make submission, and to be disinabled to have or enjoy any preferment or office.² At that time John Pym, a busy man in the house of commons, brought into the house a charge against him, that 'he endeavoured to destroy the king and kingdom by his divinity,' &c. On the 21st of the said month he made his submission, and in the next month following he was presented by the king to the rich rectory of Stanford Rivers in Essex (void by the promotion of Dr. Richard Mountague to the see of Chichester) with license to hold it and his other living with it. On the 9th of Jan. following he procured his pardon, which in the next month made some stir in the session of parliament that then was. In the month of May 1633 he was made dean of Worcester, in the place of Dr. Will. Juxon promoted to the see of Hereford, where he made some alterations for the better in that church; and in Dec. 1635 he was nominated bishop of St. David's, on the translation of Dr. Theoph. Field to Hereford. On the 28th of February following he was consecrated thereunto by Dr. Laud archb. of Canterbury and his assistants in the chap. at Lambeth,³ where he sate till his function was silenc'd. On the 22d of Feb. 1640 were several complaints made against him in the long parliament, but not for the present prosecuted, because the members thereof were employ'd on greater matters. Afterwards the rebellion breaking out, he was imprison'd,⁴ violently persecuted from place to place, lost all his spiritualities, and had only some small temporal estate left to maintain him and his family.⁵ He was a person that had some curiosity in learning, but greater zeal for the church of England: he was of a pious life and conversation, charitable, and tho' (with Sibthorpe) accounted a sycophant by the puritans, yet by the royalists he was esteemed worthy of the function of a bishop. He finished his course at Caermarthen, after he had endured many miseries, on the first day of July in sixteen hundred fifty and three, and was buried in the collegiat church of Brecknock near to the high altar, leaving then behind him some things fit for the press, as I have been informed by one of his near relations. It is said that he was much resolved on three things, 1. The redemption of captives. 2. The conversion of recusants. 3. The undeceiving of seduced sectaries, and that he kept three diaries, one for the transactions of his own life, another for the public affairs of the church and kingdom, and a third for the remarkable passages of providence that hapned in the world. Mr. Fulman, who married this bishop's granddaughter, used to report a remarkable story concerning a loving dog which he kept several years before he died, that after his lord and master was dead sought for him in all the walks that he used to frequent, at length finding the church door open, went to his grave, not covered, and there he remain'd till he languished to death. The see of St. David continuing void till after the restoration of king Charles II. it was then supplied by Dr. Will. Lucy, as I shall tell you under the year 1677.

THOMAS WINNIFF, a grave, learned and moderate divine, was born, as 'tis said, at Shirebourne in Dorsetshire, admitted a batler or sojourner of Exeter coll. in Lent term, an. 1593, aged 18 years, elected prob. fellow thereof, 30 June 1595, admitted master of arts in 1601, and about that time entring into holy orders, he became a noted preacher and a tutor. In 1609 he left the college, because he had an ecclesiastical benefice confer'd on him, but the name of it I know not, unless Lambourne in Essex, which he enjoyed many years, and at length bought the advowson thereof of Rob. Taverner gent. which he afterwards by his will gave to his nephew Peter Mews. About that time he was chaplain to prince Henry, and afterwards to prince Charles, which last he much displeased in two matters, first that in a certain harangue, which he occasionally delivered in the beginning of Apr. 1622, he compared ⁷ Frederick king of Bohemia to a lamb, and count Spinola to a bloody wolf, which also displeased the king; and secondly that in some little particulars, he expressed himself an enemy to his marriage with the infanta of Spain. For these matters he had like to have lost his spiritualities, had not his majesty king James I. highly valued him for his learning. In 1624, Nov. 10, he was installed dean of Gloucester, in the place of Dr. Rich. Senhouse promoted to the see of Carlisle, and after the said king's death being made chaplain to his successor king Charles I. had the deanery of St. Paul's cathedral confer'd on him, an. 1631. Afterwards upon the translation of Dr. Williams to York in 1641, he was nominated by the king bishop of Lincoln, purposely to please the puritan, and was soon after consecrated. But the rebellion breaking out the next year, occasion'd by a prevalent party in both houses of parliament, who silenced the bishops, and caused their lands to be sold, this holy bishop received little or no profit from the lands belonging to his see, only trouble and vexation as a bishop. Afterwards he retired to Lambourne, spent there for the most part the remainder of his days, and justly obtained this character from a ⁸ learned bishop, that 'none was more mild, modest and humble, yet learned, eloquent and honest, than bishop Winniff.' He died, in the summer time in sixteen hundred fifty and four, and was buried in the church at Lambourne. Soon after was erected a comely monument over his grave, on which 'tis said, that he was made bishop of Lincoln in 1642, Ex eorum numero episcoporum, quibus incumbabat nutantis episcopatus molem, pietatis ac probitatis suæ fulcimine sustentare, &c.

RICHARD SMITH, sometime a student in Trinity college, was made bishop of Chalcedon by pope Urban VIII, an. 1624, or thereabouts, and died in the latter end of the year sixteen hundred fifty and four, under which year you may see more of him among the writers, vol. iii. col. 384.

HENRY TILSON, a Yorkshire man born, was entred a student in Baliol coll. in the beginning of the year 1593, took one degree in arts as a member of that house four years after, and soon after was elected one of Skyrilawe's fellows of the said college of University, and took a degree of master as a member of that house. In October 1615 he was made vicar of Rachdale in Yorkshire,⁹ by the death of R. Kenion, and afterwards being made known to that most generous count Thomas earl of Strafford, he became his chaplain, went with him in that quality to Ireland, when that count was made lord lieutenant thereof. Soon after he was by him made dean of the cathedral of the Holy Trinity, commonly called Christ-church, in Dublin, where continuing in good esteem for his learning and piety, had the see of Elphine confer'd on him, to which being consecrated on the 23d of Sept. 1639, endured soon after great misery by the rebellion that broke out in Ireland 1641. Afterwards he retired to his native country, settled at Southill-hall in Yorkshire, spent there the chief part of his time, and dying¹ in peace the 31st of March in sixteen hundred fifty and five, aged 80 years, or thereabouts, was buried in the chancel of the neighbouring church of Dewsbury. In the said see of Elphine succeeded John Parker, D. D. in the latter end of the year 1660.

NICHOLAS MONKE, or LE MOYNE, third son of sir Tho. Monke of Potheridge in Devonshire, kn. son of Tho. Monke of the said place, gent. by Frances his wife (widow of John Basset of Umberley in the said county, esq;) daughter of Arthur Plantagenet, natural son of king Edward IV. by Elizabeth Lucy, as is suppos'd, his concubine, was born in Devonshire, either at Potheridge, or at Marton; at the last of which places his father lived when this Nich. Monke came first to Wadham coll. anno 1626, aged 17 years or thereabouts. After he had spent several years in that house in the condition of a commoner, he proceeded in arts in 1634, entred into holy orders, was benefic'd in his own country, and suffered in the time of the rebellion, as other loyalists did. Afterwards he was permitted to keep some little cure, by the endeavours of his brother George, while he was chief commander under Oliver Cromwell in Scotland, was persecuted, as 'tis said, by the triers appointed by Oliver, but at length had the rectory of Kilhampton in Cornwall, worth 300*l.* per ann. bestowed on him by his kinsman sir John Greenville (afterwards earl of Bath) which he freely gave him without simony, purposely to oblige him to serve the public whenever he had occasion to make use of him, he having then an eye upon his brother George in Scotland, whom his family had obliged likewise. I say, that this good benefice being bestowed on him, he was, by his brother's interest, fix'd therein, and ready to perform what lay in his power to serve the interest of the royal family. In 1659 he agitated with his said brother by letters to, and soon after in person in, Scotland, in order to influence him for the restoration of king Charles II. to his kingdoms, being put upon it chiefly by the said sir Jo. Greenville, and some of the gentry in the west, who were of kin to [1144] Monke: So happy it was for his majesty to employ the said sir John, and so lucky for him to send his clerk Mr. Monke thither, where he omitted nothing of his instructions, but prudently managed them, as may reasonably be inferred from the good effect they had. Thus did the sense of allegiance and the love of his country, prevail with his brother against all hazards: and, if I should speak right, 'the revenge of slights was some part² of grain in the scales.' In the year following (1660) his endeavours and desires being effected, he was, by the interest of the said sir John, (mind'd thereunto by gen. Monke) made prov. of Eaton coll. in the month of June, then, or lately, enjoyed by N. Lockyer, sometime chapl. to Ol. Cromwell, lately protector. In the beginning of Aug. following he was actually created doct. of div. by virtue of the king's letters sent to the university for that purpose, and soon after being nominated by his majesty to the see of Hereford, which had lain void for 14 years by the death of George Cook, he was consecrated thereunto on the sixth³ day of January (Epiphany day) in the abbey church of St. Peter at Westminster, by the archbishop of York, bishops of Durham, Chichester, Lincoln, and Peterborough: but before he had enjoyed that see a full year, he concluded his last day in his lodgings in the Old-palace-yard in Westminster, on the seventeenth of December in sixteen hundred sixty and one; whereupon his body was buried⁴ on the twentieth of the said month, in St. Edmund's chapel within the precincts of the said church of St. Peter. In the see of Hereford succeeded Dr. Herbert Croft, of whom may future mention be made, and of his works, as to learning.

[Monk was ejected from the rectory of Plymtree in Devonshire,⁵ a preferment not noticed by Wood.

Lord Clarendon says⁶ of him, that through all the ill times he carried himself with singular integrity, and was in great reputation with all those who constantly adhered to the king.

Bishop Monk married Susannah daughter of Thomas Paine of Plimtree in Devonshire, by whom he left at the time of his decease two daughters: Mary the elder daughter and coheir, was married to Arthur Fairwell of Westminster, esq. (son and heir to Arthur Fairwell of the same place, younger brother of sir George Fairwell of Hill-Bishops in the said county, knight,) by whom he had issue Arthur Fairwell his eldest son, living anno 1677. Elizabeth Monk, second daughter and coheir to Nicholas bishop of Hereford, became the wife of Curwen Rawlinson of Carke-hall in Cartmell in Lancashire, esq. (who died in August 1689, being then burgess for Lancaster, in the convention parliament, and was buried in the chancel of the great church of St. Mary's in Warwick) by whom she had issue only two sons: viz. Monk Rawlinson eldest son, who died at Carke-hall aforesaid, unmarried, in the month of October 1695, aged twenty one years; and Christopher Rawlinson second son, now living, born at New-hall in Essex June 11, 1677; Christopher late duke of Albemarle and his dutchess being godfather and godmother. The foresaid Elizabeth died at Carke-hall October 23, 1692, and was buried in the burial-place of the Rawlinsons, in the church of St. Mary's at Cartmell, to whose pious memory her son Christopher hath erected a noble monument, whereon she is described to be daughter and coheir of the loyal Dr. Nicholas Monk lord bishop of Hereford, a great assistant, in the restoration, to his brother the most noble George Monk duke of Albemarle. She was a most dutiful daughter of the church of England, as well as of a prelate of it, being a sublime pattern of a holy piety, a true BRIAN DUPPA, sometime fellow of All-souls coll. afterwards dean of Christ Church, was consecrated bishop of Chichester, an. 1638, translated to Salisbury in 1641, and thence to Winchester in 1660. He concluded his last day in sixteen hundred sixty and two, under which year you may see more of him among the writers, vol. iii. col. 541. He was so bountiful in his legacies to Christ Church, that the money might serve to found a new, and not to compleat an old, college. He left legacies to Alls. coll. to the cath. churches of Chichester, Salisbury and Winchester, and erected an hospital at his own charge in the place of his nativity, as I have elsewhere told you: over the door of which may this be engraven, 'That a poor bishop vowed this house, but a great and wealthy one built it.' In the see of Winchester succeeded Dr. George Morley, of whom I have made large mention among the writers, under the year 1684, vol. iv. col. 149.

WILLIAM JUXON, son of Richard Juxon of Chichester, son of John Juxon of London,¹ was born, as 'tis said, within the city of Chichester² in Sussex, educated in Merchant Taylors school, became fellow of S. Soon after he took holy orders, and in the latter end of the year 1609 was made vicar of the church of St. Giles's, in the north suburb of Oxon; where, continuing about six years, he was much frequented for his edifying way of preaching. In 1621 he was elected president of his college, and in the next year he proceeded in the civil law. In 1626, and after, he did execute the office of vicechancellor of this university, and in Jan. 1627, being then one of his majesty's chaplains in ordinary, he was made dean of Worcester, in the place of Dr. Jos. Hall promoted to the see of Exeter. On the 10th of July 1632 he was, at Dr. Laud's suit, (then bishop of London) sworn clerk of his majesty's closet; which office was by that great person procured for him, to the end³ that 'he might have one that he might trust near his majesty, if he grew weak or infirm.' In the beginning of the year 1633 he was elected bishop of Hereford, in the place of Dr. Franc. Godwin deceased, was about that time made dean of the king's chapel, and on the translation of Dr. Laud to the see of Cant. tion. About that time he was called to be one of his majesty's privy-council, who, finding him to be a person of uprightness and justice, did confer upon him the great office of lord-treasurer, on Sunday the sixth of March 1635. Which office no churchman had since Henry the VIIth's time, as Dr. Laud⁴ observes, who adds this, 'I pray God bless him to carry it so, that the church may have honour, and the king and the state service and contentment by it. And now if the church will not hold up themselves under God, I can do no more.' In this office, which he enjoyed till 1641, he kept the king's purse when necessities were deepest, and clamours loudest, to the great content of all that had to do with him.⁵ In the time of the rebellion, began and carried on by the restless presbyterians, he suffer'd as other bishops did, was outed of the house of lords with his brethren, and lost the lands belonging to his bishoprick, as the rest did. In 1648 he had the honour and happiness, if it may be so called, to attend king Charles I. of blessed memory, in his most disconsolate condition, and to administer comfort, ghostly counsel, and the sacrament to him, and to be also present with him on the scaffold, when he was beheaded before his own door by his most rebellious subjects, to the great horror and amazement of all the world. Afterwards this holy bishop retired to his manor of Little Compton in Gloucestershire, near to Chipping Norton in Oxfordshire, where he spent several years in a retired and devout condition, and now and then, for health's sake, rode a hunting with some of the neighbouring and loyal gentry. After the restoration of king Charles II. he was translated to the see of Canterbury, on Thursday the 20th of Sept. 1660, to the rejoycing of all those that then loved order in the church. The solemnization was in the chapel of king Henry VII. at Westminster; where, besides a great confluence of orthodox clergy, many persons of honour, and gentry, gave God thanks for the mercies of that day, as being touched at the sight of that good man, whom they esteemed a person of primitive sanctity, of great wisdom, piety, learning, patience, charity, and all apostolical virtues. He died in his palace at Lambeth, on the fourth day of June sixteen hundred sixty and three, aged 81 years: whereupon his body being embalmed, was conveyed to Oxon in great pomp, on the 7th of July following, where, lying in state the next day, and part of the ninth, in the divinity school, accompanied always by some of the heralds of arms, was then (after an eloquent speech had been openly spoken by the university orator in the convocation house⁶ adjoining, in praise of the defunct, and dispraise of the presbyterians and independents) conveyed in great state on mens shoulders (the heralds and all the degrees of the university attending) through Catstreet, and so up the High-street to Quatervois, and thence, through the North-gate, to St. John's coll. After it was placed in the chapel there, an anthem sung, a speech delivered near the grave by Mr. Will. Levinz, and the usual service for burial performed by Dr. R. Baylie, the president of that college, the body was solemnly interr'd at the upper end thereof before the altar, in a grave wall'd with bricks, adjoining on the south side to that then made, to receive the body of his predecessor Dr. William Laud, which, in a few days after, was there reburied.⁷ As for the benefactions of this worthy arch-bishop Dr. Juxon (besides that to St. Paul's cathedral, to the archbishop's palace at Lambeth, "where he rebuilt the "great hall, and repaired the whole house," &c.) is mention made⁸ elsewhere; and as for his estate, that which remained when all his benefactions were disposed, went to his brother's son, sir William Juxon, bart. now living at Little Compton before mention'd.⁹ This Dr. Juxon hath only extant one sermon, on Luke 18. 31. HENRY HALL, son of Thomas Hall, sometime a member of Ch. Ch. in Oxon (afterwards a minister in the city of Wells, whence he was prefer'd by the dean and canons of Christ Ch. to the vicaridge of Marcham near to Abingdon in Berks) was born in Somersetshire, particularly, as I conceive, in the said city of Wells, became a batler of Linc. college, anno 1630, aged 16 years or thereabouts, and took the degrees in arts. In the beginning of the rebellion he became chaplain to James marquess of Ormond in Ireland, by whose favour he was made prebendary of Christ Church in Dublin, and dean of a certain church in the said kingdom. After the ill success and declension of the marquess there, he return'd into England, lived for a time at Badmington in Gloucestershire with the marquess of Worcester, and in 1654 had the vicaridge of Harwell in Berks conferr'd on him by John Loder of Hinton in the said county, gentleman: where continuing till his majesty's restoration, he returned to Ireland, was actually created doctor of div. at Dublin, and on the 27th of January 1660 he was² consecrated bishop of Killaloe and Achonry in the church of St. Patrick, near to the said city of Dublin. He gave way to fate on the 23d of July in sixteen hundred sixty and three, in the bishop's house at Killala, which he in a manner had rebuilt from the ground, and was buried in the cathedral church there; whereupon Thomas Bayly, D. D. succeeded him in his sees. About that time he entred into the sacred function, and became a frequent preacher, as being puritannically inclin'd. In 1622 he attended in the court of prince Charles, while he was in Spain court- ing the infanta, and in 1625 he was made chaplain in ordinary to the said prince, then king.⁵ In 1626 he was elected president of his coll. and in the next year proceeded in divinity. In 1628 and 29 he executed the office of vicechancellor of this university, and on the 13th of Sept. 1631, being then, or about that time, prebendary of Canterbury, was installed dean of Gloucester, upon the removal of Dr. George Warburton thence to the deanery of Wells. In 1638 and 39 he, upon the solicitations of Dr. Laud, archb. of Cant. and chancellor of this univ. (whose creature then he was) did undergo the said office of vicechancellor again, and on the 17th of August 1643 he was nominated by his majesty to succeed Dr. Wright in the see of Litchfield and Coventry: but so it was, that the times being then very troublesome, he was not consecrated till the next year, that is to say, on a Sunday in the month of April following; at which time the solemnity was performed in the chapel of Magd. coll. by the archbishop of York, bishops of Worcester, Oxford, Salisbury, and Peterborough. But this preferment being then but little better than titular, because that the hierarehy was about that time silenc'd, he retired to London, and lived there, and partly elsewhere, among his relations for several years. At length after the restoration of king Charles II. he was elected to the see of York on the 22d of Sept. translated on the 4th of Octob. and enthronized in the person of Tob. Wickham, preb. of that church on the 11th of the same month, an. 1660. At that time the see of Litchfield being not supplied by another for about the space of an year, in expectation that Mr. Rich. Baxter would take it (for the king intended it for him conditionally he would conform) Dr. Frewen had the benefit of that too, all the fines for renewing, and for the filling up lives, to his very great profit, besides what he got from York. At length Mr. Baxter, the Coryphæus of the presbyterian party, refusing it,⁶ least he, in an high manner, should displease the brethren, it was offer'd to Dr. Richard Baylie, president of St. John's college, and dean of Sarum, who had been a very great sufferer for the king's cause; but he refusing it, because Dr. Frewen had skim'd it, it was therefore confer'd on Dr. John Hacket of Cambridge, as I shall anon tell you. This Dr. Frewen, who was accounted a general scholar, and a good orator, but hath nothing extant, only a Latin oration, with cer-

His father was Andrew Hacket of Putferin in Scotland; a senior burgess of the city of Westminster, and afterwards of the robes to prince Henry, who, being a zealous protestant, took great care to breed up this his only son to that religion. When he was very young therefore, he put him to the college school at Westminster, and his master Mr. Ireland finding in him a great propensity to learning, was very kind to him, as also was Dr. Lanc. Andrews the dean of the church there, who, in the necessary absence of the master, being accustomed to come into the school, and examine the boys, took this youth into his particular favour, and continued it to him as long as the bishop lived. Being made ripe for the university, he was in the year 1608 (with the pious Mr. George Herbert) elected to go to Trinity coll. in Camb. by the favour of Dr. Tho. Nevill master of that coll. (who told his father, when he addressed to him about his son, that he should go to Cambridge, or else he would carry him upon his back) and being there entred, he was put under the tuition of Dr. Edw. Simson, author of Chronicon ab Exordio Mundi, &c. Soon after he was so much noted for his painful studies, sober life, and great proficiency in learning, that he was elected fellow of that house as soon as he was, by the rules thereof, fit for the same. Afterwards he grew into that credit, that he had many pupils put to his charge, and those of the best families in England, and then betaking himself to the study of divinity, he took holy orders in 1618, from the hands of Dr. John King bishop of London, who had a great affection for him, and expressed the same on divers occasions; but above all others Dr. John Williams bishop of Linc. observing his great learning, and knowledge in the tongues, chose him his chaplain immediately after the great seal was committed to his charge, an. 1621. Two years he spent in that bishop's service before his time was come to commence bach. of div. and then beg'd leave to go to Cambridge to keep the act, an. 1623, which he performed according to expectation; and then returning to court to his master, he prefer'd him to be chaplain to king James I. before whom he preaching several times to that learned prince's good liking, he was the next year, by the recommendations of his master, presented to the church of St. Andrew in Holbourn near London, (then within his majesty's disposal by reason of the minority of Thomas earl of Southampton) and suddenly after he was, by the same means, made parson of Cheame in Surrey, fallen likewise in his majesty's gift, by the promotion of Dr. Rich. Senhouse to the bishoprick of Carlisle: which two livings he held till the most execrable rebellion broke out in 1642, and was constantly resident upon one of them. In 1628 he commenced doct. of div. at Cambridge, where he preached a sermon highly applauded by the learned auditory of that time: and returning to Holbourn and his duty there, he became very famous for excellent preaching, and decent order in his charge. In 1631 his old master the bishop of Lincoln gave him the archdeaconry of Bedford, void by the death or resignation of Nich. Walker, D. D. who had succeeded therein one George Eland, an. 1629. To which charge he usually went once in a year (commonly after Easter) and exhorted the clergy thereof to keep strictly the orders of the church. Afterwards finding his church of St. Andrew in Holbourn much in decay, he eagerly solicited his great friends and acquaintance to contribute to its re-edification, or at least repair, and about the year 1639 he had obtained divers thousands of pounds for that purpose; but the unparallel'd rebellion following soon after, the members of the long parliament (mostly a prevalent party of presbyterians) did seize on that, and all the money collected for the repair of St. Paul's cathedral in London, to carry on their rebellion against their king. In the beginning of the civil war, he was named one of the committee, with divers eminent bishops and pastors, to consider of what was amiss in the English liturgy and church-government, and to rectify the same, in hopes by that means to expel the cloud then appearing over the church; but the lords and commons dash'd that good intent, by passing a bill for taking away the government of the church by bishops: yet before the passing thereof, the clergy being allowed liberty to speak for themselves, they all with one consent made the said Dr. Hacket their mouth to speak their sense of the matter; which being the next day perform'd with general applause of all, except those that nothing could please, it did for the present put a stop to that bill; yet soon after by a new question it past, without a second hearing of the learned doctor. Afterwards, being silenced by them at St. Andrew's in Holbourn, he retired to Cheame, where he also used the liturgy till forbidden by the parliament. Afterwards he suffered by imprisonment by the army under Robert earl of Essex, when they went to fight against their king, and being released, he retired to Cheame, which he kept during the times of usurpation. After his majesty's restoration, the bishoprick of Gloucester was offer'd to him, but he refusing it, the then lord-chancellor made advantage of it,¹ and caused it to be conferr'd on Dr. Nicholson. Afterwards being made bishop of Litchfield and Coventry, as I have before told you, as also in the FASTI, an. 1616, he repaired to Litchfield in the spring time, anno 1662, and finding the cathedral there quite ruined in the time of the most wicked rebellion, he set himself to the rebuilding thereof, and finished the same in about eight years time, making it far more beautiful than it was before, with the expence of 20,000*l.* a thousand of which he had of the chapter, and the rest was of his charge, and of his procuring from benefactors. On Christmas eve in 1669 the said cathedral was dedicated by him with the usual ceremonies required in such a matter, and in feasting three several parties of men for three days. He also laid out 1000*l.* in repairing the house of his residence there, that of his predecessors having been destroyed in the time of the said rebellion, and did much endeavour to settle a pious and laborious clergy in his diocese, by his own example of constant preaching. This worthy bishop died on the 28th of October 1670, and was buried in his own cathedral,² where is a very noble and conspicuous monument over his grave, erected by his son sir Andrew Hacket of

At Lichfield, before the wars, had been a most beautiful and comely cathedral church, which the bishop at his first coming found most desolate, and ruin'd almost to the ground, the roof of stone, the timber, lead and iron, glass, stalls, organs, utensils of rich value, all were embezzell'd. Two thousand shot of great ordnance, and fifteen hundred grana-does discharg'd against it, which had quite batter'd down the spire, and most of the fabrick, so that the old man took not so much comfort in his new promotion, as he found sorrow and pity in himself to see his cathedral church thus lying in the dust. So that the next morning after his lordship's arrival, he set his own coach-horses on work, together with other teams, to carry away the rubbish, which being cleared, he procured artisans of all sorts to begin the new pile, and before his death set up a compleat church again better than ever it was before: the whole roof from one end to the other, of a vast length, all repaired with stone, all laid with goodly timber of our royal sovereign's gift, all leaded from one end to the other, to the cost of above twenty thousand pounds, which yet this zealous and laborious bishop accomplished a great part out of his own bounty, with one thousand pounds help of the dean and chapter, and the rest procured by him from worthy benefactors, by incessant importunity: the gentry of Staffordshire, Warwickshire, Derbyshire contributing like gentlemen; whose names are entered into the registry of the cathedral. Drake, Gent. in his late Treatise on the Antiquities of that Cathedral and City: In a Letter addressed to Edw. Butler LL.D. President of Magdalen College, Oxford.* Lond. 1743, 8vo. Mr. Drake has not enlarged upon this bishop's character; what is by him said, he took chiefly from Wood: and truly if the author, a relation of the bishop, had nothing more material to say, than what is produced in the above Vindication, he had much better let his relation's bones have rested in quiet, than in scrutinizing too nicely into a part of his character, which can never be justified. It is confessed that he died worth near 30,000 pounds, all which was after lent to king Charles II. and lost to the family; so that his legacy of 1000 to his college is not to be included in that great sum. If we compare this benefaction with that of his noble-spirited successor at Lichfield, who had a family, whereas this was a bachelor, and had not only the renewal of the leases of the two sees of York and Lichfield during the whole time of the usurpation, we can't but own the difference so great, that the loss to king Charles may seem a sort of justice to one who had enjoyed the advantage of so great profits from that prince, and from the church; and yet had no heart to remember the forlorn condition of the last, which, at the time of his death, must, from the late horrible and sacrilegious confusions, have wanted it sufficiently. Bishop Burnet censures the bishops at the restoration for doing so little good with their great fines: we see they were bishops of his own kidney that acted thus. COLE.

WILLIAM PAUL, a person of good parts, and well vers'd in ecclesiastical and civil laws, was born in East-cheap within the city of London, became a student in this university anno 1614, aged 15 years or thereabouts, and soon after one of the clerks of All-souls college. About All-saints time in 1618 he was elected fellow of the said house, and after he had proceeded in arts, he took holy orders, and preached frequently in these parts. In 1632, being then rector of Brightwell, alias Baldwin Brightwell, near Watlington in Oxfordshire, he proceeded in divinity, answered the divinity act with general satisfaction, was about that time made one of the chaplains to his majesty king Charles I. and afterwards residentiary of Chichester. Higgs, who died the year before. Afterwards being esteemed wealthy, and knowing in secular affairs, he was, by the endeavours of Dr. Sheldon archbishop of Canterbury, (sometime his fellow collegiate) promoted to the see of Oxford, upon the translation of Skinner to Worcester, in hopes that he would rebuild the bishop's palace at Cudesden: and having in part promised so to do, he had liberty allow'd him to keep the rectory of Brightwell before-mention'd, and the rich rectory of Chinnor in Oxfordshire (which he some years before had obtained) in commendam, with his bishoprick. Soon after being consecrated, but the day when, I know not, and installed or enthronized on the 7th of January 1663, he bought and laid in at Cudesden a considerable quantity of timber, but before any thing else could be done in the matter, he died;⁵ which hapning at Chinnor on the 24th of May in sixteen hundred sixty and five, his body was conveyed to Brightwell before-mention'd, and buried in the chancel of the church there. In the month of May 1637 he was made subdean of Salisbury on the death of Giles Thornborough, on the 5th of Jan. 1638 he was collated to the prebendship of South Grantham in the said church, upon the resignation of Dr. Humph. Henchman, he being then possesst of a benefice elsewhere. What were his sufferings in the time of the rebellion, if any, or his merits afterwards, to be advanced to a bishoprick, let others speak, while I tell you that after his majesty's restoration he was, by the endeavours of his kinsman, sir Edw. Hyde lord chanc. of England, not only made dean of Winchester, an. 1660, in the place of Dr. Joh. Yonge some years before dead, (who had succeeded in that deanery Dr. Thomas Morton, an. 1616) but also advanced upon the death of Dr. Joh. Earle to the see of Salisbury: to which receiving consecration in New coll. chappel, 31 Dec. 1665, (the king and queen with their courts being then in Oxon) from the hands of the archb. of Cant. assisted by the bishops of Winchester, Gloc. Peterb. Limerick, and Oxon, enjoyed it but a little while to his detriment. In his deanery succeeded Will. Clark D. D. of Cambridge,¹ who dying in the parish of S. Giles's in the Fields near London, Rich. Meggot D. D. of Qu. coll. in Cambridge,² canon of Windsor, rector of S. Olave's in Southwark and vicar of Twittenham in Middlesex, was installed in his place, 9 Oct. 1679. As for Dr. Hyde, he died to the great grief of his relations, on the 22d day of August in sixteen hundred sixty and seven, aged 70 years, and was buried in the south isle near the choir of the cath. church of Salisbury. Afterwards was a black marble stone laid over his grave, with an inscription thereon, the beginning of which is this. Siste viator, hac itur in patriam, hisce vestigiis in cœlum, &c. flight from Worcester battle, an. 1651, when then he removed incognito from place to place till he could obtain a passage over sea into France. The next was sir Rob. Hyde, who, by the endeavours of his kinsman sir Edw. before-mention'd, was made lord chief justice of the common pleas. He died suddenly on the kalends of May 1665, aged 70, and was buried in the said isle. Soon after was erected on the wall, near his grave, a splendid monument with his bust in white marble, and a large inscription thereon beginning thus. H. S. E. ordini par paterno, fraternoque Robertus Hyde Eq. Aur. Laurentii Hyde militis filius secundus, &c. Another brother he had called sir Hen. Hyde, who adhering to his majesty king Charles II. in his exile, was by him sent ambassador to the grand seignior at Constantinople, and demanding audience in his name, he was (by bribes given) delivered to some of the English merchants there, who shipping him in the Smyrna fleet, he was conveyed into England. Soon after being committed to the tower of London, he was brought before the high court of justice, where he desired to plead in the Italian language, which, he said, was more common to him than the English. But it being denied him, he was at length condemned to die: whereupon he lost his head on a scaffold erected against the Old-exchange in Cornhill, on the fourth day of March, an. 1650.³ It was then said by the faction in England, that he did, by virtue of a commission from Charles Stuart as king of Great Britain, act in the quality of an agent to the court of the Great Turk, with intent to destroy the trade of the Turkey company, and the parliament's interest, not only in Constantinople, but also in Mitylene, Anatolia and Smyrna. That also he had a commission to be consul in that matter, with an aim likewise to seize upon the merchant's goods for the use of Charles king of Scots: For the effecting of which design, he presumed to discharge sir Tho. Bendish of his embassy, being leiger there for the state of England, &c. The said faction also reported, and would needs persuade the people in England, that those that abetted sir H. Hyde at Smyrna had the heavy hand of judgment fell upon them. This sir Hen. Hyde after his decollation, was convey'd to Salisbury and buried there in the cathedral among the graves of his relations. Another brother, younger than him, was Edward Hyde, D. D. sometime fellow of Trin. coll. in Cambridge,⁴ and afterwards rector of Brightwell near Wallingford in Berkshire: from which being ejected in the time of usurpation, he retired with his wife and children to Oxon, and hiring an apartment within the precincts of Hart hall, lived there several years, studied frequently in Bodley's library, and preached in the church of Halywell in the suburbs of Oxon to the royal party, till he was silenc'd by the faction. In 1658 he obtained of his exil'd majesty, by the endeavours of sir Edw. Hyde before-mention'd his kinsman, (then, tho' in banishment, lord chancellor of England) letters patents for the deanery of Windsor (in the place of Dr. Chr. Wren deceased) dated in July the same year; but dying at Salisbury of the stone, a little before the restoration of king Charles II. he was never installed in that dignity. He hath written and published several books which were taken into the hands of, and perused by, the royal party, as (1) A Christian Legacy, consisting of two Parts: Preparation for and Consolation against Death. Lond. 1657. oct. (2) Christ and his Church: or, Christianity explained, under seven Evangelical and Ecclesiastical Heads. Oxon. 1658. qu. (3) Vindication of the Church of England. Oxon. 1658. qu. (4) Christian Vindication of Truth against Error. Printed 1659 in tw. (5) The true Catholic Tenure, &c. Cambr. 1662. oct. and other things, as you may see in Joh. Lee among these writers, an. 1662. Another brother, the tenth in number, was sir Frederick Hyde knight, the queen's serjeant, an. 1670, and one of the chief justices of South Wales, who died in 1676. Also another called Francis, who was secretary to the earl of Denbigh ambassador, and died at Venice without issue. And among others must not be forgotten Dr. Thomas Hyde fellow of New coll.⁵ afterwards judge of the admiralty, and also the eleventh and youngest brother of them all, named James Hyde doctor of physick, lately principal⁷ of Magd. hall.

HUGH LLOYD was born in the county of Cardigan, became a servitor or poor scholar of Oriell coll. an. 1607 or thereabouts, took the degrees in arts, translated himself to Jesus coll. of which I think he became fellow, and in 1638 he proceeded in divinity, being about that time archdeacon of S. David's and well beneficed in his own country. In the times of usurpation and rebellion he suffered much for the king's cause, was ejected and forced to remove from place to place for his own security: In consideration of which and his episcopal qualities, he was consecrated to the see of Landaff, on the second day of Decemb. (being the first Sunday of the month) an. 1660, by the archb. of York, bishops of London, Rochester, Salisbury and Worcester: at which time six other bishops were also consecrated. He died in June or July, in sixteen hundred sixty and seven, and was, as I suppose,

'My deare brethren,

'Most of you haue either subscribed, or at least consented to the good worke of the free schooles proposed unto you; this is only to quicken you to bee as liberall therein as your severall conditions will permitt. You know wee live in an age in w^{ch} too many (that would gratifie their carnall or worldly lusts) have in derision what retrencheth either, though on never so good an account, as if earth the worst part of the world, or the body the worst part of man, wert only to be tendered here. I presume you are so farre from taking such an example, that you will give a better, that they who too little heed what wee say, may bee reduced (at least) by what wee doe, when they finde wee our selves take no other way for heaven, then what wee would endear unto them; and that wee proceede in that course, they ever pretend a readiness to follow, so the cleargye lead the way. This county hath eminently contributed to the primitive Christianity of all Wales, its strange wee should now come short of all parts of Wales in the maine acts of it, for of all counties therein, Glamorgan is (notwithstanding the present conditions and estates both of the laytie and cleargie thereof) most unfurnisht of meanes either to propagate to others, yea, or to continue to itself religion and learning. Of old, Christian schooles began here, and (to our great shame) it was not, before the dissolution, so utterly destitute of them, as now it is. Your providing for debts, age, children, cannot bee pleaded in barre of this, for when only a little is put into Christ's multiplying handes, it sanctifieth the rest, and improveth it into a sufficieny and remainder.

'Nor shall our concernes and relations ever mis-carry for want of that Christ receives of us; we are not religious if wee believe not this, and if wee believe it, let us not stagger, but open both our hearts and handes to give chearfully, according to our severall abilities. For mine owne part, I shall vehemently suspect that his religion is not in his heart, but only in his head, who will not bee a very willing contributor to promote this pious intention. I am confident that hee which endeavoures to walke by faith (and every Christian, much more a cleargy man should doe so) will finde no difficulty in this, but if for want of faith, so small a contribution seem impossible to any, well may hee cease to wonder at his neighbour's uncharitableness. Wherefore (as by God's grace) many of you have worthily denied your selves in the royal present to our blessed sovereigne, so doe in this for your most grations God, who in great mercy both gave and restored our sovereigne unto us; that as the poorest bodies are by God's goodnes in the fulnes of a plentiful country competently sustained for this, so their soules by this provision may bee furthened for a better life; and we, brethren, having donne our best herein, may give to this present age, and leave to posterity an example of doing more for God's glory, who should bee most deare unto our soules for what we are, had, have, or hope for. Now the God of peace that brought againe from the dead our Lord Jesus, make you perfect in every good worke, to doe his will, working in you that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ. This is, and ever shall bee, whilst I live, the hearty prayer of your unworthy diocesan and loving brother,

fering more for his loyalty than merits, was upon his majesty's restoration made dean of Bristol, in the place of Dr. Matthew Nicholas⁹ promoted to the deanery of S. Paul's cath. in London; where continuing till 1666, he was, by the endeavours of Barbara dutchess of Cleaveland, made bishop of S. Asaph in the latter end of that year,¹ in the place of Dr. George Griffith deceased. He gave way to fate at Glemham-hall in Suffolk on the seventeenth day of January in sixteen hundred sixty and nine, and was buried in the vault that belongs to the family of Glemham, in the parish church of Little Glemham in the said county. To the said see of S. Asaph, was translated Dr. Is. Barrow bishop of the Isle of Man, on the 21st of March 1669, to the great rejoicing of the true sons of the church in the diocese thereof. After he was settled, he repaired several parts of the cathedral ch. especially the north and south isles, and new covered them with lead, and caused the east part of the choir to be wainscotted. He laid out a considerable sum of money in building and repairs about his palace at S. Asaph, and the mill thereunto belonging. In the year 1678 he built an alms-house for eight poor widows, and did endow it with twelve pounds per an. for ever. The same year he procured an act of parliament for the appropriating of the rectories of Llanrhaidor in Mochnant, in Denbighshire and Montgomeryshire, and of Skeiviog in the county of Flint, for repairs of the cathedral church of S. Asaph² and the better maintenance of the choir there; and also for the uniting several rectories that were sinecures, and the vicaridges of the same parishes, within his said diocese of S. Asaph. He also intended to build a free-school and to endow it, but was prevented by death. Yet since that time, his successor Dr. Will. Lloyd bishop of S. Asaph³ did recover from bishop Barrow's executors 200*l.* towards a free-school at S. Asaph, an. 1687. This most worthy bishop Dr. Barrow⁴ died at Shrewsbury, about noon on the 24th of June (midsummer day) an. 1680, and on the 30th of the said month his corps was lodged in his house called Argoed-hall in Flintshire, and from thence carried on the first of July to his palace at S. Asaph, and the same day to the cathedral church there, where after divine service and a sermon, the said corps was decently inter'd by Dr. Nich. Stratford dean of S. Asaph, on the south side of the west door in the cathedral church yard, which was the place he appointed. Over his grave was soon after laid a large flat stone, and another over that, supported by pedestals. On the last of which is this inscription engraven: Exuvie Isaaci Asaphensis Episcopi, in manum Domini depositæ, in spem lætæ resurrectionis per sola Christi merita. Obiit dictus reverendus Pater festo Divi Johannis Baptistæ, anno Domini 1680 Ætatis 67 & Translationis suæ undecimo. On the lower stone, which is even with the ground, is this inscription following, engraven on a brass plate fastned thereunto, which was made by the bishop himself. Exuvie Isaaci Asaphensis Episcopi, in manum Domini depositæ, in spem lætæ resurrectionis per sola Christi merita. O vos transeuntes in Domum Domini, Domum orationis, orate pro Conservo vestro, ut inveniat misericordiam in die Domini. The said brass plate was fastned at first, as 'tis there reported, over the said west door, but afterwards taken down, and fastned to the lower stone, next the body. But so it was, that as soon as this last epitaph was put up, the contents thereof flew about the nation by the endeavours of the godly faction, (then plump'd up with hopes to carry on their diabolical designs upon account of the popish plot, then in examination and prosecution) to make the world believe that the said bishop died a papist, and that the rest of the bishops were papists also, or at least popishly affected, and especially for this reason, that they adhered to his majesty and took part with him at that time against the said faction, who endeavoured to bring the nation into confusion by their usual trade of lying and slandering, which they have always hitherto done to carry on their ends, such is the religion of the saints.⁵ But so it is, let them say what they will, that the said bishop was a virtuous, generous and godly man, and a true son of the church of England: And it is to be wished that those peer-

WILLIAM PIERS, [or PIERCE] son of William Piers a haberdasher of hats, nephew, or near of kin, to Dr. John Piers sometime archb. of York, and a native of South Hinxsey near Abingdon in Berks, was born in the parish of Allsaints within the city of Oxon, in Aug. and baptized there on the 3d of Sept. an. 1580. In 1596 he was made student of Ch. Church, and taking the degrees in arts, fell to the study of divinity, and was for a time a preacher in and near Oxon. Afterwards being made chaplain to Dr. King bishop of London, he was prefer'd to the rectory of S. Christopher's church near to the Old Exchange in London, and vicaridge of Northall in Middles. In 1614 he proceeded in divinity, being about that time divinity reader in S. Paul's cathedral, and in 1618 was made canon of Ch. Church, and soon after dean of Chester.⁶ In 1621, 22, 23. he did undergo the office of vicchancellor of this university, wherein behaving himself very forward and too officious against such that were then called anti-arminians, he gained the good will of Dr. Laud then a rising star in the court, and so consequently preferment. In 1622 he was made dean of Peterborough in the place of Hen. Beaumont promoted to that of Windsor, and in 1630 had the bishoprick thereof confer'd on him, by the death of Dr. Tho. Dove, to which being elected, he had the temporalities thereof given⁷ to him on the 30th of Oct. and installation on the 14th of Nov. the same year. While he sate there, which was but for a short time, he was esteemed a man of parts, knowing in divinity and the laws, was very vigilant and active for the good both of the ecclesiastical and civil state. In Oct. 1632 he was elected bishop of Bath and Wells, upon the translation of Dr. Curle to Winchester; the temporalities of which see being given⁸ to him on the 20th of December the same year, he continued there, without any other translation, to the time of his death. As for his actions done in his diocese of Bath and Wells before the grand rebellion broke out, which were very offensive to the puritanical party, (who often attested that he brought innovations therein and into his church, suppressed preaching, lectures, and persecuted such who refused to rail in the Lord's table, &c. in his diocese) let one of them named William Prynne a great enemy to the hierarchy⁹ speak, yet the reader may be pleased to suspend his judgment, and not to believe all which that partial, crop-ear'd and stigmatized person saith. When the bishops were silenc'd, and their lands sold by that parliament, called by the faction the blessed parliament, he lived retiredly on a considerable estate of his own, (sometimes at Cudesden near Oxon) and married a second wife, which is well known to all the neighbourhood there; yet the said Mr. Prynne would needs persuade¹⁰ us 'that he was reduced to such extremity, that in November 1655 he went to an honourable knight of his acquaintance in Westminster, and complained to him that he had not bread for him and his to put in their mouths, intreating his favour to procure any lect. or curates place for him tho' never so mean (which he, by all the friends he had, could no where obtain) to keep him from starving. Whereupon the knight minded him of his former speeches and cruelty towards other lecturers and ministers, whom (as he added) he reduced to extream poverty; wishing him to take special notice how God had justly requited him in his own kind, so as himself would now turn lecturer, or the meanest curate under others, in his old age, to get but a meer subsistence, and yet none will entertain him, as himself confessed, in any place. So as the judgment threatned against Ely his posterity, 1 Sam. 2. 36, was then actually fallen on that great prelate,² &c. In 1660 he was restored to his bishoprick, and by the great fines and renewings that then came in, he was rewarded in some degree for his sufferings; but his said second wife, too young and cunning for him, got what she could from the children he had by his first wife, and wheedling him to Walthamstow in Essex got thousands of pounds and his plate from him (as the common report at Wells is) which of right should have gone to his said children. He died at that place in the month of Apr. in sixteen hundred and seventy, and was privately buried in the parochial church there by the care of his said wife. He hath two sermons in print, preached during his restraint in the tower with other bishops that were committed thither by the parliament, an. 1641, both on 2 Cor. 12. 8, 9.—Lond. 1642. qu. He left behind him a son of both his names, actually created D. of D. an. 1661, tho' of lesser merit than sufferings, and another called John Piers, who being a layman, had a lay-prebendship in the church of Wells bestowed on him by his

In a petition of Dr. Bastwick, Mr. Burton and Mr. Prynne to the king's most excell. majesty complaining of the many innovations, they say—William Pierce bishop of Bath and Wells within three years last past hath most unjustly several times one after another excommunicated the churchwardens of the parish of Beckington within the county of Somerset, and diocese of Bath and Wells, for refusing to remove the communion-table in the parish church there, from the place where it antiently stood, decently rayled in with wainscot, to rayle it altar-wise against the last end of the chancel, and likewise threatened to excommunicate the churchwardens of the parish of Batcombe in the said county for not blotting out of their church wall, upon his commande, this sacred scripture thereon written.

Afterwards proceeding in his faculty, he took holy orders, and became a noted tutor in the coll. and some of his pupils proved afterwards men of note, as Will. Chillingworth, Rich. Newdigate a judge, &c. In 1621 he was admitted to the reading of the sentences, and afterwards going to London was unexpectedly chose preacher of S. Gregory's church near S. Paul's cathedral, where preaching twice every Sunday for nine years, obtained love, honour and applause, especially from the puritans. When Dr. Laud became bishop of London, he caused him to be sworn chaplain in ordinary to his majesty, and endeavoured to take him off from the principles that he then professed, was made rector of Launton near Bister in Oxfordshire and minister of Greensnorton.³ In the month of July or thereabouts, an. 1636, he being elected bishop of Bristol, was, as bishop elect of that place, diplomated doctor of div. of this university, on the 13th of August the same year, and having the temporalities thereof given⁴ to him on the 20th of January following, had liberty allowed to him to keep Launton and Greensnorton in commendam with the said see. In the beginning of 1641 he was translated to the see of Oxon, on the death of Dr. Bancroft, and soon after being one of the twelve bishops that subscribed a protestation in behalf of themselves, against the immoderate proceedings of the parl. then sitting, was impeached by the members thereof of high treason, and committed prisoner to the tower of London, where continuing 18 weeks to his great charge, was upon bail, released: whereupon retiring to his rectory of Launton, which he kept also in commendam with Oxon, lived there retiredly, and submitted so much to the men of those times, that he kept the said rectory, when the rest of his spiritualities were lost, meerly, as 'twas supposed, for the bare maintenance of himself and children; in which time, he did usually, as 'tis said, read the common prayer, and confer orders according to the church of Engl. After his majesty's return in 1660, he was restored to his bishoprick, became one of his maj. commissioners of the univ. of Oxford for the visiting and rectifying it, then much out of order, but was not translated to a richer see which he much expected, occasion'd by a great and potent enemy at court,⁵ who maligned him because of his submission in some part to the usurpers. In the month of Octob. 1663 he was translated to the see of Worcester upon the removal of Dr. Earle to that of Sarum, where he became esteemed more by his many tenants, than family or friends, because of his goodness as a landlord. He died in sixteen hundred and seventy, and was buried in a chappel at the east end of the choir of the cath. ch. at Worcester. Over his grave was soon after laid a flat marble stone, with this inscription engraven thereon, H. I. E. Rev. in Ch. Pater ac Dom. Robertus Skinner Coll. S. Trinitatis Oxon. Socius, Carolo primo Britanniarum Monarchæ à sacris, Doctoratum in SS. Theologiâ almæ Matris diplomate oblatum sine ambitu cepit. While he lived in the times of usurpation he was supposed to be the sole bishop⁶ that conferr'd orders, and after his majesty's return an hundred and three persons did at once take holy orders from him in the abbey ch. at Westm. and very many frequently in his respective dioceses where he successively sate: so that at his death, it was computed that he had sent more labourers into the vineyard, than all the brethren he then left behind him had done. THOMAS BAYLY an English man born, was originally of this university, afterwards of Dublin in Ireland, whence flying in the time of the rebellion, he retired to Oxon, and there became one of the petty canons or chapl. of Ch. Ch. as the antients there have informed me, but how long he continued in that place, I cannot tell. After his maj. restoration he became D. of D. and dean of Downe, and upon the death of Dr. H. Hall was made bishop of Killala and Achonry, to which receiving consecration⁷ on the 5th of June 1664, sate there till the time of his death, which hapning in July or thereabouts in sixteen hundred seventy and one, was buried, as I presume, near the body of his predecessor in the cath. ch. of Killala. QU.

[Thomas Bayly (for a time province-chancellor of the university of Dublin⁸) was born in Rutlandshire, educated at Cambridge, but took his degree of D. D. in the univ. of Dublin. He was taken from Cambridge by Dr. Augustine Lindsell, prebendary of Durham, and employed by him as his amanuensis. When Dr. Lindsell was promoted to the sees of Peterborough and Hereford, he took him with him as his chaplain; and set him about transcribing the Greek fathers, which that bishop was preparing for the press; but the bishop dying before the same was completed he left the manuscript with this his chaplain, enjoying him to deliver it to archbishop Laud. The archbishop, knowing his worth, received him with great kindness, bestowed on him the parsonage of Brasted in Kent, worth about 200l. per ann. and required him to take all imaginable care about the edition of the Greek fathers; which he readily undertook. He afterwards, considering his skill in the Greek language, pitched on him as the fittest person in England to be sent to the Levant to collect Greek manuscripts. But the archbishop, falling under his troubles, that design proved abortive. He was sequestered and stripped of all his ecclesiastical preferments; which, with the misfortunes of the archbishop, put a stop to his intention of publishing the fathers: however he contrived to print Theophilact, which he published in folio, Lond. 1636, and dedicated to the archbishop. After his sequestration, he came to London, and taught a private school at Clerkenwell, near that city for a subsistence. But he was found out by some of his malicious enemies in Kent, and thrown into prison for some small debts, which he had contracted, and was unable to pay, by reason of the sequestration. But these being at last discharged by some of his friends, and he set at liberty, he went to Oxford, and was made a chaplain of Ch. Ch. which situation he was deprived of by the visitors during the civil wars. After this, Dr. Jeremy Taylor who valued him for his great learning and integrity, took him to Ireland, where they remained together till the restoration. Dr. Bayly then returned into England, and was immediately promoted to the deanery of Down, to which he was presented by the crown Feb. 13, 1660; he was afterwards advanced to the sees of Killala and Achonry by letters patent dated March 1, 1663 (in which was an exception of that portion of tythes called the 'quarta pars episcopalis,' enjoyed by former bishops of Killala,) and was consecrated in the cathedral of Tuam, on Trinity Sunday 1664, by the bishops of Clonfert and Elphin. When he was going over to Ireland to take possession of his bishopricks, he put his goods and books on board a small vessel, which was lost in a storm, and with it all his library and papers; and what he more especially regretted, the Greek manuscripts of the fathers irrecoverably perished. Bishop Bayly died at Killala, of an apoplexy, July 20, 1670, not 1671, as recorded by Wood. Besides Theophilact's Comments on St. Paul mentioned above, Dr. Bayly wrote A Sermon preach'd in the Quire of Christ Church Oxon, before King Charles the First, in the Time of the Great Rebellion, printed in Gandy's Bibliotheca Scriptorum Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ. Lond. 1709. 8vo. page 316. In this he recommends the revival and execution of ecclesiastical censures against the dissenters, on which subject see a curious anecdote in Gandy's preface, reprinted in Walker's Sufferings of the Clergy, p. 202.]

JOHN LESLEY, was born of the antient family of his name of Balquhaine in the north parts of Scotland, and nearly related to both the count Lesleys, who successively have rendred themselves conspicuous by their arms in Germany, received some academical education in his own country (at Aberdeen as I have heard) and afterwards for some time in Oxon; but whether he took a degree there in arts it appears not. "One Dr. John Lesley a Scot studied in the public library," A. D. 1618, "perhaps the same person." Afterwards he travelled into Spain, Italy and Germany, but most in France, where he perfected his studies, and became remarkable for the most polite and abstruse points of learning. He spoke French, Spanish and Italian equal to the natives, and had such an extraordinary command of the Latin tongue, that it was said of him when he was in Spain, 'solus Lesleius Latine loquitur.' He was from his tender years conversant in courts, where he learned that address and freedom which was peculiar to his education, and gave a particular air even to his preaching. Whence it was said of him, and another bishop of his name, that 'no man preached more gracefully than the one, nor with more authority than the other.' These accomplishments introduc'd him to be treated, even with familiarity, by several princes and great men abroad: and he was particularly happy in the good esteem of his majesty king Charles I. who admitted him to sit at his council table both in Scotland and Ireland, (as his father king James had done for the first) in both which he was continued by king Charles II. His chiefest advancement in the church of Scotland was the episcopal see of the Isles, where sitting several years, not without trouble from the faction, he was translated to the see of Raphoe in Ireland, an. 1633, and the same year was made one of his maj. privy council in that kingdom. When he first came to the said diocese, he found the revenue of the bishoprick much embezel'd, several gentlemen in that country having ingrossed great part of it to themselves, and combin'd together to maintain what they had got: But so it was, that he by his activity, did, tho' a stranger, retrieve from them by an expensive suit at law what they had gotten, and by that means increased the revenue of the said see of Raphoe near a third part. He built a noble and stately palace for his successors the bishops of Raphoe, there being none in that diocese before his access to it. He contriv'd it for strength as well as beauty, which proved of good use in that broken country, for it held out against the Irish, during the whole rebellion of 1641, and preserved great part of that country. When the said rebellion broke out, and the Irish rebels spread over the country, and all men forced to fight for their lives, and particularly those under his protection and in his diocese, yet he would not take upon him any military command, as not becoming his character, tho' in effect he performed the office of a general among them, even to the exposing his person, whenever there was occasion; of which a remarkable instance is told us in the epist. to the reader to the Hist. of the execrable Irish Rebellion, written by Dr. Edw. Borlase, viz. That when sir Ralph Gore at Matchribeg, with many other British inhabitants, were reduced to great extremity by a long siege, and a necessity of a sudden surrender of themselves without hope of quarter, to the enraged cruelty of the Irish; the bishop sallied forth amidst the flames of the whole country, and relieved him, at that time reduced to such streights, as he and they were forced to cast their dishes into ball. I say that after the Laggan forces consisting of three regiments had refused the hazard of a relief, the said bishop with his company, tenants and friends, did attempt and perfect it, evidencing at that instant, as much personal valour as regular conduct, which is at this day remembred in Ireland with much astonishment. After the rebellion, when his majesty's cause (king Charles I.) was there maintained by the royalists and such that had fled into Ireland, after the declension of his cause in England, he raised a foot-company, and maintained them at his own charges, while his affairs had any prospect, for he was loyal, if it was possible, to excess. He endured a siege in his castle of Raphoe before he would surrender it to Oliver, and held out the last in that country. He declared then against the presbyterian, as well as popish, pretences for rebellion, and would neither join in the treason nor schism of those times, but held unalterably to the practice, as well as principles of the church of England; whose liturgy he continued always in his family after he was thrust out of the church. And even in Dublin, he had frequent confirmations and ordinations; for which, tho' he was persecuted by the faction, yet he persisted, and several of the present Irish clergy (of whom the archb. of Tuam is one) were then as confessors admitted into holy orders by him. After his majesty's restoration, he went into England to present himself to him, and flew with that zeal that he rode from Chester to London, which is 150 miles, in 24 hours. In 1661 he was translated to the see of Clogher, upon the translation thence of Dr. Hen. Jones to Meath, (who had succeeded in Clogher Dr. James Spotswood a Scot, buried in S. Benedict's chappel in the abbey church at Westminster, 31 March 1645.) and afterwards his maj. would have promoted him to a see more profitable in requital of his great sufferings, but he excused himself, and was resolved to end his labours among those with whom he had suffer'd, and where his influence was most beneficial. He was a person very temperate, which was the reason that he attained to a great age, and was so great a stranger to covetousness that he hardly understood money, which yet he took care to employ to the best uses. His memory was prodigious in his younger years, not only natural but acquired, for he had studied and wrote of the art of memory and improv'd it to great advantage. He wrote several treatises curious and learned, which were designed to see the light, but were all lost together with his great library of many years collection, and several MSS. which he had brought from foreign countries, partly by the Irish, and partly by the protestant army in the time of king William III. an. 1689, 90. He died in sixteen hundred seventy and one, aged an hundred years and more, being then, as 'twas computed, the antientest bishop in the world, having been above 50 years a bishop. His death hapned at his seat called Castle Lesley alias Glaslogh, and was there buried in a church of his own building, which he had made for that purpose in Ireland: which church was consecrated to S. Salvator. Sir James Ware in his *Commentary of the Irish Bishops*⁹ tells us, that this bishop Lesley was doct. of div. of Oxon, and his son named Charles Lesley a minister in Ireland hath informed me that he was not only doct. of div. but

After his death, which I have mention'd elsewhere, succeeded in the see of Chester Dr. Thom. Cartwright. The said Dr. Joh. Pearson had a younger brother named Richard, born also at Creaque, bred in Eaton school, admitted into King's coll. in 1646, was afterwards M. of A. professor of the civil law at Gresham coll. and kept his fellowship with it, went out doct. of the civ. and canon law upon the coming of the prince of Tuscany to Cambr. in the beginning of 1669, he being then under-keeper of his maj. library at S. James's.³ He was a most excellent scholar, a most admired Grecian, and a great traveller. He died in the summer time, an. 1670, being then, as 'twas vulgarly reported, a Roman catholic.

FRANCIS DAVIES a Glamorganshire-man born, became a student of Jes. coll. an. 1628, aged 17 years, took the degr. in arts, and was made fellow of the said house. About that time entering into holy orders, he became beneficed in Wales, and in 1640 was admitted to the reading of the sentences. Afterwards suffering much for the king's cause, lived as opportunity served, and was involved in the same fate as other royalists were. But being restored to what he had lost, after his maj. restoration, he was actually created D. of D. in the beginning of the year 1661, being then archd. of Landaff in the place of Tho. Prichard. In 1667 he was made bishop of Landaff on the death of Dr. Hugh Lloyd, paid his homage on the 4th of Sept. the same year, and about that time was consecrated.⁴ He concluded his last day in the latter end of sixteen hundred seventy and four, and was buried, as I have been informed by some of the fellows of Jes. coll. in the cath. ch. at Landaff. In the said see of Landaff succeeded Dr. Will. Lloyd sometime of S. WILLIAM FULLER, son of Tho. Fuller, was born in London, educated in the coll. school at Westminster, became a commoner of Magd. hall in 1626 or thereabouts, aged 18 years, took the degree of bach. of the civil law six years after, as a member of S. Edm. hall, having translated himself thither some time before. About that time he entered into holy orders, was made one of the chaplains or petty canons of Ch. Ch. and when the king had taken up his head quarter at Oxon in the time of the rebellion, he became chapl. to Edw. lord Littleton lord keeper of the great seal there. Afterwards, upon the declension of the king's cause, he suffer'd as others did, taught a private school at Twittenham or Twickenham in Middlesex, in the reigns of Oliver and Richard, and endeavoured to instill principles of loyalty into his scholars. At length upon the restoration of king Charles II. he was nominated dean of S. Patrick's church near Dublin, and in August the same year was actually created doctor of the civ. law, as a member of S. Edm. hall, by virtue of the chancellor's letters written in his behalf, which say that 'he is a worthy and learned person and hath suffered much for his loyalty to his majesty,' &c. Afterwards he went into Ireland, was installed dean of the said ch. on the 21st of Octob. following, and continuing in that dignity till 1663, he was made bishop of Limerick and Ardfert in that kingdom; to which being consecrated⁵ on the 20th of March the same year, according to the English accompt, sate there (tho' much of his time was spent in England) till 1667, and then upon Dr. B. Laney's removal to Ely, on the death of Dr. Matth. Wren, he was translated to the see of Lincoln (after he had taken a great deal of pains to obtain it) on the 28th of Sept. the same year. He paid his last debt to nature at Kensington near London, on the 22d of April in sixteen hundred seventy and five; whereupon his body being carried to Lincoln, was buried in the cathedral church there. In the afternoon of the very same day that he died, Dr. Tho. Barlow provost of Queen's coll. did, by the endeavours of the two⁶ secretaries of state (both formerly of his coll.) kiss his majesty's hand for that see, and accordingly was soon after consecrated. WALTER BLANDFORD, son of a father of both his names, was born at Melbury Abbats in Dorsetshire, became a servitor or poor scholar of Ch. Ch. an. 1635, aged ^a nineteen years, admitted scholar of Wadh. coll. on the 1st of Oct. 1638, at which time he said he was born in 1619, took the degrees in arts, and in 1644, July 2, he was admitted fellow of the said coll. In 1648 when the visitors were appointed by parliament to eject all such from the university, that would not take the covenant or submit to their power, they did not eject him, which shews that he did either take the covenant or submit to them; and about the same time obtaining leave to be absent, he became chapl. to John lord Lovelace of Hurley in Berks and tutor to his son John, to whom also afterwards he was tutor in Wadh. coll. In 1659 he was elected and admitted warden of that coll. and in the year after, in Aug. he was, among many, actually created D. of D. being about that time chapl. to sir Edw. Hyde lord chanc. of England, who obtained for him the same year a prebendship in the ch. of Gloucester, and a chaplainship in ord. to his majesty. In 1662 and 63 he did undergo the office of vicechanc. of this univ. not without some pedantry, and in 1665 being nominated bishop of Oxon, on the death of Dr. Will. Paul, was elected thereunto by the dean and chapter of Ch. Ch. on the 7th of Novemb. confirm'd in S. Mary's church in Oxon on the 28th of the said month, and on the 3d of Decemb. following, in the same year of 1665 (the king and the qu. with their courts being then in Oxon) he was consecrated in New coll. chap. by the bishops of London, Gloucester and Exeter. Soon after he was made dean of the royal chappel, and upon the death of Dr. Skinner, was translated to the see of Worcester in the church of S. was inclined to marriage, died in the bishop's palace at Worcester, on Friday the 9th of July, in sixteen hundred seventy and five, and was buried in the chappel next beyond the east end of the choir belonging to the cathedral church there, commonly called our lady's chappel. Afterwards was set up in the wall that parts the said chappel and the east end of the choir, a monument of Northamptonshire marble, and in the middle of it was fix'd a black marble table, with a large inscription thereon, part of which runs thus. 'Tis said in the epitaph, that he died in the year of his age 59, and on the 16th of July, which should be the 9th, as I have told you before. In the see of Worcester succeeded him Dr. Jam. Fleetwood, as I shall tell you elsewhere.

EDWARD REYNOLDS, sometime fellow of Merton coll. and afterwards dean of Ch. Ch. was consecrated bishop of Norwich in the beginning of Jan. 1660, and died in sixteen hundred seventy and six, under which year you may see more among the writers vol. iii. col. 1083. In the said see succeeded Anthony Sparrow D. D. bp. of Exeter, who after his translation, was confirmed on the 18th of Sept. the same year, where he sate to the time of his death. This learned doctor, who was the son of a wealthy farmer named Samuel Sparrow, was born at Depden in Suffolk, educated in Qu. coll. in Cambridge, of which he was successively scholar and fellow, but ejected thence, with the rest of the society, for their loyalty, and refusing the covenant, an. 1643. Soon after he was prevail'd upon to take the benefice of Hawken in his native country, but by that time he had held it five weeks, where he read the Common-Prayer, he was ejected thence by the committee of religion sitting at Westminster. After the restoration of his majesty he returned to his living, was elected one of the preachers at S. Edm. Bury, and made archd. of Sudbury, as I have told you in the first part of the FASTI under the year 1577. Soon after he became master of the coll. wherein he had been educated, and thereupon left his charge at S. Edm. Bury, and in short time after resigned Hawken to his curate, having before

On the 3d of Novemb. 1667 he was consecrated [at Lambeth⁹] bishop of Exeter, upon the translation thence of Dr. Ward to Salisbury; where sitting with great commendations till the death of Dr. Reynolds, was then translated to Norwich, as I have before told you. Soon after the restauration, he was commended to the mastership of Queens college by the king. Yet great opposition was made in behalf of Dr. Patrick by part of the college. The cause was heard before the king and council, and decided soon in his behalf. Soon after bishop Wren gave him a prebend in Ely, when he least thought of it. He married Sosannah Coil, daughter of Thomas Coil of Deepden in Suff. by whom he had 6 daughters. He was chaplain to the king 1661; vice-chancellor of Cambr. 1666. In 1654 he was admitted of St. John's college, Cambridge, and went out doctor of divinity in 1670, upon the king's letters to the university. He was sometime vicar of Battersea in Surrey, was chaplain to the English merchant's factory at Portugal, also to the lord treasurer Clifford; prebendary of Cadington minor in the church of St. Paul. He was advanced to the see of Llandaff in 1675, upon the death of Dr. Francis Davies: in 1679 he was removed to the see of Peterborough, void by the death of Dr. Joseph Henshaw; and in 1685 he was translated to the bishoprick of Norwich upon the death of Dr. Anthony Sparrow. He died in 1709-10, and was buried in the parish church of Hammersmith in Middlesex, where he had resided many years after his deprivation.]

Ashbourne in Derbyshire, was born there on the 19th of July 1598, and had his Christian name given to him at his baptism by Gilbert earl of Shrewsbury, to whom his father was a menial servant. In the latter end of 1613 he became a com. of Trin. coll. and proceeding in arts seven years after, was, in the year 1622, elected fellow of that of Alls. and about the same time took holy orders. Afterwards he was made domestic chapl. to 'Tho. lord Coventry lord keeper of the great seal, who finding him to be a man of parts, recommended him to king Charles I. as a person well vers'd in politics. In 1634 he proceeded in divinity, being then, as it seems, preb. of Gloucester,³ and in the latter end of the year following he was elected warden of his coll. About the same time he became chaplain in ordinary to his majesty, was afterwards clerk of his closet, and by him designed to be master of the hospital called the Savoy, and dean of Westm. that he might the better attend on his royal person; but the change of the times and rebellion that followed, hindred his settlement in them. During the time of the said rebellion he adhered to his maj. and his cause, and therefore was not only ejected his wardenship, but also imprison'd with Dr. H. Hammond in Oxon, and elsewhere, by the visitors appointed by parl. an. 1648, to the end that their eminency in the univ. might not hinder their proceedings, and to keep them both from attending the king at the treaty in the isle of Wight. After he was released, he retired to his friends in Staffordshire,⁴ Nottinghamshire, and Derbyshire; whence and where, from his own purse and from others which he made use of, he sent constantly moneys to the exil'd king, followed his studies and devotions till matters tended to a happy restoration of his maj. On the 4th of March 1659, Dr. Joh. Palmer, who had usurp'd his wardenship almost 12 years, died, at which time there being an eminent foresight of his maj. return, there was no election made of a successor, only a restitution of Dr. Sheldon; who instead of re-taking possession in person (which he never did) was made dean of his maj. chap. royal and nominated to succeed Dr. Juxon in London, upon his translation thence to Canterbury; whereupon being consecrated thereunto in the chapel of king Henry VII. at Westm. by the bishop of Winchester (delegated thereunto by Canterbury) assisted by York, Ely, Rochester and Chichester, on the 28th of Oct. (S. Sim. and Jude) an. 1660, sate there, as one thought fittest to take charge and care of that great and populous city, till the decease of the said Dr. Juxon; and then being elected to succeed him in Canterbury by the dean and chapter thereof, on the 11th of Aug. 1663, the election was confirmed on the 15th of the same month by his majesty (to whom Dr. Sheldon had been for some time before one of his privy council) and thereupon was translated with great solemnity in the archb. chappel at Lambeth, the 31st of the said month. On the 8th of Septemb. following Dr. Humph. Henchman bishop of Salisbury was elected to the said see of London, and on the 15th he was translated thereunto in the church of S. Mary-le-Bow, where he sate to the time of his death.⁵ In 1667 Dr. Sheldon was elected chancellor of the univ. of Ox. but was never install'd, nor ever was there after that time, no not so much as to see his noble work call'd the Theatre, or ever at Canterbury to be there personally installed archbishop, or upon any other occasion while he was archbishop. At length arriving to a fair age, he surrendered up his soul to God on Friday about seven of the clock at night, of the 9th day of Nov. in sixteen hundred seventy and seven: whereupon his body was privately interr'd in the parochial church of Croyden in Surrey, near to the tomb of archb. Whitgift (according to his own special direction) upon Friday evening, the 16th of the said month. Soon after was a most stately monument erected over his grave by his heir

This noble structure was built chiefly for the celebration of the public acts, yet since neglected. (2) The fair library at Lambeth-house, built at his own charge. His legacies at his death for charitable uses came to 1500*l.* which afterwards were paid, part to Alls. coll. part to the church of Canterbury, part to the hospital of Harbledown in Kent, and the rest to indigent persons. I have heard sir Joseph Sheldon before-mention'd say (who dying "the 16th of Aug. 1681," was buried near to the body of his uncle) that from the time of Dr. Sheldon's being made bishop of London, to the time of his death, it did appear in the book of his accompts, that he had bestowed upon public, pious and charitable uses, about threescore and six thousand pounds. In his archbishoprick succeeded Will. Sancroft D. D. dean of S. Paul's cathedral church in London,⁶ and sometime fellow of Eman. coll. in Cambridge; who, after he had been nominated by the king (thro' the endeavours of James duke of York) was consecrated in the abbey church of S. ⁷ [William Sancroft D. D. archb. of Canterb. borne at Presingfield neare to in Suffolk, on the 30 of Januar. 1616, died at Presingfield 24 Nov. 1693, between 12 and one in the morn. He was buried privately in the evening of the 27 day of the same month, under the south wall of the church of Presingfield, in the ch. yard, which place he made choice of in 1677, after his nomination and election to Canterbury, but before his instalment, at which time he went to visit his friends and native soyl, and then told them, that if he chance to dye in the country he designed that place for his interment. Upon the wall he ordered this sentence of scripture to be written, As the lightning which cometh from the East and shineth even to the West, even so shall the coming of the Son of Man be.

He ordered a plain inscription for his monument or gravestone in English and Lat. The English consists pretty much of scripture.

Many pious speeches and fervent prayers proceeded from him during his sickness. He prayed particularly with great zeal and affection for the king by name, for our persecuted and distressed church, for the afflicted members in this present storme, to whom he hath bequeathed some charitable legacies.

One Mr. Edwards of Eye, a depriv'd clergyman, attended him during his illness, nor did he permit his complying chaplaines, or any other complying clergy-men so much as to say grace.

There is a very honorable character given of him in the Paris Gazet, which was published about the beginning of Dec. 1693, running thus,

Dr. Will. Sancroft archb. of Canterbury, who since the present revolutions had courageously resisted both promises and threatnings to the loss of his goods and estate, and withstood the violence wherewith he had been at last dispoyled of his dignity against all law and regularity, and who had alwaies shew'd himself faithfull and loyal to his lawful sovereign, died last week at his house in the county of Suffolk. He was nominated archbishop of Cant. in 1677, having succeeded Dr. Sheldon, renowned for loyalty, his knowledge and liberality to learned men.

After his death there were several lockets made to his memory. One, which had the foundation of it in gold, had thereon a death's-head over two men's bones

a-cross, and worked with his (the archbishop's) haire of his head, and enamell'd over with great curiosity. It was sent to the university of Oxon to be reposed in their common library. The motto engraved in the gold was the archb. name, his nativity and obiit: round the death's-head and bones is written Rapido contrarius orti. WOOD, MS. Insertion in his own hand-writing in Bishop Tanner's copy in the Bodleian.

The first who publickly denied the pope to be anti-christ in Oxon was my late lord archbishop Dr. Sheldon. The doctor of the chair, Dr. Prideaux, wondering at it, said—Quid, mi fili, negas papam esse antichristum? Dr. Sheldon answered—Etiā nego. Dr. Prideaux replied—*Profecto multum tibi debet pontifex Romanus, et nullus dubito quin pileo cardinalitio te donabit.*⁸ KENNET.

He was presented to the rectory of Ickford, Buckinghamshire, and by archbishop Laud to that of Newington, Oxfordshire.

Bishop Burnet's character of Sheldon is this: 'He was accounted a learned man before the wars, but he was now engaged so deep in politics, that scarce any prints of what he had been remained. He was a very dextrous man in business, had a great quickness of apprehension, and a very true judgment. He was a generous and charitable man. He had a great pleasantness in conversation, perhaps too great. He had an art that was peculiar to him of treating all that came to him in a most obliging manner; but few depended much on his professions of friendship. He seemed not to have a deep sense of religion, if any at all, and spoke of it most commonly as of an engine of government, and a matter of policy.' Very likely he did not seem to have a deep sense of religion (says the writer of Sheldon's life in the Biographia) because he did not cant so much about it, as bishop Burnet, and persons of his cast.

The following account of the papers relating to archbishop Sheldon in the Lambeth library was communicated to me by the rev. H. J. Todd, whose readiness to assist every literary undertaking and whose personal kindness to me on all occasions I am most happy to acknowledge.

1677. JOHN PARRY, sometime of Trin. coll. near Dublin, afterwards fellow of Jesus coll. in this univ. was consecrated bishop of Ossory in Ireland on the death of Griff. Williams in the beginning of the year 1672, and died a little before the Nativity year you may see more among the writers, vol. iii. col. 1143. In the said see succeeded his brother Benj. Parry, as I am now about to tell you.

1678. BENJAMIN PARRY, sometime of Trinity coll. near Dublin, afterwards of Jesus in this university, and at length fellow of Corp. Ch. was consecrated bp. of Ossory in Jan. 1677, and died in the beginning of October, in sixteen hundred seventy and eight, under which year you may see more of him among the writers, vol. iii. col. 1172. In the said see succeeded Dr. Michael Ward, as I have elsewhere told you.

[1165] RALPH BRIDEOAKE, son of Rich. Brideoake (by Cicely his wife, daughter of Joh. Booth of Lancashire) and he the son of another Richard of Adbaston, was born, as I have been informed, at Chitham Hill near Manchester in the said county, was admitted a student in Brasen-n. coll. the 15th of July 1630, aged 16 years, took one degree in arts, and determining soon after, his disputations did so much please Dr. Pink warden of New coll. then vicechancellor of the univ. that he forthwith, upon enquiry that his condition was mean, made him a pro-chaplain of the said New coll. In 1636, he, among many others, was actually created master of arts, by virtue of his maj. letters dated at Oxon, he being then accounted a good Grecian and poet: but having nothing to keep up the degree of mast. only his employment in the said coll. he became curate of Wytham near Oxon, for Dr. Joh. Briken-den sometime of Magd. college, and corrector of the press in Oxon. In which last employment, happening to correct a book of Dr. Thomas Jackson president of Corpus Christi coll. to whom he had often recess, that doctor had such an affection for him, that upon the vacancy of the free-school at Manchester, founded by bishop Hugh Oldham (of which the president of the said coll. for the time being is patron) he forthwith gave the government of it to him. So that being soon after settled there, he, by his interest and great forwardness, became chap. to the earl of Derby, whom and his family he much pleased: and when Latham-house in Lancash. belonging to the said count was besieged by the forces belonging to parliament, he was all the time in it, and did good service. When the king's cause declined he stuck close to the said family, and managed, as 'tis said, most of the estate belonging to it. In 1651 his lord James earl of Derby being engaged for king Charles II. at Worcester fight, and before, he was, after the loss of the day, taken by the parliamenteers in Cheshire: whereupon he being like to lose his life, this his chapl. Mr. Brideoake, with others, were desired to solicit the grantees at Westm. to save him; and Will. Lenthall the speaker of the house of com. being much plying by the said chapl. with more than ordinary reason and application, Lenthall thereupon (when he saw nothing could save his lord's life) finding him to be a man of parts and business, made him his own proper chapl. and soon after preacher of the Rolls in Chancery-lane: which act of his, tho' noble and generous, yet he was clamour'd at, and gained the ill will of divers members of parliament, for his entertaining openly, and afterwards preferring, a malignant, as they term'd him. Soon after by Lenthall's endeavours he became vicar of a market town in Oxfordshire called Whitney, where being settled, he preached twice every Lord's day, and in the evening catechised the youth in his own house, out-vying in labour and vigilancy any of the godly brethren in those parts.⁹ He also, by his patron's means, got the rectory of the said place (which had been leased out) to be annexed to the vicaridge, whereby it became one of the richest rectories in Oxford diocese; and not long after¹ he was made minister of S. Bartholomew's near the Royal-exchange in London,² where in holding forth, preaching, and laying about him in the pulpit, he equalled any of the holy brethren of that city. On the 14th of March 1659 he was appointed one of the commissioners by act of parliament for the approbation and admission of ministers of the gospel after the presbyterian mode: but that act soon after vanishing upon the approach of his majesty's restoration, he, by his unwearied diligence and application, was made chapl. to his majesty, installed canon of Windsor, in the place of Dr. Tho. Howell bishop of Bristol (several years before dead) on the 11th day of July,³ and actually created D. of D. in the beginning of Aug. following, an. 1660. About that time he became rector of the rich church⁴ of Standish in his native country, given formerly to him by the earl of Derby, but hindered from enjoying it by the triers in Oliver's reigns, between whom and him followed some controversy concerning that matter, but how terminated I cannot tell. In Sept. 1667 he was made dean of Salisbury in the place of Dr. Rich. Baylie deceased, and in Febr. 1674 he was by the endeavours of Lodovisa dutchess of Portsmouth (whose hands were always ready to take bribes) nominated by the king to be bishop of Chichester, on the translation of Dr. Peter Gunning from thence to Ely. So that being consecrated thereunto on the 18th day of April an. 1675, had liberty then allowed to him to keep his canonry of Windsor [and rectory of Standish⁵] in commendam with that see, which he did to his dying day. This person, who had spent the chief part of his life in continual agitation, for the obtaining of wealth and settling a family (for he was a married man, and left behind him three sons at his death) was suddenly taken from this world as he was visiting his diocese, on the fifth day of Octob. in sixteen hundred seventy and eight: whereupon his body being conveyed to Windsor, was buried in Bray's chappel, joyning on the south side to the outer chappel of S. George, in the castle there. Soon after was a fair altar monument erected over his grave, with his statue from head to foot, adorned with pontificalia (all curiously cut from one entire piece of alabaster) lying thereon, with this inscription engraven upon it. M. S. matusus Deo mortalitatem exiit Rev. in Christo Pater Radulphus Brideoake. Vir audacter probus, magnus, sed humilis. Ingens Atticæ, & omnis eloquentiæ Thesaurus. JOSEPH HENSHAW, sometime a com. of Magdalen hall, became bishop of Peterborough, upon the translation of Dr. Lancy to Lincoln, in the beginning of the year 1663, and died in the latter end of sixteen hundred seventy and eight, leaving then behind him this character in his diocese, that 'he was a learned man and a good preacher, but so proud and unhospitable, that in that respect he deserved not the name of a bishop.' I have already mentioned him among the writers, under the year 1678, vol. iii. col. 1195, and therefore I shall only say that Dr. Will. Lloyd succeeded him in Peterborough, and was confirm'd in that see on the 17th of May 1679. Afterwards he was translated to Norwich, where sitting with good approbation till after king William III. came to the crown, he was then depriv'd, as I have before told you in Dr. E. Reynolds.

JOHN PRICHETT, [or PRICKET, or PRICHARD⁶] son of Walter Prichett of Hillenden in Middlesex (afterwards alderman [and lord mayor⁷] of London, as his relations have told me) was born there, or in that county, admitted a student of Qu. coll. in Mich. term 1622, aged 18 years, took the degrees in arts as a member of S. Edm. hall, that of master being compleated in an act celebrated 1629. Afterwards marrying an Oxford woman of inferior note, he became beneficed in his own country, but whether he suffer'd for any cause during the civil war I know not. Sure 'tis that he being vicar of S. Giles's church near Cripplegate in London, after the restoration of king Charles II.⁸ and esteemed a rich man, as indeed he was, he, by the endeavours of Dr. Sheldon, archb. of Cant. had the poor bishoprick of Gloucester conferr'd on him, after the death of Dr. Nicolson, with leave allowed to him to keep the said church of S. Giles's in commendam with it. So that being consecrated thereunto on the 3d day of Nov. (being the first Sunday of that month) an. 1672, sate there till the time of his death, which hapning at Harefield in Middlesex (where he had an estate) on the first day of Jan. in sixteen hundred and eighty, was buried on the seventh day of the same month under the pulpit of the church there. In the said see succeeded Dr. Robert Frampton of Oxon, who sitting there with great liking till after king William III. came to the crown, was then deprived of his bishoprick, for not taking the oaths of allegiance and supremacy.

JOHN PARKER, was born in the city of Dublin, educated partly in the university there, and partly in this, as a member of Ch. Ch. as I have been not only informed there by certain seniors, but also from Dublin. Afterwards he retired to his native place, became prebendary of S. Michan, and much in respect there for his religion and learning. Afterwards, in the times of usurpation, he was deprived⁹ of all his spiritualities by O. Cromwell, and by him cast into prison upon suspicion that he was a spy from the marquess of Ormond. Afterwards being freed by exchange, he constantly adhered to the said marquess as long as he continued in Ireland: But when he withdrew himself thence into France, Mr. Parker went into England, where making a shift to rub out till his majesty's return, went then into his own country, "at which time he "was dean of Killala," and being nominated bishop of Elphine, was consecrated thereunto in S. Patrick's church on the 27th of Jan. 1660, he being then doctor of divinity. In 1667, Aug. 9. he was by letters patents then dated, made archbishop of Tuam in the room of Dr. Sam. Pullen, and afterwards archb. of Dublin in the place of Dr. Mich. Boyle translated to Armagh. He died in the beginning of January in sixteen hundred eighty and one, and was buried, as I conceive, at Dublin: whereupon Dr. Francis Marsh succeeded him in the see there. The said Dr. Parker hath extant A Sermon preached before both Houses of Parliament in Ireland; on 2 Sam. 19. 14.—printed 1663. qu. and, as I conceive, others.

HENRY BRIDGMAN, the third son of Dr. John Bridgman bishop of Chester (who died an.

1652. aged 77 years) was born in Northamptonshire,¹ entred a commoner of Oriel coll. in the year 1629, aged 16 or thereabouts, elected fellow of that of Brasen-nose 6 Dec. 1633, being then bach. of arts: afterwards he was actually created master of that faculty, and in 1639 he resign'd his fellowship, being then, by the endeavours of his father, benefited or dignified, or both. In the time of the rebellion he did his majesty faithful service, and therefore was a sharer in afflictions, as other loyalists were, occasioned by the violent proceedings of the presbyterians. After his majesty's restoration, he was elected dean of Chester in July, in the place of Dr. Will. Nicolls, (who died in 1658) was actually created D. of D. in the beginning of Aug. following, and soon after installed in his deanery, and on the 22d of Septemb. 1660 installed preb. of Stillington in the ch. of York, being about that time parson of Bangor in Flintshire, and of Barrow in Cheshire.² At length upon the translation of Dr. Is. Barrow to the see of S. Asaph, being nominated bishop of the Isle of Man by the earl of Derby, he was consecrated thereunto at Chester on Sunday the second of Octob. 1671, having had liberty before granted to him to keep his deanery in commendam with it.³ What the merits of this person were, except his loyalty and his benefaction to the dean's house at Chester, let others speak, while I tell you that he giving way to fate on the 15th of May in sixteen hundred eighty and two (after he had had two wives) was buried, as I suppose, in the cath. ch. at Chester. Qu. In his deanery succeeded James Arderne or Arden, D. D. whom I shall mention in the FASTI an. 1673; and in the see of Man succeeded Dr. John Lake, who, after nomination thereunto by William earl of Derby, and the issuing out of a commission for his consecration in the beginning of Decemb. 1682, was accordingly soon after consecrated. This person, who was born in Yorkshire, was educated in S. John's coll. in Cambridge, was afterwards rector of S. Botolph's church near Bishops-gate in London,⁴ instituted rector of Prestwyche in Lancashire 17 Octob. 1668, collated to the prebendship of Friday Thorp in the church of York⁵ upon the resignation of Hen. Apr. 1670, was afterwards a preacher in that city, and on the death of Dr. Rob. Field he was installed archdeacon of Cleveland 13 Oct. 1680. Before he had continued two years in the see of Man, he was, upon the death of Dr. Will. Goulson, elected bishop of Bristol, to which he was translated in the ch. of S. Mary-le-Bow in London, on the 12th of Aug. and on the first of Sept. following, an. 1684, he was installed by proxy, with leave then allow'd him to keep his prebendary, &c. in commendam with it. EDWARD RAINBOW, son of Tho. Rainbow a minister, by Rebecca his wife, daughter of Dav. Allen rector of Ludbrough in Lincolnshire, was born at Bliton near Gainsborough in the said county, 20 Apr. 1608, educated in grammar learning successively at Gainsborough, Peterborough, and at Westminster, entered a student in Corp. Christi coll. in Oxon. in Jul. 1623, his elder brother John being about that time fellow of the said house, but before he had quite spent two years there, he was translated to Magd. coll. in Cambridge, where he was admitted one of the scholars of Frances countess dowager of Warwick, daughter of sir Christoph. Wray lord chief justice of England. Afterwards taking the degrees in arts, he became fellow,⁶ and a noted tutor in that house. "In the year 1639 he "was titular incumbent of Childerley near Cam- "bridge, by the appointment of sir Joh. Cutts, and "household chaplain to the earl of Suffolk,⁷ by "whose interest he became" master of his college in Oct. 1642, (in the place of Dr. Hen. Smith deceased) continued therein in the time of the rebellion without being ejected with others that denied the covenant, commenced doctor of div. in 1646, and in 1650 lost his mastership for refusing a protestation against the king, that is the oath called the engagement. Afterwards he became minister of Chesterford near Audley Inn in Essex, married Elizabeth daughter of his predecessor Dr. Hen. Smith; and in the beginning of the year 1659 became rector of Benefield in Northamptonshire,⁸ which tho' of considerable value, yet by the favour of friends he did not undergo the examination of the tryers of that time, as he had not done for Chesterford. Upon his majesty's return in 1660, he was restored to his mastership, was made chaplain to his majesty, dean of Peterborough the same year, and in 1662 vicechancellor of Cambridge. In 1664 he became bishop of Carlisle, upon the translation thence of Dr. Rich. Sterne to the see of York, where sitting till the time of his death, was then succeeded by Dr. Tho. Smith sometime fellow of Qu. coll. in this university. See in the FASTI in the first part, col. 443, but more in a book entit. The Life of the Right Rev. Fath. in God Edw. Rainbow, D.D. late Lord Bishop of Carlisle. Lond. 1688. oct. written by one Jonathan Banks bach. of arts of Cambridge, and school-master of Applebey in Westmorland, who composed it by the help of some papers and a diary of the bishop, which the widow of the said bishop furnished him with. He the said Dr. Rainbow published Labour forbidden and commanded, two Sermons at S. Paul's Cross on Joh. 6. 27. Lond. 1635, and another At the Funeral of Susanna Countess of Suffolk 13 May 1649; on Ecclesiastes 7. 1, &c. "And also a *Sermon preached "at the Funeral of Anne Countess of Pembroke, "Dorset, and Montgomery, who dyed the 22d of "March 1675, and was buried the 14th of Apr. The said bishop Edward Rainbow "dyed Wednesday 26 March 1684, aged near 76 "years, and was buried on Tuesday following "Apr. 1. in the church-yard of Dalston near Rose- "castle."

PETER GUNNING, sometime fellow of Clare hall in Cambridge, afterwards one of the chaplains of New coll. in Oxon, &c. became first bishop of Chichester, afterwards of Ely; and dying in July in sixteen hundred eighty and four (under which year you may see more of him among the writers, vol. iv. col. 140.) he was succeeded in Ely by Dr. Franc. Turner bishop of Rochester, sometime fellow of New coll. who for refusing the oath of alleg. and supremacy to king William III. was deprived of it.

GEORGE MORLEY, sometime dean of Ch. Church, was first bishop of Worcester (where he was received and enthronized with very great solemnity on the 12th of Sept. 1661) and afterwards of Winchester on the death of Dr. Duppa; who dying in the latter end of Octob. in sixteen hundred eighty and four (under which year you may see more of him among the writers, vol. iv. col. 149.) was succeeded in Winchester by Dr. Pet. Mews B. of Bath and Wells.

GUY CARLETON was born of an ancient and genteel family at Brampton Foot in Gilsland within the county of Cumberland, educated in the free-school at Carlisle under Mr. Tho. Robson, and admitted a poor serving child of Queen's coll. under the tuition of Charles son of the said Tho. Robson, an. 1621, aged 17 years or thereabouts. Afterwards he was made tabarder, fellow, and in 1635 one of the proctors of the university, vicar of Bucklesbury near to Newbury in Berks, &c. At length upon the breaking out of the grand rebellion he took part with his majesty, and did him good service, being then accounted an excellent horsman in a double sense, for which he had his share in sufferings as other loyalists had. After the king's restoration he was made one of his chaplains, was actually created D. of D. in the beginning of Aug. 1660, made dean of Carlisle in the place of Dr. Tho. Comber sometime master of Trin. coll. in Cambridge (some years before dead) and on the 2d of Nov. the same year was installed prebendary of Durham. In 1671 he was nominated bishop of Bristol on the death of Dr. Gilb. Ironside, to which see being consecrated in S. Peter's church at Westm. on the eleventh day of Febr. in the same year, had, much about that time, liberty allowed him to keep his prebendship⁹ in commendam. In 1678 he was translated to Chichester on the death of Dr. Brideoake, and was confirmed therein on the eighth day of January the same year, but had not the name there for a scholar, or liberal benefactor, as his predecessor and kinsman had, named Dr. George Carleton. This Dr. Guy Carleton died in the city of Westminster during his attendance in parliament, on the sixth day of July 1685. in sixteen hundred eighty and five: whereupon his body was conveyed, as I have been informed, to Chichester, and buried in the cath. ch. there. In the bishoprick of Bristol succeeded Dr. Wil. Goulson a Leicestershire man born, educated in S. John's coll. in Cambridge,¹ and afterwards was chaplain to the dutchess of Somerset. He was consecrated at Lambeth on the ninth day of Febr. 1678; and dying at his rectory of Symondsbury in Dorsetshire (to which he had been presented by the said dutchess²) on the fourth day of Apr. an. 1684, was buried on the 18th day of the same month in the chancel of the church of that town. In the see of Chichester succeeded Dr. Carleton, the bishop of Bristol, viz. Dr. Joh. Lake, in Aug. or Sept. 1685; who was one of the seven bishops that were committed prisoners to the tower on the 8th of June 1688, for contriving, making, and publishing a seditious libel against his majesty (king James II.) and his government, that is, for subscribing a petition to his majesty, wherein he and the rest shewed the great averseness they found in themselves to the distributing and publishing in all their churches, his majesty's then late declaration for liberty of conscience, &c. After king William III. came to the crown he was one of the bishops that denied the oaths of allegiance and supremacy to him, and on his death-bed, in the latter end of Aug. 1689, he did publicly declare against them. In the said see succeeded Dr. Sim. Patrick dean of Peterborough, who was consecrated thereunto on the 13th of Octob. following. This bishop Lake, who had been rector of S. Botolph's church without Bishopsgate, London, hath written, (1) A Serm. preached at Whitehall 29 of May 1670, being the Day of his Majesty's Birth and Restorat. Lond. 1671. qu. (2) The Character of a true Christian, preached in the Parish Church of S. Botolph Bishopsgate at the Funeral of Will. Cade Deputy of the Ward. Lond. 1690. qu. and other things as I conceive, but such I have not yet seen.

[Quære of the report that Dr. Guy Carleton at the beginning of 1660 was imprisoned in Lambeth house, and sentenced to death, but by the help of his landress made his escape over the wall, took boat down the river, and found a passage to Holland, where he presented himself to the king at Breda, who received him with great surprise and joy, having heard that he was destined to execution before that time. The same person informed me, that he having been long used to feed on pulse only, without any flesh, had in the beginning of the parl. in 1685, a dish of kidney-beans provided for him, and that a string of one of the bean pods stuck in his throat, and was soon the cause of his death. Carleton was M. A. of Magd. 1626. Reg. Acad. BAKER.

He had a rich living in the north, from which he was ejected. Then he was presented to the vicarage of Hartley-court in Berkshire, and was dispossessed there also by the triers. After this, he was taken up and imprisoned at Lambeth-house; but contriving his escape, his wife conveyed a cord to him, by which he was to let himself out of a window toward the Thames, where a boat was to wait for him. The cord was too short, but he trusted to it rather than stay where he was, and falling some part of the way dislocated a bone. The boat carried him off, and he lay concealed till he recovered; then his wife was forced to sell the bed from under her, to pay for the cure. He then got on shipboard and went abroad to the king. (by Elizabeth his wife, daughter of Hugh Williams of Cyetiwillair in Caernarvonshire, a captain sometime in Holland) son of Joh. Dolben of Haverford West in Pembrokeshire (descended from those of his name in Denbighshire) by his wife Alice sister to sir Tho. Middleton of Chirk Castle in the said county of Denbigh, became bishop of Rochester in the place of Dr. Warner an. 1666, and in 1683 was translated to the archiepiscopal see of York.⁵ He died in the beginning of the year sixteen hundred eighty and six, under which year you may see more of him among the writers, vol. iv. col. 188. In the said see, after it had lain void till Nov. 1688, did succeed Dr. Tho. Lamplugh bishop of Exeter, who upon the prince of Orange's arrival in the West, left Exeter and retired to London to pay his respects to king James II. which being taken very kindly by that king, he translated him to York on the 15th of the said month. The said Dr. Joh. Dolben was great nephew to Dr. Joh. Williams archb. of York, and had much of his boldness and confidence in him, but little of his learning. And whereas I have told you that the said archb. Williams was, upon supposal, buried at Aberconway (where he had built an house in the place of that wherein he was born, which he caused to be called Lincolns-inn) is false, for he was buried in the church of Llandegay (which signifies the church of S. Gay in the British language) near Bangor in Caernarvonshire, in which parish Penrhyn the seat sometime of archb. Williams is situated. He died at Glodded of a quinsy in his throat, which being sudden, he told his attendants then by him, that nothing troubled him more than that he should dye like a beast, that had always liv'd like a gentleman, &c. Afterwards his body being conveyed to Penrhyn, was thence carried to the church at Llandegay, and there buried in a little vault at the upper end of the chancel. Some years after, his nephew and heir called sir Griffith Williams erected on the south wall of the said chancel a very fair monument, containing the effigies of the archbishop kneeling, carved and wrought from white marble, with a large inscription under it, made by Dr. Joh. Hacket his sometime chaplain; the contents of which being large, I shall now for brevity's sake pass by. But whereas the said doctor saith that he died 25 March 1650 is false, for he died on that day in 1649, aged 68 years or more.

He the said Dr. Fell left behind him the character among some men of a valde vult person, who by his grasping at and undertaking too many affairs relating to the public (few of which he thoroughly effected) brought him untimely to his end to the loss of learning, &c.

JOHN LLOYD, son of Morgan Lloyd, was born of an ancient family at Pentaine in Caermarthenshire, became a student in Merton coll. in Lent term 1655, aged 15 years or thereabouts, and took one degree in arts as a member of that house. Afterwards he became fellow of that of Jesus, principal thereof on the resignation of sir Leolin Jenkyns, D. of D. and treasurer of Landaff. In 1682, 83, and 84, he did execute the office of vice-chancellor of this university; and on the death of Dr. Laur. Womack being nominated by king James II. to succeed him in the see of S. David's, was consecrated thereunto at Lambeth on the 17th of Oct. 1686. Afterwards retiring to Oxon in a dropsical condition, died in Jesus coll. on the thirteenth day of Febr. following, being then the first Sunday in Lent: whereupon his body was buried at the upper end of the chappel belonging to that coll. near to the grave of sir Leol. Jenkyns before-mention'd. To the said see was nominated by the said king Dr. Tho. Watson of S. John's coll. in Cambridge,⁶ consecrated thereunto at Lambeth 26 June 1687, and afterwards, upon dislike of his person, and for that he had been recommended by the lord Dover to the said king, he did suffer and endure many affronts and intolerable abuses from the rabble, in Dec. 1688, just after the said king had left England for France.⁷

He had an estate at Burrow-Green in Cambridgeshire, at which he was at the time of the revolution. There the rabble of the country insulted him, and brought him their prisoner in an indecent manner to Cambridge. The scholars attacked them, and brought off the bishop. It was at the time that the popish members of the university were sought for, and narrowly escaped, getting out of the town by private ways. This bishop was after under prosecution, and deprived in 1699; but by his appeal to the delegates, and afterwards to the house of lords, his bishoprick was not disposed of till 1705, when it was given to Dr. George Bull. Atkins, sheriff and commissary of Orkney, was born in the town of Kirkwall in the stewartry of Orkney in Scotland, educated in the coll. of Edinburgh, where he commenced master of arts, afterwards he retired to Oxon to compleat his learning, especially his divinity, by the advice, instruction and lectures of Dr. Prideaux, an. 1637, 38, &c. Soon after he, upon recommendations, became one of the chaplains to James marquess of Hamilton, at that time his majesty's high commissioner for Scotland: In which station he did acquit himself so well to the satisfaction of his noble patron, that upon his return to England he procured a presentation for him from his majesty to the church of Birsay in the stewartry of Orkney: where continuing some years, his prudence, diligence, and faithfulness in the discharge of his office did procure him much of veneration and respect from all persons, especially from his ordinary, who conferr'd upon him the dignity of moderator to the presbytery. In the beginning of the year 1650, when the noble James marq. of Montross landed in Orkney, this Dr. Atkins was nominated by the unanimous votes of the said presbytery to draw up a declaration in their names and his own; which, with their approbation and consent, was published, containing very great expressions of loyalty, and constant resolution firmly to adhere to their dutiful allegiance. For this the whole presbytery being deposed by the general assembly of the kirk at that time sitting at Edinburgh, the said doctor was likewise excommunicated, as one that conversed with the said marquess, against whom they had emitted the like brutum fulmen. At that time the Scottish council past an act to apprehend him the said doctor, to the end that he might be tried for his life, but upon private notice from his kinsman sir Archibald Primrose, at that time clerk to the said council, he fled into Holland, where he sculked till 1653, and then returning into Scotland, he transferr'd his family to Edinburgh, where he resided quietly and obscurely till the year 1660. Upon the return then of his majesty king Charles II. he attended Dr. Tho. Sydserf bishop of Galloway (the only Scottish bishop who had the good fortune to survive the calamities of the usurper's government) to London, where the bishop of Winchester presented him to the rectory of Winfrith in Dorsetshire, and continuing there till the year 1677, he was elected and consecrated bish. of Murray in Scotland, to the great rejoicing of the episcopal party. In 1680 he was translated to the see of Galloway, with dispensation to reside at Edinburgh, because it was thought unreasonable to oblige a reverend prelate of his years to live among such a rebellious and turbulent people as those of that diocese were: the effects of whose fiery zeal hath too frequently appeared in affronting, beating, robbing, wounding, and sometimes murdering the curates. He had the oversight of the said diocese for 7 years, which he so carefully governed, partly by his pastoral letters to the synod, presbyteries and ministers, and partly by his great pains in undertaking a very great journey for a man of his age and infirmities to visit his diocese, that had he resided on the place better order and discipline could scarce be expected. He died at Edinburgh of an apoplexy on the 28th of Octob. in sixteen hundred eighty and seven, aged 74 years: whereupon his body was decently inter'd in the church of the Grey Friars there, at which time John [Hamilton] then bishop of Dunkeld (since deceased) preached his funeral sermon. His death was sadly regretted by all good and pious men, who knew him to be a man of great reputation for his sincere piety, constant loyalty, singular learning, and true zeal for the protestant religion, according to the constitutions of the church of England, of which he lived and died a worthy member. Upon his coffin was fastened this epitaph,

He was very zealous and vigorous in opposing the taking off the penal laws in Scotland; at which time, notwithstanding he was so infirm by age and sickness that he could not walk, yet he was daily conveyed to the parliament, where he declared publicly his aversion to the abolishing the said penal laws, and to use his interest with the nobility and gentry of the parliament in persuading them to a firm and constant adherence to the protestant religion, and to oppose all the designs that might be prejudicial to the same.

SAMUEL PARKER, sometime of Wadh. afterwards of Trin. coll. and archd. of Canterbury, became bishop of Oxford on the death of Dr. Fell an. 1686, and dying in the latter end of sixteen hundred eighty and seven (under which year you may see more of him among the writers, vol. iv. col. 225.) was succeeded in the same see by Timothy Hall, as I shall tell you by and by.

SETH WARD, sometime of Sidney coll. in Cambridge, and afterwards of that of Wadh. in

Oxon, &c. was first made bishop of Exeter, and afterwards of Salisbury; who dying in the beginning of Jan. in sixteen hundred eighty and eight, was succeeded in that see by Gillb. Burnet, D. D. sometime preacher of the Rolls in Chancery-lane in London, consecrated thereunto, according to the form prescribed in the book of Common Prayer, in the chappel belonging to the bishop of London's house at Fulham, by the bishops of London, Winchester, Lincoln, Landaff, S. Asaph and Carlisle, on Easter-day 31 of March 1689. The said Dr. Ward did, about his majesty's restoration 1660, endeavour to make his loyalty known by being imprison'd at Cambridge, by his ejection, his writing against the covenant, and I know not what, but not a word of his cowardly wavering for luere and honour sake, of his putting in and out, and occupying other men's places for several years, &c. See among the writers, vol. iv. col. 246.

HUMPHREY LLOYD, the third son of Rich. Lloyd, D. D. and vicar of Ruabon in Denbighshire, by Jane his wife the daughter of Rudderch Hughes, clerk, of the family of Maes y Pand y, was born at Bod y Fudden in the parish of Trawsfynydd in the county of Merioneth in Jul. or Aug. an. 1610, became a com. of Oriel coll. for a time, afterwards of Jesus, where he was scholar, and thence again to Oriel coll. of which he became fellow in 1631, and a great tutor for many years. When the king and court were settled in Oxon he became known to Dr. Joh. Williams archb. of York then there, who made him his chapl. and gave him the prebendship of Ampleford in the church of York, which he kept to his death. After the decease of his father, which was in the time of the troubles, he succeeded him in the vicaridge of Ruabon, but was soon deprived of it and his prebendship by the usurpers, till restored again to both by the happy revolution in 1660. On the 13th of Aug. 1661 he was made canon of S. Asaph, and in the month following was actually created D. of D. On the 14th of Dec. 1663 he was installed dean of S. Asaph in the place of Dr. Dav. Lloyd deceased,* and on the 19th of Dec. 1664 he resigned the sinecure of Northop in Flintshire, in which he was succeeded by Mr. Will. Stone princ. of New-Inn in Oxon. In 1673 he was removed from Ruabon to the vicaridge of Gresford, vacant by the death of his elder brother Mr. Sam. Lloyd, and soon after succeeding Dr. Rob. Morgan in the see of Bangor, was consecrated thereunto in the chap. of London-house in Lond. on Sunday the 16th of Nov. 1673, by Dr. Henchman B. of London, Dr. Morley of Win. Dr. Ward of Sal. Dr. Dolben of Roch. &c. at which time Dr. Will. Lloyd, who was afterwards successively bishop of Llandaff, Peterb. and Norwich, preached the consecration sermon, and on the 5th of Jan. following he was installed at Bangor by proxy. In 1685 he procured the archdeaconries of Bangor and Anglesea, and the sinecure of Llanrhaider in Kinnerch, to be annexed to the bishoprick of Bangor, by act of parl. for ever, and two thirds of both the comports of Llanddinam to the ch. for the support of the fabric and the maintenance of the choir of Bangor, and the other third for the maintenance of the vicaridges belonging to Llanddinam. He ordered the four bells formerly bestowed by bishop Hen. Rowlands on the ch. of Bangor to be all new cast, and added a fifth bell bigger than the former, all at his own charge. He died on Friday the 18th of Jan. in sixteen hundred eighty and eight, and was buried in the grave of bishop Rowlands on the north side of the altar, in the cath. ch. of Bangor, leaving then behind him three sons named John, Francis archdeacon of Merioneth and rector of Llandyrnoe, and Richard registrar of Bangor, as also a relict named Jane, the daughter of John Griffyth of Llyn, esq; widow of Owen Brereton of Burros, esq; The inscription on the monument, which, I presume, is by this time put over his grave, runs thus: M. S. Humphredi Lloyd S. T. P. Episcopi Bangor, qui è familia Lloydorum de Dulasseu oriundus, in agro Merviniensi natus, & in Acad. Oxon. educatus. Postquam causæ regiae sub Carolo Martyre strenuus Assertor & Confessor extitisset, sub Carolo secundo primo Decanatu Asaphensi, dein Episcopatu Bangor. insignitus. THOMAS CARTWRIGHT, sometime of Queen's college, afterwards prebendary of Durham, dean of Rippon, &c. became bishop of Chester, on the death of Dr. Jo. presbyterian discipline,¹ (which caused him ever after to be a trimmer) took one degree in arts, left the college without completing it by determination, and what preferment he enjoyed afterwards in, or near, the great city, I know not: * sure I am, that several years after his majesty's restoration, he became rector of Allhallows Staining in Mark Lane in London; in which place we find him in 1688, when then, in the month of May or June, he, by virtue of his majesty's declarations for liberty of conscience, bearing date the 4th and 27th of April going before, did read in his church (when the generality of London ministers refused) the said declarations in the time of service on a Sunday, or at least gave half a crown to another (the parish clerk I think) to do it: for which great service his then majesty king James II. did confer upon him the bishoprick of Oxon, void by the death of Dr. Sam. Parker; an act so egregiously resented by the true sons of the church of England, that they look'd upon it as a matter to bring their church into contempt, by throwing upon it such an obscure person to be a father, as he had before, two or more, &c. without any regard had to merit. He was consecrated at Lambeth by the archbishop of Canterbury, bishops of Chichester and Chester, on the 7th of October 1688; but when he came into these parts to see and take possession of his house at Cudesden, the dean and canons of Ch. Ch. refused to install him, the gentry to meet or congratulate him, the vicechancellor and heads to take notice of him, or any master or bachelor to make application to, or take holy orders from, him: so that when he was in Oxon, at Whitsontide in the month of May 1689, Baptista, bishop of Man then there, did that duty in Magd. coll. chapel on the 26th of the said month, at which time 84 persons, or thereabouts, were ordained ministers. This Mr. Hall, called by some Doctor, and by others Sir, died miserably poor at Hackney² near London, on the tenth day of Apr. in sixteen hundred and ninety, and was buried in the church there on the 13th of the same month. In the said see of Oxon succeeded John Hough, D. D. president of Magd. coll. This bishop Hall hath published two sermons, viz. one preached at Mercer's chapel 13 Jan. 1677,³ on Levit. 19. 17. Lond. 1679. qu. and the other at the funeral of major Rob. Huntingdon, who died suddenly of an apoplexy, 21 April 1684, aged 70, or

 “1660 he was consecrated bishop of Cloyne, Cork, “degrees in divinity, and preached the sermon on “Act Sunday in the morning. In the latter end “of the year 1680 he was nominated by his majesty

 “bishop of Gloucester, in the place of John Pritchett “deceased: to which he was consecrated in the “chapel of All-s. coll. in Oxon, on the 27th of “March, being Palm-Sunday, an. 1681, at which “time the king and parliament were at Oxon, and
 “the archbishop of Canterbury a lodger in the said “coll. But the bishoprick being not esteemed suf“ficient to keep up the state of a baron, he had “liberty then allowed to him to keep his parsonage
 “in Dorsetshire, in commendam with it: and ac“cordingly he did so till about Christmas in 1683, “or 84, when then he was inducted into the rec“tory of Avening near Hampton in Gloucester“shire, by the gift of Philip Shephard of the said “town of Hampton esq;. After which, Hen. Bowles
 “of New coll. succeeded him in his living in Dor-“setshire. In 1690, much about Candlemas, he “was depriv’d of his bishoprick for not taking the “oaths of allegiance and supremacy to king William “III. and queen Mary; whereupon it was bestowed
 “on Dr. Edward Fowler of Oxon, and thereupon “Dr. Frampton retired and lived privately.

“WILLIAM MORETON, eldest son of Dr.
 “Edward Moreton sometime prebendary of Ches“ter, was born in Chester, alias West-Chester, but “descended from the ancient family of his name of “Moreton in Cheshire, became a student of Ch.
 “Ch. in the year 1660, took the degrees in arts, “holy orders, and in some years after was made “chaplain to Aubrey earl of Oxford; with whom “continuing for some time, he was taken into the “service (in the same quality) of the most noble
 “James duke of Ormond while he was lord lieute“nant of Ireland, with whom continuing for some “time, he was by that most worthy person made “dean of Christ Church in Dublin, in the room of “Dr. John Parry bp. of Ossory deceased, who kept “that deanery in commendam with his bishoprick:
 “and being installed on the 24th of Dec. 1677, “having been some days before declared doctor of “divinity by the ven. convocation of the univ. of “Oxon, continued there with good approbation for “some years. On the 14th of Jan. 1681, accord“ing to the English account, he was made bishop “of Kildare, and on the 19th of Febr. following “was consecrated thereunto at Ch. Ch. in Dublin “before-mentioned, with Dr. Will. Sherindon to “Kilmore, and Dr. Rich. Tenison to Killaloe, was “made a member of the privy-council in Ireland
 “by the same letters pat. that made him bishop,
 “and at the same time was allowed to hold the “said deanery of Ch. Ch. in commendam with his “bishoprick. The next summer following he came “into England, and took to him a wife, being not “then 40 years of age; and when Richard earl of “Tyreconnel, lord lieutenant of Ireland, stood up “with his forces in defence of king James II. to “keep possession of that kingdom against the forces “of king William III. he, as many others of the “bishops and clergy thereof, fled into England, and “there continued till that nation was settled.

“NARCISSUS MARSH, sometime fellow of “Exeter coll. afterwards principal of St. Alban’s “hall, and provost of Trin. coll. near Dublin, was “consecrated bishop of Ferns and Loughlin in Ire“land, and in the month of May 1683 translated “thence to the archiepiscopal see of Cashiell in Dec.
 “1690. See more of him among the writers of “Exeter college.

“CAPEL WISEMAN a baronet’s son of Es“sex (of Canfield hall I think) was admitted a “student of St. John’s coll. in Cambridge, on the “10th of Nov. 1654, and soon after being trans“lated to Oxford, took the degrees in arts as a “member of Queen’s coll. that of master being com“pleted in 1659. After the restoration of king “Charles II. he was elected fellow of All-s. coll.
 “about 1661, took on him the sacred function, and “some years after being made chaplain to Arthur “earl of Essex lord lieutenant of Ireland, was by “him promoted to the deanery of Raphoe in that “kingdom. In the month of June an. 1683 he was “made bishop of Dromore on the death of Dr.
 “Essex Digby.

“FRANCIS TURNER, sometime fellow of “New coll. afterwards master of that of St. John’s “in Cambridge, and dean of Windsor, was conse“crated bishop of Rochester, on the translation “thence of Dr. Dolben to York in Nov. 1683, and “in July 1684 he was translated to Ely, on the “death of Dr. Gunning. See more of him among “the writers of New college.

“THOMAS SMITH, the present bishop of Car“lisle, was born at Whitewall, in the parish of Asby
 “and county of Westmoreland, the 21st of Decem“ber, an. 1614. He was first educated in the “neighbouring free-school of Appleby: and, in the “16th year of his age, was admitted into Qu. coll.
 “in Oxford. His early proficiency in his studies “quickly gain’d him a singular repute in the uni“versity; one instance whereof was remarkable in “the performance of his Lent exercise: for at that “time (and for several years after) the fond humour
 “of one college’s engaging another in brawling dis-“putations, which they call’d coursing, being fashion“able in the university; his questions were (un“known to himself) sent by Mr. Tho. Crosfield, “senior fellow of his college, to the young students
 “of Brasen-nose, with the following challenge sub“scrib’d; ‘Prodeat aliquis è vobis Æneus, qui “Fabrum hunc Reginensem ad angustias (si possit)
 “redigat.’ Tho’ this procured him a surprizing

“assault from the gentlemen who look’d upon themselves as provok’d, and oblig’d in honour to enter the lists; yet he so prudently manag’d the matter, that the engagement ended much more amicably than was expected, and (indeed) than had been usual upon such occasions. After he had taken the degree of master of arts, and was (before several of his seniors) preferr’d to a fellowship, he became an eminent tutor; most of the gentlemen of the college being committed to his care. He was doubly qualify’d, beyond any of his contemporaries, for such a charge; as having had the opportunity of travelling for some time in France; and also being particularly skill’d in a methodical and easy way of grounding young men in the principles of philosophy, insomuch that some systems of his composure are still used by the best tutors in that college. The loose way, at that time, of slubbering over the public exercises for degrees offending him, as it did every body else that understood and valu’d the honour of the university; he chiefly complain’d of the empty formality of examinations, and so far prevail’d for a redress, that himself was the first man who examin’d publicly in the physic-school, after the method still observ’d. When king Charles I. resided at Oxford, he was one of those who were appointed to preach before his majesty at Christ Church, and the parliament at St. Mary’s. When afterwards faction, and the fanatical and furious zeal of a new set of visitors, had render’d Oxford as uneasy to persons of loyalty and generosity, as before it had been acceptable, he withdrew into the north, where he married Catharine widow of sir Henry Fletcher of Hulton in Cumberland, and lived there (in a quiet privacy) till, upon the happy restoration of king Charles II. his majesty’s pleasure was intimated to the university, that there should be a creation of all faculties, of such as had suffer’d for his majesty’s cause. Whereupon (on the 2d of August 1660,) he was, with many more of his fellow-sufferers, created batchelor of divinity, and on the 11th of Dec. following diplomated doctor in the same faculty. The king was also pleas’d to make him a sharer with others of his royal bounty in the disposal of vacant benefices and dignities in the church; and to honour him with being one of his majesty’s chaplains in ordinary. A prebend in the church of Carlisle was what he had first given him, into which he was install’d the 14th of Nov. an. 1660. At the same time he had the offer of a good living in the king’s disposal, the distance whereof not suiting with his other circumstances, he declin’d it himself, but procur’d it for his friend. Within a few months after this he was collated by bishop Cosins to a good prebend in the church of Durham; where, looking upon himself as invested with a preferment as agreeable as his modesty would give him “leave to wish for, he began immediately to repair his prebend house, sparing no costs to make it a dwelling suitable to the honour and endowments of that cathedral. Nor were his benefactions confin’d to (what justly claim’d his first care) the seat of his preferment; he gratefully remember’d the first foundations of his growing honours were laid at the school of Appleby, and therefore very bountifully expended several large sums in raising the schoolmaster’s salary (considerably beyond that of any other in the diocese of Carlisle) and in building a fair dwelling-house adjoining to the school. Upon the promotion of Dr. Carlton to the bishoprick of Bristol, he had the deanery of Carlisle confer’d upon him, into which he was install’d (by the vice-dean and a full chapter) on the 14th of March, an. 1671. And now he had opportunities enough to shew his public spirit. He was indeed, from that day, a continual benefactor to that cathedral; insomuch that it were an endless task to recount the several instances of his kindness. The dean’s lodgings were left by his predecessor in the same ruinous condition the rebellious times had brought them into, but were now (mostly from the ground) rebuilt at his own great expence. The altar had his offering of a large set of double-gilt communion-plate, and his praises were return’d to God on a handsome new organ, given by him to the quire. After which (having no further room for any more benefits) he left the revenues of that church in the best condition they had been in since the restoration. For, upon the death of bishop Rainbow, he was (to his own great surprize, and no less satisfaction of the whole diocese) recommended by king Charles to the chapter, for their bishop, and by them unanimously elected on the 3d day of May, an. 1684. On the 29th of June following (being St. Peter’s day) he was consecrated in St. Peter’s church at York by bishop Dolben, assisted by the bishops of Durham and Man; and, about the middle of July, did his homage at Windsor, and had restitution of the temporalities of his see. Since his settlement in the episcopal see, he has, besides many acts of great charity to poor clergymen and others, laid out several hundred pounds in repairing Rose castle, and now he is building a public library at the cathedral church of Carlisle, for the use of the clergy of the diocese, and designs to bestow his own books upon it which are of great value. He has writ something in philosophy, printed by Litchfield, (Quære) whose corrector he was when A. B. and has several sermons and discourses ready for the press.

“THOMAS SPRAT, sometime fellow of Wadham coll. and afterwards, thro’ certain preferments, dean of Westminster, was consecrated bishop of Rochester, on Dr. Francis Turner’s “ translation to Ely, in the beginning of Nov. 1684.

 “ See more of him among the writers of Wadham “ THOMAS KEN, sometime fellow of New

“ JONATHAN TRELAWNEY, son of sir
 “ Jonathan Trelawney of Trelawney in Cornwall “ baronet was born, as I have been informed, at “ Pelent or Pelynt in the same county, educated in “ Westm. school, entred into Ch. Ch. in Mich. term “ 1668, aged 18 years, and in the year following “ was made student thereof. Afterwards he took “ the degrees in arts, holy orders, and had one or “ two benefices in his own country conferr'd upon “ him by his relations. In 1680 his eldest brother “ died, and thereupon tho' the title of baronet, and “ the paternal estate of his family was to come to “ him after the death of his father, yet he stuck to “ his holy orders, continued in his function, and,
 “ upon the translation of Dr. Joh. Lake to the see “ of Chichester, was nominated by his majesty to “ succeed him in Bristol. Whereupon (after he had “ been diplomated doct. of div.) being consecrated “ thereunto in the archbishop's chappel at Lambeth
 “ on the eighth day of Nov. 1685, he was introduc'd “ into the house of lords, with Dr. Ken bishop of “ Bath and Wells, on the eleventh day of the same “ month, and took their places then as peers of the “ realm. On the eighth of June 1688 he was one “ of the six bishops, besides the archb. of Canter“ bury Dr. Sancroft, that were committed prisoners “ to the Tower of London, for contriving, making “ and publishing a seditious libel against his ma“ jesty (king James II.) and his government, that “ is, for subscribing a petition to his majesty, wherein “ he and the rest of the said bishops shewed the “ great averseness that they found in themselves “ to the distributing and publishing in all their “ churches his majesty's late declaration for liberty “ of conscience, &c. where continuing till they were “ publicly tried in Westminster hall for the same,
 “ were, to the great joy of the true sons of the “ church of England, released thence on the 15th
 “ of the same month. On the 15th of November
 “ following the see of Exeter was confer'd on him
 “ by king James II. on the translation thence to “ York of Dr. Lamplugh; and about the 7th of “ Apr. 1689 his majesty king William III. was “ pleased to grant his royal assent, for him the said “ Dr. Trelawney bishop of Bristol, to be bishop of “ Exeter in the place of Dr. Lamplugh before-men-

[Wilson was promoted to the deanery of Raphoe by letters patent dated Septemb. 15, 1683; and to the sees of Limerick, Ardfert, and Aghadoe, January 20, 1691: he was consecrated May 8, 1692, and enthroned July 27 following. He died on the third of November 1695. His death was occasioned by a fall from his horse; for in a letter to his brother Samuel Wilson dated the 29th of October before his death, which is proved in the prerogative office, as a part of his will, he mentioneth the fall; and that it had occasioned a driness in his head, which might produce disorders and carry him off.
 His will is dated on the 8th of April 1692, before his consecration; and therein he stiles himself elect bishop.⁵]

 “Hall curate of King's-Norton, became scholar of “Pembr. coll. under the tuition of his uncle Edm.
 “Hall in 1647, submitted to the authority of the “visitors soon after, educated there among presby“terians and independents, and acted as they did,
 “took the degrees in arts, that of master being com“pleted in 1653, and afterwards became a preacher
 “in those parts, but whether he was ordained by a “bishop till the king's restoration I cannot tell.
 “After his majesty's restoration he submitted to “him, took the oaths of allegiance and supremacy “which he had not done before, and upon the re“moval of Henr. Wightwick master of Pembr. coll.
 “he succeeded him in that office in the latter end
 “of Dec. 1664. Afterwards he took the degrees “in divinity, that of doctor being completed in “1669, at which time, as before, he was rector of “S. Aldate's church joyning to his coll. and much “frequented for his edifying way of preaching by “the precise people, and scholars of Oxon. On “the 24th of May 1676 he was elected Margaret “professor of this university, upon the promotion
 “and consecration of Dr. Barlow to the see of Lin“coln, and about the 12th of June, an. 1691, being “nominated to succeed Dr. Ironside in the see of “Bristol, was consecrated thereunto in the church “of S. Mary-le-Bow in London, on the 30th of “Aug. the same year, with liberty then allow'd him
 “to keep his mastership of Pembr. coll. and his

ATHENÆ OXONIENSES.

(In the following Index, the CAPITAL LETTERS refer to the names of every Person, whose Life appears in the body of the work, to which is added the date of his death, or the period during which he flourished. This plan has been adopted in order to prevent the inconvenience felt by all, who have had occasion to consult the old edition, where it was oftentimes necessary to turn to many parts of the volume, before the page containing the life of the writer could be ascertained.)

- Page xxiv, line 18, for byy, read buy.
 xcv, line 23, Bullard. So Wood, who should have said Ballard. It was John Ballard of New College, who was B. C. L. May 2, 1682; M. A. July 4, 1682; B. M. July 3, 1685; D. M. Dec. 7, 1688.
 cxxxvi, note 2, line 27, for animi, read animum.
 Col. 21, line 14, for cathedral, read chapel of St. Stephen.
 26, note 5, line 9, for partem, read partim.
 38, line 42, for regione, read regionem.
 56, note 6, for prothonatis, read protouatis.
 59, line 17, for cardinalia consilijs, read cardinali a consilijs.
 73, note 2, for 1532, read 1474. The passage should have been printed thus: Dugdale says he was seven years of age at the death of his grandfather in 1474, which makes him sixty-five years old, at his decease in 1532.
 83, line 15, At length comes sir George Buck, &c. This is an error of Wood's: The History of King Richard the third, was written above twenty years after the decease of sir George Buck, by George Buck, esquire, who was probably son of the knight. See Malone's Historical Account of the English Stage, prefixed to Shakspeare, edit. 1803, vol. 3, p. 60, note 8.
 89, note 4, for into Greek, read from the Greek.
 97, article ERASMUS, line 6, for 1647, read 1467.
 106, line 44, for Shepreve Epicedion, read Shepreve's Epicedion.
 118, note 5, for professoris, read professores.
 141, line 13, for to the prebend of St. Stephen, read preferred to a prebend in St. Stephen's, Westminster.
 144, line 17, for Diaiosia-Martyrion, read Diacosio-Martyrion.
 147, line 34, dele in.
 163, line 27, buried in the church of Wooburne in Bedfordshire. Mr. Archdeacon Churton (whose accuracy is only exceeded by the very friendly manner in which he communicates his valuable information) writes to me, as follows: "I have little doubt it should be Bishop's Woburn, Bucks, where the bishops of Lincoln had a palace. It is near Marlow, about a mile and an half from the London road, beyond High Wycombe. The bell given to Woburn confirms it, and his burial at Eton, about ten miles from this Woburn."
 166, line 16, for 4to 18, read 4to 1800.
 190, line 1, Hales Owen in Worcestershire. So Wood, but he should have said, in Shropshire. It is an insulated part of that county, surrounded by Worcestershire.
 202, line 43, for all that, read all who.

- Col. 207, note 2, line 2, for who, read whom.
 212, note 3, line 2, for were, read was.
 219, note 7, for all the wries, read all he writes.
 224, line 17, insert 1554 in the margin.
 224, note 10, line 2, for duke's victory, read duke's victory in Scotland.
 240, line 26, for Stumius, read Sturmius.
 301, note 5, dele the] in the middle of the note.
 302, note 8, dele This seems to be a mistake, for canon and prebendary in St. Paul's are the same; and Wood does not mean that Lilye was a residentiary.
 326, note 5, for Pendillon, read Pendilton.
 337, in the margin, for 63, read 1563.
 359, in the margin, for 156, read 1567.

THIRD EDITION, WITH ADDITIONS.

LIBRARY

FASTI OXONIENSES.

AN. DOM. 1641. 17 CAR. 1.

THE chancellor of the university this year, was Dr. WILL. LAUD archb. of Canterbury; but he being accused of divers capital crimes in both houses of parliament, and thereupon committed first to private custody, and afterwards to the Tower of London, he made a resignation on the 22d of June of all authority and academical administration belonging to him in the university. Which resignation under his hand and seal, he sent with his letter of the 25th of the said month to Oxford, giving therein very great tokens, in a lamenting manner, of his love and affection to the university. Both which being received, they were, after a new chancellor had been elected, answer'd with great affection and piety. On the first of July following, the said resignation being published in convocation, PHILIP HERBERT earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, &c. high steward of the university, was then elected chancellor, and on the eighth of the said month was installed in his house called Baynards-castle in London.

Vicechancellor.

The vicechancellor of the university this year was JOHN PRIDEAUX D. D. rector of Exeter coll. design'd by the new chancellor Oct. 7, and soon after became bishop of Worcester. But now hierarchy daily declining and bishops not only ejected from the number of peers in parliament, but also divers ecclesiastical persons deprived of acting in secular affairs as aliens from their profession; this our worthy vice-chancellor both a spiritual and a temporal judge next to the chanc. in academical causes, being thereupon thought not fit (at least with safety) to execute his office; the chanc. by his letters dated the 2d of Mar. this year, appointed a laical person named GILES SWEIT, LL. D. his commissary or deputy to supply his turn in the courts of civil affairs of the university. Which office, tho' it was for some time performed by him, (such were the times that required it) yet the like example we never before, or since, had.

who was the son of an eminent divine named Will. Crashaw, was educated in grammar learning in Sutton's-hospital called the Charter-house near to London, and in academical, partly in Pemb. hall of which he was scholar, and afterwards in Peter house of which he was fellow; where, as in the former house, his admirable faculty in Latin and English poetry was well known. Afterwards he was master of arts, in which degree, 'tis probable, he was incorporated: But being soon after thrown out of his fellowship, as many others of the said university of Cambridge were, for denying the covenant in the time of the rebellion, he was for a time put to his shifts. At length upon an infallible foresight that the church of England would be quite ruined by the unlimited fury of the presbyterians, he changed his religion and went beyond the seas, and took up his abode for a time in the great city of Paris: But being a meer scholar and very shiftless, Mr. Abr. Cowley the poet, did, upon intimation of his being there, find him out in a sorry condition, an. 1646, or thereabouts. Whereupon exhibiting to him, as much as lay in his power, for the present, did afterwards obtain for him letters of commendation from Henrietta Maria queen of England, then in those parts, and some relief. Afterwards he journed into Italy, and by virtue of those letters he became⁶ secretary to a cardinal in Rome, and at length one of the canons or chaplains of the rich church of our lady at Loretto some miles distant from thence, where he died and was buried about 1650. Before he left England he wrote certain poems, which were entit. Steps to the Temple, because in the temple of God, under his wing, he led his life, in St. Mary's church near to Peter house before-mention'd. There, as 'tis⁷ said, he lodged under Tertullian's roof of angels. There he made his nest more gladly than David's swallow near the house of God, where like a primitive saint he offer'd more prayers in the night, than others usually offer in the day. There he pen'd the said poems called Steps to the Temple for happy souls to climb heaven by. To the said Steps are joined other poems entit. The Delights of the Muses, wherein are several Latin poems; which tho' of a more humane mixture, yet they are sweet, as they are innocent. He hath also written Carmen Deo nostro, being hymns and other sacred poems, addressed to the countess of Denbigh. He was excellent in five languages, besides the mother tongue, viz. in Hebrew, Greek, Latin, Italian, and Spanish; the two last whereof tho' he had little use, yet he had the knowledge of them, &c.

Creations.

NOV. 18. JAMES CASAUBON of Exeter coll. was actually created master of arts, which is all I know of him, only that he studied for some time in that house for the sake of the rector Dr. Prideaux, meerly to advance himself in the knowledge of divinity.

This year was a student and sojourner in the university for the sake of the Bodleian library one FABIAN PHILIPPS of the Middle-Temple barrister, who some years before, in times of vacation, had also studied there, under the title of 'juris studiosus.'—This person who was eminent in his time, considering that his parts were never advanc'd, when young, by academical education, was born at Prestbury in Gloucestershire on the eve of St. Michael, an. 1601. His father was Andrew Philipps of an ancient family in Herefordshire, born to a good estate in Lempster and near it, and his mother was a Bagehott of a good family also and heir to one of her brothers. When he was very young he spent some time in one of the inns of Chancery, and thence translated himself to the Middle-Temple, where, by his assiduity and continual lucubration, accompanied with a happy memory, he became a proficient in some sorts of learning, and at length a great lover and adorer, and well vers'd in some parts, of, and in, ven. antiquity. He was always a zealous assertor of the king's prerogative, and so passionate a lover of king Charles I. that two days before he was beheaded he wrote a Protestation against his intended Murder, which he printed and caused to be put on posts and in all common places. He was afterwards, if not before, Philazer for London, Middlesex, Cambridgeshire and Huntingdonshire, and did spend much money in searching and writing for the asserting of the king's prerogative, yet got nothing by it, only the employment of one of the commissioners appointed for the regulation of the law, worth 200*l.* per an. which lasted only for two years. Among many things that this worthy person hath written are these. (1) "K. Ch. I. no Man of Blood but a Martyr for his People, &c. Lond. 1619. qu. Dr. Barlow saith 'twas writ by a lawyer, as indeed it was (viz.) by this Fabian Philipps. (2) "Considerations against the dissolving and taking away the Court of Chancery and the Courts of Justice at Westminster, &c. Lond. 1653. Written when all the courts of justice in Westminster hall were voted down by the Little, called by some, Barebones, parliament; for which he had the thanks of Lenthall the speaker, and keepers of the liberties of England. (3) "Tenenda non tollenda; or the Necessity of preserving Tenures in Capite by Knight's Service, &c. Lond. 1660. (4) "Restoranda, or the Necessity of public Repairs, by settling of a constant and royal yearly Revenue for the King, &c. Lond. 1662. qu. (5) "The Antiquity, Legality, Reason, Duty and Necessity of Præemption and Pourveyances for the King; or Compositions for his Conveyance, &c. Lond. 1663. (6) "The Antiquity and Legality of Fines upon original Writs in Chancery, &c. Ibid. 1663. (7) "The mistaken Recompence by the Excise for Pourveyance and Tenures, &c. Ibid. 1664. (8) "A perspective Glass: or some Reasons against the registering Reformation, &c. Ibid. 1669. (9) "A reforming Registry: or a Representation of the very many Mischiefs which will unavoidably happen by the needless, chargeable and destructive Way of Registries, proposed to be erected in every County of Eng. and Wales, for the Recording of all Deeds, Evidences, Mortgages, &c. Ibid. 1671. qu. &c. (10) "Ligantia lugens: or Loyalty bewailing the Want of Pourveyance and Tenures. (11) "Some Reasons for the Continuance of the Process of Arrest. Ib. 1671. qu. (12) "Regale necessarium: or the Legality, Reason and Necessity of the Rights and Privileges justly claimed by the King's Servants, &c. Ib. 1671. qu. (13) "The ancient, legal, fundamental and necessary Rights of Courts of Justice, in their Writs of Capias, Arrests and Process of Outlawry, and the Illegality, many Mischiefs and Inconveniences which may arrive to the People of England, by the Proposals tender'd to his Majesty and high Court of Parl. for the Abolishing of that old and better Way and Method of Justice, and the establishing of a new by peremptory Summons and Citations in Actions of Debt. Lond. 1676-77. (14) "Reasons against the taking away the Process of Arrest, which would be a Loss to the King's Revenue, &c. Ibid. 1675. (15) "Necessary Defence of the Presidentship and Council in the Principality and Marches of Wales, in the necessary Defence of England and Wales protecting each other. (16) "*Ursa Major & Minor. (19) Legale necessarium. Or a true and faithful Account of the Antiquity and Legality of his Majesty's and our King's and Prince's Rights of and unto Fines and Amerciaments imposed and forfeited in his Courts of Justice, &c. He hath also written—Veritas inconcussa: or that K. Ch. I. was no Man of Blood but a Martyr for his People. Lond. 1660. oct. and other things not yet printed.⁸ At length having lived to a great age, he surrendered up his soul to God on the 17th of Nov. 1690, and was buried near to the body of his wife, in the south west part of the church of Twyford near to Acton in Middlesex. Some years before he died he made his own epitaph, which begins thus, MS. Fabiani Philipps Armigeri, Medii Templi socii, qui quosdam perfidos & ingratos nimium amicos amando, seipsum non uti potuit, amavit, curis librisq; consenuit, &c. But whether it is put over his grave I know not.

"This year resided in this university NICH. HEINSIUS a Hollander, son of the famous Dan. Heinsius who was born in 1620,⁹ composuit notas eruditissimas in Ovidium & Claudianum; extant quoque ejus carmina, promisit etiam notas in fragmentum Petronii Traguriense.

"JOH. ZORGA M.A. and a gentleman of Denmark, was a sojourner in the university, and a student in the public library in the beginning of 1641. This gent. who was born in 1608, and bred at Copenhagen, hath written De Purgatorio & Causâ Peccati.¹⁰"

Vicechancellors, &c.

The year of vicechancellorship of Dr. Prideaux bishop of Worcester being ended, and he about the feast of St. John Bapt. not only quitting all right therein, without laying down the ensigns of his office as the manner is, but rather leaving the university abruptly, as the advantage of time offer'd; the office for some time lay void, and nothing of it was done but by deputies. The which for what reason it so hapned, is perhaps at this time too great a trouble for me to tell. For now the university, the mother of togated peace, being affrighted with the unwonted rumours of a civil war, the muses deserted, and the adorers of them every where dispersed, knew not (as if put between the anvil and the hammer) which way to turn it self, or seek rest. The administration therefore of its government, was successively according to the manner of our predecessors, committed to deputies, of whom the first was DR. ROB. PINK warden of New coll. who for his loyalty in raising and setting the university militia for the defence of it from the common incursions of the enemy, and for endeavouring to make the citizens provide also men and arms for the defence of their city, they being then backward in so doing, he was afterwards treacherously seized on at Aylesbury, carried to Westminster and committed prisoner to the Gatehouse there, about the 12th of Sept. After him DR. TOLSON provost of Oriel² succeeded as pro-vicechancellor, continuing in the said office (none, as I think, intervening) till the 7th of Feb. following; a little before which time he being nominated by the chancellor's letters sent to the university, was on the same day, in a convocation then held, sworn and admitted vicechancellor by the consent of the doctors and masters then present.

His majesty Charles I. had then, after his return from Edghill fight, taken up his quarters in Oxon, and on the same day was a great creation in all faculties, as I shall tell you by and by.

Dec. 7. WILL. HARVEY sometimes of Caius coll. in Cambridge, afterwards doctor of phys. of the univ. of Padua, and at his return into England, of Cambridge, was then incorporated doctor of the said faculty in this university.—This person, who was son of Tho. Harvey gent. by Joan Halke his wife, was born at Folkston in Kent on the second day of Apr. 1578, sent to a grammar school in Canterbury at 10 years of age, and at 14 to Gonvil and Caius coll. in Cambr.⁴ At 19 years of age he travelled into France and Italy, and at 23 he had for his instructors in medicine at Padua Eustac. Radius, Joh. Tho. Minadous and H. Faber ab Aquapend. At 24 he became doct. of phys. and chirurgery, and returning into England soon after, he practised phys. in London and married. At 25, or thereabouts, he was made fellow of the coll. of phys. at London, and at 37, professor of anatomy and chirurgery: about which time (which was in the year of our Lord 1615) he discover'd the wonderful secret of the blood's circular motion, by which the anatomical part of physick seemed then to be rising towards the zenith of perfection. At 54 years of age he was made physician to king Charles I. (having, as 'tis said by some, been physician to king James I.⁵) and adhering to him in the beginning of the troubles, he attended him at Edghill battel. Thence going with him to Oxon, was there incorporated, as before 'tis told you. In 1645 he was elected warden of Merton coll. by virtue of the king's letters sent to the society of that house for that purpose, but in the year following, when Oxford garrison was surrendered for the use of the parliament, he left that office and retired to London. In 1654 he was chosen president of the coll. of physicians, but refused to accept of that honourable place: and after he had lived to see his doctrin (the circulation of the blood) with much ado established, (being the only man as one⁶ saith that did so) he surrendered up his soul to him that gave it, on the 30th of June an. 1657. Soon after his body being lap'd up in lead, it was conveyed to Hempsted in Essex, and deposited in a vault under part of the church there. Several monuments of his learning, which have been, and are, received into the hands of all curious men, as well abroad as at home, are extant, as the Oxford or Bodleian Catalogue will partly tell you; (besides his *New Principles of Philosophy, containing Philosophy in general, Metaphysics, &c.*⁷) but more in MS. he hath left behind him; the titles of which you may see in the epist. dedicat. before An historical Account of the Colleges (coll. of phys.) Proceedings against Empyricks, &c. Lond. 1684, qu. Creations.

After the battel at Edghill in Warwickshire between his majesty's forces and those belonging to the parliament, the king retired to Oxon, and settling for a time in Ch. Ch. it was his pleasure that there should be a creation in all faculties of such that had either done him service in the said battel, or had retired to him at Oxon for shelter to avoid the barbarities of the presbyterians then very frequent throughout the nation. Some called this creation The Caroline Creation.

Batchelors of Arts.

From the first of Nov. to the 16th of Jan. were about 35 young students actually created batchelors of arts, in the head of whom was

THO. WOOD or A WOOD of Ch. Ch. Nov. 1.—This person, when he heard that the forces belonging to the king and parliament were drawing up to fight each other at Edghill, threw off his gown, ran thither, did his majesty good service, returned on horseback well accoutred, and afterwards was made an officer. See more among the creations 1647. The next that follow are these,

MATTHEW SKINNER of Trin. coll. son of Dr. Rob. Skinner bishop of Oxon.—He was afterwards doct. of phys.

WILL. SLATER.

HEN. DUDLEY, &c.

Dec. 20. CONWAY WHITTERNE of Pembr. coll.—He was afterwards captain of a foot company in his maj. service.

Jan. 16. HEN. BERKLEY of Oriel coll. a younger son of sir Hen. Berkley of Yarlington in Somersetshire knight.

WILL. NORRYS of Pembr. coll. was created about that time.—He was afterwards a cornet in the lord Hopton's army, &c.

Batchelors of Law.

From the 1st of Nov. to the 16th of Jan. were actually created 15 batchelors, at least, of the civil law, of whom JOHN SUTTON, GEORGE WALKER, WILL. BIRKENHEAD and RICH. BLOME son of Joh. Blome of Brecknockshire gent. were of the number. Which last I here set down, not that he was a man of note, but only to distinguish him from one of both his names, who was originally a ruler of paper, and now a scribbler of books. See in the second vol. col. 298.

I find also to be created batch. of the civil law, an inhabitant of St. Aldate's parish in Oxon called JOHN HOLLOWAY official to the archdeacon and registry, of Berkshire: which John was father to Rich. Holloway sometimes fellow of New coll. and afterwards a counsellor of the Inner Temple, and a person for several years well reputed in these parts for his upright dealing in his profession. To which I must add, that in 1677 he was by writ called to be serjeant at law, and in 1683 he was knighted and made one of the justices of the King's Bench in the place of just. Thom. Raymond. In the beginning of July 1688 he and sir Joh. Powell another just. of the same bench, did receive their quietus from king Jam.

II. because they had a little before given in their minds and opinions to the jury in the court of the King's Bench at Westm. at which time they were two of the four judges in the proceedings and tryal in the case of William archb. of Cant. and six bishops, that 'the petition of the said archb. and bishops to his maj. wherein they shewed the great aversness they found in themselves to the distributing and publishing in all their churches his majesty's then late declaration for liberty of conscience,' &c. was not libellous or seditious, as sir Rob. Wright lord chief justice, and just. Rich. Allebone the other two judges did. Which act of justice Holloway being much applauded by the true sons of the church of England, yet for other matters he was one of those many persons that were excepted out of the act of indemnity or pardon of their majesties king William 3. and qu. Mary, dated 23 May 1690.

Masters of Arts.

From the first day of Nov. to the 21st of Feb. were more than an hundred and forty masters actually created, of which number were these following,

NOV. 1. JAMES DUKE OF YORK.—He was afterwards king of England by the name of king James the 2d.

Dom. HENR. HOWARD.

THO. BOSVILLE or BOSWELL a Kentish man (of Aynsford, I think) and a colonel in the king's army.—One Tho. Boswell who had been knighted by his maj. at Durham in the beginning of May 1642. was buried at St. Mary's church in Oxford 25 Oct. 1643. Whether he was the same who was created master of arts, or the same sir Tho. Boswell who had a daughter named Isabel the wife of Tho. Gifford doct. of phys. before-mention'd, I cannot justly tell.

GEORGE MANWARING an officer in the king's army.

[8] WILL. DUGDALE † one of the officers of arms called Rougecroix, now (1642) lodging in Hart hall.—This noted person, who was son of John Dugdale, son of James Dugdale of Cletherow in Lancashire gent. was born at Shustock in the county of Warwick, on the 12th of Sept. 1605 (3 Jac. I.) at which time was a swarm of bees in his father's garden, then esteemed by some a happy presage on the behalf of the babe. This accident being many years after related by Mr. Will. Dugdale to the famous figure-flinger Will. Lilly, he thereupon very readily told him that that swarm of bees did foretell that the infant should in time prove a prodigy of industry, &c. But the reader is to know, that the said Lilly told him the said Will. Dugdale so, after most of his industry was made public. His first education in grammar-learning was under one Thom. Sibley curate of Nether Whitacre near to Shustock before-mention'd, with whom continuing till he came to ten years of age or more, was afterwards sent to the free-school at Coventry then presided by one James Cranford, father of James Cranford, mention'd among the writers, under the year 1657. After he had continued in the said school till he was almost 15 years of age, he was taken home by his father, from whom he received instructions in reading that noted law-book called Littleton's Tenures, and some others of that profession, besides history: In all which he soon after, by his indefatigable industry, became well vers'd. In the latter end of 1622 (his father being then grown infirm) he took him a wife, and in 1625 (1 Car. I.) his said father being then dead, he purchased the manor of Blythe in the parish of Shustock: at which place settling soon after, he composed most of his books, particularly that of The Antiquities of Warwickshire illustrated. His natural inclination tending then chiefly to the study of antiquities and history, he was not a little encouraged thereto by one Sam. Roper a barrister of Lincoln's inn, much esteemed for his knowledge and abilities in those studies: with whom (by reason he was cousin-german to Rich. Seawell who had married his sister) he had first acquaintance about the year 1618, and with whom he afterwards many times conversed. After Mr. Dugdale was settled at Blythe commonly called Blythe hall, because situated on the river Blythe, he read The Description of Leicestershire, written and published by Will. Burton of Lindley in that county esquire, (about 8 miles distant from Blythe hall) with which being much taken, and thereby encouraged to do something of that nature for Warwickshire, he was introduced into his acquaintance by one Mr. Fisher Dilke of Shustock, a near kinsman of the said Mr. Burton, to the end that he might receive instructions for the management and promotion of his studies. Mr. Burton being very much taken with the forwardness of the young man in his most early attempts, he was resolved to encourage him in his labours to the utmost of his power. Whereupon he brought him into the acquaintance of sir Sim. Archer of Umberslade in the parish of Tamworth in the said county of Warwick knight; who being much affected with the studies of heraldry and antiquities, and having made very choice and considerable collections out of divers antient writings relating to the said county, and the families thereof, he did not only communicate to him what he had got together, but brought him acquainted with most of the gentlemen of note in the county. These gentlemen having perused the labours of Mr. Burton before-mention'd, were thereupon desirous thro' sir Sim. Archer's incitation, to preserve the honour of their families by such a work, as the said Mr. Burton had done for Leicestershire; and for that purpose they would (as afterwards they did) communicate to him the sight of their antient deeds and evidences. Among the said gentlemen, he found none more knowing in, and forward to encourage such a work, than sir Sim. Clarke of Brome-court in the parish of Salford, who with all freedom imparted to him not only divers antient writings of consequence, but also the leiger-book of the priory of Kenilworth, from which he found copious matter, as by his frequent quotation of it in The Antiquities of Warwicksh. it appears. The acquaintance of the said three persons, Burton, Clarke, and Archer, he endeavoured to continue with all observance imaginable, especially with the last, which began about 1630; but so it fell out that our author Dugdale could not be more forward to continue, than sir S. Archer was to promote, it, and withall, to encourage him in his great designs; which did evidently afterwards appear, as the sequel will tell you. In Easter term 1638 sir Simon with his lady intended to go to London, and thereupon importun'd Mr. Dugdale to accompany them in that journey, assuring him that it would be worth his labour if he could spare so much time from his beloved study. This being easily assented to, they had several discourses in their way for the promotion of his designs; and when they were at their journeys end, the first matter that sir Simon did, he brought our author Dugdale into the acquaintance of the learned sir Hen. Spelman, a person famous for his knowledge in antiquities, but then near 80 years of age. This worthy knight received him with great humanity, and after some discourse and sight of several of his collections relating to The Antiquities of Warwickshire, he found that he was a great proficient, and had made a considerable progress in those studies; and then told him, that seeing he was a per-

[9] son so much inclined to that learning, he thought him very fit to serve the king in the office of arms, and that the most noble Thomas earl of Arundel, then earl marshal of England, having, by virtue of that great office, the nomination of all such as were admitted into that society, would esteem it a good service to the public, to prefer such thereunto, as were thus naturally qualified and found sedulous in those studies; offering to recommend Mr. Dugdale to his lordship for that purpose. Soon after sir Henry having acquainted his lordship of him and his fitness for the office, he was introduced into the presence of that honourable person by sir George Gresley of Drakelow in Derbyshire baronet, who was then in London, and well known to his lordship. During Mr. Dugdale's stay in London, he repaired sometimes to the lodging of sir Hen. Spelman, who among several discourses concerning their faculty, told him that one Roger Dodsworth a gent. of Yorkshire had taken indefatigable pains in searching of records and other antient memorials relating to the antiquities of that county, but especially touching the foundations of monasteries there, and in the northern parts of the realm: which work he did not a little commend to the pains and care of some industrious and diligent searchers into hidden antiquity; affirming, that out of his great affection thereto, in his younger years, he had got together transcripts of the foundation charters of divers monasteries in Norfolk and Suffolk, (himself being a Norfolk man) much impertuning Mr. Dugdale to joyn with Dodsworth in that most commendable work, which, by reason of his youth and forwardness to prosecute those studies, might in time be brought to some perfection, as Mr. Dugdale hath informed me by his letters, adding withall, that he the said Mr. Dugd. did readily incline, and within few days following casually meeting with Mr. Dodsworth in the lodgings of Mr. Sam. Roper at Line. inn, and acquainting each other what they were in hand with, as to their farther progress in those studies, they readily engaged themselves to prosecute what transcripts they could from any leiger books, public records, original charters, or other manuscripts of note in order thereto; but still with this reservation, that Mr. Dugdale should not neglect his collections touching The Antiq. of Warwickshire; wherein he had by that time made a considerable progress. During his stay in London, he became acquainted with one Rich. Gascoigne a Yorkshire gentleman, who also stood much affected to those studies, especially as to matter of pedigree, wherein he had taken some pains for divers northern families, especially for that noble and antient family of Wentworth: and having great interest with sir Christoph. Hatton of Kirby in the county of Northampton knight of the Bath, (afterwards created lord Hatton) a person highly affected to antiquities, and who had not spared for any charge in obtaining sundry choice collections from public records, leiger books, and antient charters and divers old MSS, he brought him to that most worthy person, (then lodging in an apothecary's house without Temple-bar) by whom he was welcomed with all expressions of kindness, and readiness in furthering his studies. In order thereunto he soon after brought him acquainted with his near kinsman sir Tho. Fanshaw at that time the king's remembrancer in the exchequer: by reason of which great office he had the custody of divers leiger-books and other choice manuscripts, especially that notable record called the Red-Book, as also Testa de Nevill, Kerby's Quest, Nomina Villarum and others; to all which, by his favour, he had free access. Nor was he less carefull to obtain the like access for him to the records in the Tower of London, by his interest with old Mr. Collet, the chief clerk at that time there under sir John Burroughs; whom he amply rewarded with sundry kinds of gratuities for his friendliness in assisting Mr. Dugdale with what he thought proper for his purpose, from those rarities there reposed. He also about that time was introduced by the said Mr. Roper into the acquaintance of sir Tho. Cotton baronet, whereby he had free access to that incomparable library in his house near Westminster hall, began and set up by his father that noted antiquary sir Rob. Cotton baronet, where finding rare MSS, and original charters in that incomparable treasury, made such collections thence as were of singular use in several volumes, which have since been made public by the press. He was likewise introduced by the said Mr. Roper into the acquaintance of Mr. Scipio Squire then one of the vice-chamberlains of the exchequer, thro' whose kindness and favour he had access to that venerable record called Domesday Book, as also to the Fines, Plea-Rolls, and sundry other records remaining in the treasury there. Nor was sir Christo. Hatton backward in giving him all possible encouragement in those his studies: for having seconded sir H. Spelman in recommending him to the earl of Arundel, that earl sent for him in Sept. following (an. 1638,) and obtained the king's warrant to create him a pursuivant at arms extraordinary, by the title of Blanch Lyon, and thereupon so created him at the king's royal palace of Richmond in Surrey upon the 24th of that instant Sept. Also upon the removal of Mr. Edw. Walker then pursuivant called Rouge-Croix to the office of Chester herald, his lordship obtained his majesty's letters pat. for creating him Rouge-Croix pursuivant in ordinary, bearing date the 18th of Mar. 1639. By which means having a lodging in the heralds-office, and some benefit by funerals and other ways, with the yearly salary of 20*l.* out of the king's exchequer for his support, he thenceforth spent the greatest part of his time in London, in order to the augmenting his collections out of the records in the Tower and other places in and near the said city, till by the influence of a very forward and predominant party in the most unhappy parliament, that began at Westm. 3 Nov. 1640, which * "being " tainted with puritanical and antimono-

" narchical principles, took away the life
" of that most prudent and loyal Tho.
" earl of Strafford lord lieutenant of Ire" land, imprison'd the most rev. Will.
" Laud archb. of Cant. notwithstanding " all specious pretences of loyalty to his majesty, main" tenance of the religion by law established, liberty of the " subject, privileges of parliament, and what not; so that
" by these their beginnings, it was an easy matter, especially " to observing men, to foresee what was afterwards accom-" plish'd by the grand contrivers of that most fatal conven" tion, viz." the subversion of religion established, and unjustifiable extirpation of monarchic government, nothing less could be expected than the profaning of all places of God's public worship, destruction of monuments, defacing of churches, and whatever was beautiful or ornamental therein, the said Mr. Dugd. therefore receiving encouragement from sir Chr. Hatton before-mention'd, then a member of the house of commons for Higham-Ferrers in Northamptonsh. who timely foresaw the near approaching storm, did in the summer time 1641 (taking with him one Will. Sedgwick a skilful arms-painter) repair first to the cathedral of St. Paul within the city of London and next to the abbey church of Westminster, and there made exact draughts of all the monuments in each of them, copied the epitaphs according to the very letter; as also of all arms in the windows or cut in stone: all which being done with great exactness, Mr. Dug-dale rode to Peterborough in Northamptonshire, Ely, Norwich, Lincoln, Newark upon Trent, Beverley, Southwell, Kingston upon Hull, York, Selby, Chester, Litchfield, Tamworth, Warwick, and did the like in all those cathedral, collegiate, conventual and divers other parochial churches, wherein any tombs and monuments were to be found, to the end that the memory of them (in case if that ruin then imminent might come to pass) might be preserved for future and better times. As it was feared, so it soon after fell out, all things thro' the influence of the predominant party in that "unhappy" parliament, looking every day more and more that way, insomuch as in the middle of January following the king himself, his queen and royal issue, forc'd by tumults "countenanced by those mighty masters of mischief," were constrained to betake themselves for safety to other places, viz. the king, prince and duke of York unto the city of York, and the queen unto her own relations in France. His majesty being therefore necessitated at that time to continue in those northern parts, where many of the nobility attended him, he did by his warrant under his royal signet manual, bearing date 1 June 1642, command the said Mr. Dugdale forthwith to repair thither to him according to the duty of his place. Upon the reception of which he obeyed, and continued at York till about the middle of July, at which time he received his majesty's farther command to attend Spencer earl of Northampton then lord lieutenant of the county of Warwick, who was then endeavouring to secure the chief places of that county and near it, and to disperse the forces under the lord Brook, which he had gathered together for the parliament, by the trained-band soldiers and other loyal persons under him. But they having secured the castles of Banbury and Warwick, Mr. Dugdale did (by command from his maj. who was advised at York of their proceedings) in his coat of arms, with a trumpet sounding before him, repair to those castles, and required them to disband and to deliver up their arms, requiring also the said lord Brook and his adherents to disband, &c. Accordingly the castle of Banbury, with all the arms and ammunition therein were delivered up, but the castle of Warwick being a place of more strength and defended by a greater number of soldiers, under the command of sir Edw. Peto of Chesterton in that county knight, they did "most rebelliously" condemn the said summons, &c. Afterwards when the king marched southward from York, and had taken up his quarters for some time at Stonley-house about 4 miles distant from Coventry, on the 19th of Aug. 1642, Mr. Dugdale did, by his majesty's special warrant dated the next day, summon the said city of Coventry, (a little before taken in "by certain schismatics" for the use of the parliament) with his coat bearing the king's arms thereon, and a trumpet sounding before him, to the end that the defenders deliver up their arms to his majesty, and depart peaceably to their respective homes, &c. but they obstinately denying his summons, he proclaimed them traitors, and forthwith returned. Afterwards he attended the king at Kineton commonly called Edghill in Warwickshire, where the grand battle between him and his army and that belonging to the parliament was fought on the 23d of Oct. 1642. Which battle being finished and the royal party victorious, he attended his maj. to Oxon, and thence to Reading and Brainford, his maj. intending for London; but finding the power of the rebels much recruited by the inhabitants of that populous city, he did, after some skirmishes had at Brainford (where the royal party took many prisoners) return to Oxford, fix his chief residence there, and fortified that city with bulwarks for the better security thereof. So that Mr. Dugdale being bound by his place to attend his majesty, he settled for a time in Hart hall, and on the 1st of Nov. 1642 he was actually created master of arts, as I have before told you. About that time he committed to writing the most memorable passages in the battle at Edghill: and that the relation of all particulars might be the better understood, he went to that place in Feb. following, being accompanied with some gentlemen of note. At which time taking with him a skilful surveyor, he rode to Banbury (the castle there being then his majesty's garrison) and thence to the field where the battle was fought, which he exactly surveyed, and noted where each army was drawn up, where the canons were placed, and the graves where the slain persons were buried; observing also from the relation of the neighbouring inhabitants the certain number which lay buried in each pit or grave: which by a just computation did not amount to full one thousand, tho' the report of the vulgar made them at least five thousand. Returning thence to Oxford, he continued there by his majesty's command until the surrender of that garrison for the use of the parliament, 24 June 1646, which wanted not 4 months of 4 years, (his estate in the country being all that while sequestered) in which time he notwithstanding got a subsistence by attending the funerals of several noble persons and of others of great quality (some of which were slain in the wars) according to the duty of his office. On the 16th of Apr. 1644 he was created Chester herald, upon the promotion of sir Edw. Walker to be Norroy, and soon after he took a journey to Worcester, within which diocese the southern parts of Warwickshire lye: where, having perusal of the registers both of the bishop and dean and chapter, he thence extracted several collections, in order to his historical work of Warwickshire, as he before had done at Litchfield (within which diocese the rest of the said county lies) as by the quotations in the elaborate work of The Antiq. of Warwicksh. (afterwards made public,) it appears. While he continued in Oxon, where he had leisure enough to follow his studies, he applied himself to the search of such antiquities as were to be found in the famous Bodleian library, as also in the libraries of certain colleges, and in private hands, as he thought any way conducing to the furtherance of the work design'd by Rog. Dodsworth and himself touching the monastery-foundations before-mentioned; as also of whatsoever might relate to matter of history in reference to the nobility of this kingdom: in which he found very much for that purpose, whereof he made great use in his volumes entit. The Baronage of England, since published. After the surrender of Oxford, Mr. Dugdale repaired to London and made his composition in Goldsmiths-hall for at least 1687. After which having proceeded very far in collecting materials in the country for his designed work of Warwickshire, he repaired again to London for the farther perusal of the records in the Tower and other places, and there perfected his collection touching the antiquities of that county, where hapning to meet with Mr. Dodsworth, he told him how he had bestowed his time in Oxon and elsewhere, by gaining materials in order to that work of the monasteries, and Mr. Dodsworth did the like to him: whereby Mr. Dugd. did understand that he had transcribed many foundation-charters and other grants of consequence, relating to the monasteries of Yorkshire, and some other northern counties, which he copied for the most part from the originals remaining in sundry large chests deposited in St. Mary's tower at York. This tower, with all such evidences therein, was accidentally blown up in the war time; so that had not Mr. Dodsworth made his collections thence before that accident fell out, the loss would have been irreparable. Other matters that he collected thence are now in many volumes remaining in the Bodleian library by the gift of Thomas lord Fairfax, who also, to his great honour be it spoken, shew'd himself very generous to all such soldiers at York that could retrieve any of the said charters that were so blown up. After Mr. Dugdale's communication with Mr. Dodsworth concerning each others collections, he waited upon the lady Eliz. Hatton to Calais in the month of May 1648, there to meet with the lord Hatton her husband from Paris: which being so done, he went back with that lord thither; and making stay there about three months, he, thro' the favour of monsieur Franc. du Chesne son to the learned Andr. du Chesne deceased, had a view of divers excellent collections made by the said Andrew, relating to divers monasteries in France, Normandy, and other parts of that kingdom. Among which, discovering divers things of note touching divers religious houses in England formerly called priories aliens (which had been cells to sundry great abbeys in foreign parts) he took copies of them, of which he made good use in those volumes called Monasticon Anglicanum, afterwards published: and then returned into England, having letters of safe conduct under the sign manual and signet of the then queen of England Henrietta Maria, bearing date at St. Germans en Lay, upon the third of Aug. This so fair and industrious collection being got together by Mr. Dodsworth, as hath been observed, as also that made by Mr. Dugdale gathered out of divers leiger-books and other authentic MSS at Oxon, did encourage them to proceed in perfecting the work. Whereupon they resolved to go to the records in the Tower of London, to which having free admission, they made a perfect and thorough search, and took copies of all that they deemed most material for their work. Which being done, they retired to the Cottonian library, making the like search there, and left nothing omitted from the multitudes of leiger-books there, that might serve them in that most elaborate work. Their business being there finished, Mr. Dugdale discovered many bundles of papers of state, which were original letters and other choice memorials obtained by sir Rob. Cotton from sundry hands, some whereof were the transactions between cardinal Wolsey, Tho. Cromwell (afterwards earl of Essex) secretary Will. Paget, sir Will. Cecil lord Burleigh, secretary Francis Walsingham and others, relating as well to foreign, as domestic affairs: as also the letters and papers of Mary queen of Scots, Thomas duke of Norfolk, &c. All which Mr. Dugdale sorted methodically, both as to time and otherwise, and caused them to be bound up with clasps, and sir Tho. Cotton's arms impressed on each side of every book, with the contents in the beginning, what each book contained: all which amounted to 80 volumes, and were made useful to all lovers of historical learning. The collections of the two volumes of the monastery foundations, entit. Monast. Anglic. being thus compleated, and the publishing of them by the press, desired, an offer was made to several booksellers of the copies, upon such different terms as might have defrayed the charge of those transcripts so made from records and otherwise, as hath been observed. But the booksellers not willing to adventure on them, Mr. Dodsworth and Mr. Dugdale joined together, and hired several sums of money to defray the cost and expence of them. The care of which work, as to the printing, lay totally on Mr. Dugdale, because Mr. Dodsworth died in Lancashire about the midst of August, an. 1654, before the tenth part of the first vol. came off from the press. The first vol. being finished an. 1655, a stop was made for some years of bringing the second to the press, until the greatest part of the impression was sold, whereby money might be had to go on therewith. Mr. Dugdale therefore having with no small pains and charge finished his collections in order to his designed historical work of Warwicksh. Antiquities, and at length perfected the frame thereof, was at the whole charge of printing, and paper for publishing the same; and continued in London to correct the press himself, by reason that the ordinary correctors were not skill'd at all in the pedigrees. Which book was finished and expos'd to sale, an. 1656. In the time of his continuance in London, he casually met with one Mr. Reading a Northamptonshire gent. who had been clerk of the Nisi prius for the midland-circuit, and with whom he had been formerly acquainted. This Mr. Reading knowing Mr. Dugdale to be an indefatigable searcher into records, he friendly invited him to his house at Scriveners-hall (near Silver-street) promising to shew him divers old MSS, original charters, and other antient writings. So that he going thither accordingly, he brought forth five antient MSS in folio, which were chartularies of the lordships and lands first given to the cath. ch. of S. Paul in London. All which he freely lent, to carry with him to his house in Warwickshire till Mich. term ensuing, and then upon the restoration of them, he should have the use of as many more. But in the said term when he went to London to restore them, (whence he had extracted what he thought fit, as to any historical use) he found that Mr. Reading was dead, and had constituted one Mr. Williams a barrister of the Temple his executor. Whereupon Mr. Dugdale addressing himself to that person to desire a sight of the rest, he brought him to Scriveners-hall and there shew'd him many other manuscript-books, original charters, old rolls, and other very antient writings in bags and hampers, relating to the said cathedral of St. Paul. All which he freely lent to Mr. Dugdale (amounting to no less than ten porter's burthens) to be carried to his lodgings. Being thus in his private custody, he first bestowed pains to sort them into order, and afterwards made extracts from them of what he found historical in reference to that cath. ch. And to the end that the memory of those many antient monuments therein, which were afterwards utterly destroyed (the church also being made a horse-garrison by the usurpers) might be continued to posterity, Mr. Dugdale did by the help and favour of sundry worthy persons, who voluntarily offered to be at the charge of the plates, in which the representations were cut in brass, as also the prospects of that whole fabrie (inside and outside) accomplish the same. Further also having succinctly framed an historical narration of the first foundation and endowment of the said church, as also of the chantries, and what else was most memorable therein, or relating thereto, made it public by the press, an. 1658.

But as the longest day hath its evening, so did it at last please the omnipotent to put a period to the tyrannous actions of the said usurpers by the most miraculous restoration of king Charles 2. an. 1660, which was about 12 years after the most execrable murder of his royal father. At which time to prevent the importunity of others, who aimed at the office of Norroy king of arms, void by the promotion of sir Edw. Walker to the office of Garter (whom I shall mention by and by) sir Edw. Hyde knt. then lord chancellor, and afterwards earl of Clarendon, having seen the Antiquities of Warwickshire and the first vol. of Monasticon, did move the king on the behalf of Mr. Dugdale for the said place. Whereupon it being readily granted, there was a special warrant made under the royal signet to prepare a patent for the same: which patent, after his majesty's return, passed the great seal accordingly on the 18th of June 1660. At the same time the second vol. of Mon. Angl. was in the press, and the next year 'twas published: during the printing of which, he laboured about his historical work of Imbanking and draining the Fens and Marshes, deduced out of public records and antient MSS, at the instance of the lord Gorges and others, who were the principal adventurers in that costly and laudable undertaking for draining the great level, extending into a considerable part of the counties of Cambridge, Huntingdon, Northampton, Norfolk and Suffolk. This book was adorned with several exact maps of the parts and places so drained, and was published in 1662. Further also having been much importun'd by Dr. Sheldon archb. of Canterbury and the earl of Clarendon lord chancellor to perfect that collection began by the learned sir Hen. Spelman, for his intended second vol. of the Provincial Councils in England, Mr. Dugdale did in order thereunto make diligent search for all such materials that might be got, either out of the Cottonian library, or otherwise: which being done he made transcripts of them, and methodized the same for the press. So that the whole vol. amounting to 200 sheets in folio, all of it except 57, were totally of Mr. Dugdale's collection. It was printed in 1664, but very full of faults, occasion'd, if I am not mistaken, by the absence of the said Mr. Dugdale. Will. Sommore the antiquary of Canterbury took a great deal of pains to correct a printed copy of it, with his pen in the margin: which copy is yet remaining in the library belonging to the ch. of Canterbury. At the same time also the second part of sir Hen. Spelman's Glossary, which begins with the letter M, was brought to Mr. Dugdale to have it fitted for the press: for so it was, that sir Henry having left it very imperfect, much of it being loosely written, and in sundry bits of paper, he took pains to dispose thereof into proper order by transcribing many of those loose papers, and afterwards by marking such parts of it, for differencing the character, as needed. The first part also that had been published by sir Henry, an. 1626, was afterwards considerably augmented and corrected by its author: which also being brought to Mr. Dugdale, and by him review'd and made fit for the press, were both printed together, an. 1664. But the second part which sir H. Spelman left imperfect, as is before told you, comes far short of the first. After this, Mr. Dugdale having in many years labours in the search of records for those works already published, perused the notes that he had taken of the lord chancellors, lord treasurers, masters of Rolls, judges of all the courts in Westminster hall, king's attornies and sollicitors; as also of the serjeants at law, courts of justice and inns of court and chancery for students in that excellent profession, he compiled that historical work entit. Origines Juridiciales, adorned with exact cuts in copper plates of the arms in the windows throughout all the inns of court and serjeants-inns, which was first made public by the press, an. 1666; but the grand conflagration soon after hapning, many of the copies were burnt. Further also, he having in the course of his collections formerly made at Oxon in the time of the rebellion extracted from sundry choice MSS. divers special notes relating to antient nobility of this kingdom; and being not ignorant that those volumes of Monasticon would yield many excellent materials of that kind, he then became encouraged to go to the Tower of London, Exchequer, office of the Rolls in Chancery lane (which were the chief treasures of records) as also to the archbishop's principal registers, and registers of the prerogative court of Canterbury, of wills and testaments, dispensations for marriages, &c. Whence and out of sundry MSS. in private hands, monumental inscriptions, and other authorities, which, after the greater part of 30 years labour he had got together, he at length compiled that large work entit. The Baronage of England. In making which collections he omitted nothing of consequence which related to the foundations and endowments of the cathedral and collegiat churches in England and Wales, consisting of secular canons, as also of what else he could observe concerning those monasteries that were already published, to the end that use might be made of as additaments to those volumes: and in the year 1673 he published all those additaments, together with what he had so gathered for those cathedral and collegiat churches before specified. But the said volumes of the Baronage hanging long at the press, came not out till the year 1675 and 1676, being then and soon after taken into the hands not only of his majesty and royal issue, but also by the prime nobility of the nation. Towards the end of the said year 1676, sir Edw. Walker garter, principal king of arms, departing this mortal life at Whitehall, (Mr. Dugd. being then in Warwickshire) much dispute grew between Henry then earl of Norwich (afterwards duke of Norfolk) as earl marshal of England, and the king, for the nomination of a person, unto whom his majesty should by his letters patents make a grant of that office; the chancellor of the Garter on the king's behalf, as sovereign of that most noble order, strenuously insisting upon his majesty's right to nominate by reason that the said office of Garter was an employment meerly belonging to that order; and chiefly for attending at all installations and festivals, and performing other services unto the sovereign and knights companions thereof. The earl on his part, as earl marshal and chief superintendent of the office and officers of arms, pleading the usage of his predecessors in that honourable office of earl marshal to nominate and recommend to the king, upon the death and vacancy of any king of arms, herald or purservant, such person or persons to supply the place, as he shall think most fit and most properly qualified for that service. In which contest one sir Will. Haward knight (a person well accomplished with learning, especially in point of honour and arms) having obtained the favour of divers great men to move his majesty on his behalf, the king did thereupon much incline to, to have that office conferr'd upon, him. The earl of Norwich on the other part, accounting it no little derogation to his office of earl marshal to be refused the like privilege as his predecessors in that great place had been permitted to enjoy (for which he produced some late precedents, acknowledging, tho' he had nothing to do as to any superintendency over him as an officer of the Garter, yet, as Garter was principal king of arms, he was subordinate to his authority) did obtain the favour of the duke of York, upon this great dispute, to speak to his majesty on his behalf. The king therefore asked the said count (earl marshal) whom he had a design to nominate and recommend, he answered Mr. Dugdale; tho' tis well known he had another person (Th. Leigh Chester herald) in his eye, (against whom such objections might have been justly taken, as that he would have failed of his aim had he stuck to him) whereupon his maj. immediately replied, 'Nay then I am content.' So that the matter being thus ended, the earl marshal caused his secretary to advise Mr. Dugdale thereof by the post that night, and earnestly to press his speedy coming up to London, he then being at Blythe-hall in Warwickshire. This news did not a little surprise him, because he was so far from any thought of that office, that upon some letters from certain honourable persons ensuing sir E. Walker's death, earnestly desiring his speedy repair to London, in order to his obtaining that office, he excused himself in respect of his age, he being then 20 years older than any other officer in the coll. of arms then living, as he then told me, being then with him at Blythe-hall when those letters came to him. After serious consideration what to resolve on therein, having a far greater desire to waive it, than otherwise, as he then said, he grew fearful that his majesty so readily assenting to the earl marshal's nomination of him, should not take it well in case he did refuse what was so intended him as a favour. And doubting also the earl marshal's displeasure for not complying with him therein, did at length conclude with himself that it was by God Almighty's disposal thus cast upon him, and therefore he resolved to accept of it. So that, within few days after, repairing to London, he was welcom'd by the earl marshal with many noble expressions for his ready acceptance of his lordship's favour herein. On the 26th of Apr. 1677 was passed the patent for his office of Garter, and on Thursday the 21th of May following (being then Holy Thursday) he was solemnly created Garter in the coll. of arms by Henry earl of Peterborough, who then exercised the office of earl marshal, as deputy to the earl of Norwich, by virtue of his majesty's immediate warrant for that purpose: and the day following (25 May) Mr. Dugd. being brought before the king in the old bed-chamber at Whitehall by the earl marshal, he then received the honour of knighthood, (much against his will because of his small estate) at which time his majesty put the badge of his office, hung in a gold chain (usually worn by Garter king of arms) about his neck. On the first of June following he took his oath of Garter principal king of arms, in a solemn chapter held by the sovereign and certain of the knights companions of that most noble order, in the red room at Whitehall: Which oath was administred to him by Seth bishop of Salisbury chancellor of the Garter, one of the officers of that order then kneeling on his majesty's left hand. As to the exercise of his office of Norroy, when he was provincial king of arms in the northern parts of this realm, the books of his visitation of the several counties under his charge remaining in the coll. of arms, will sufficiently manifest his care therein, as by taking exact notice of all collaterals, viz. uncles, aunts, brothers and sisters in the descents there drawn. Also by publicly disclaiming all such as did take upon them the titles of esquire or gentlemen without just right, and truly registering the arms of all such as could shew any justifiable right thereto. His care also was manifested in defacing such tablets of arms, as he found in any public places which were fictitious, and by pulling down several atchievements (commonly called hatchments) irregularly and against the law of arms hung up in any churches or chappels within the precincts of his province; the particulars whereof are expressed in that large book, in the office or coll. of arms, covered with russet leather, and called the Earl Marshal's Book. Further also to vindicate the just rights of his said office, he commenced a sute at the common law against one Randal Holme a painter of the city of Chester, who had boldly invaded the office of him the said Norroy, by preparing atchievements for the funeral of sir Ralph Ashton of Middleton in the county of Lancaster, knt. and giving directions for a formal proceeding at the solemnity thereof: whereupon he had a verdict against him the said Holme, at the general assizes held at Stafford, in March an. 1667, and recovered good damages with costs of suit. The titles of such books, touched on before, which are published under sir Will. Dugdale's name are these, (1) Monasticon Anglicanum: sive Pandectæ Cænobiorum Benedictinorum, Cluniacensium, Cisterciensium, Carthusianorum, à Primordiis ad eorum usq;

*Dissolutionem, ex Mss. Codd. ad Monasteria olim pertinentibus, Archivis Turrium Lond. Ebor. &c. Lond. 1655. and 82. fol.*⁵ adorned with the prospects of abbeys, churches, &c. (2) Monastici Anglicani Volumen alterum, de Canonicis Regularibus Augustinianis, scil. Hospitalariis, Templariis, Gilbertinis, Præmonstratensibus & Maturinis sive Trinitariis. Cum Appendice ad Vol. primum de Cænobiis aliquot Gallicanis, Hibernicis, Scoticis, necnon quibusdam Anglicanis antea omis- sis, à Primordiis, &c. Lond. 1661. fol. adorned with the prospects of abbeys, churches, &c. These two large volumes tho' they were published under the names of Roger Dodsworth of Yorkshire, and Will. Dugdale of Warwickshire, yet the chiefest now of the coll. of arms have several times informed me that they were both collected and totally written by Dodsworth, as the original which they had seen do testify: And Dr. Barlow hath several times told me that much about the time of the death of Dodsworth they were offer'd to him to be bought, that he might take some order to have them published. Howsoever it is, sure I am that sir William did take great pains to have them published, did methodize and order them, correct them when at the press and made several indexes to them. This Roger Dodsworth was the son of Matthew Dodsworth esq; (registry, as I have heard, of the church of York) by Eleinor his wife, daughter of Ralph Sandwith esq; was born on the 24th of July, 1585, at Newton Grange in the parish of St. Oswald in Ridale in Yorkshire, being the house and possessions of his mother's father; but whether he was ever educated in any university, I could never learn. This person, who had a natural propensity to histories and antiquities, began early to make collections of them, especially such that related to Yorkshire, and afterwards was much encouraged in his labours by sir Thomas, afterwards lord, Fairfax, who for several years allowed him a pension. He was a person of wonderful industry, but less judgment, was always collecting and transcribing, but never published any thing. He died in the month of August 1654, and was buried in the church of Rufford in Lancashire. After his death the said lord Fairfax took into his possession, not only all the old MSS. which he had obtained from several hands, but also all his proper collections which he had written from MSS. leiger-books, evidences in the Tower at York, in the custody of many gentlemen, not only in Yorkshire but other northern counties; as also his collections of monumental and fenestral inscriptions, &c. which being done, he communicated them to Dr. Nat. Johnston a physician of Yorkshire, with hopes that he would extract from them, and make and compleat a book of antiquities of the West Riding of Yorkshire, which he hath not yet done, being, as I have been informed, weary of the work. When the said lord Fairfax died, he bequeathed the said old MSS. and collections (which last amounted to 122 volumes at least) to the public library in Oxon, but were not convey'd thither till June 1673; which being then a wet season, most of them took wet, and had it not been for

⁵ [The first volume of Dugdale's Monasticon was published at London, in folio, 1655: and was reprinted in 1682 with additions. The second volume was published in 1661. The third and last in 1683. The whole was abridged in 1695 in folio, by James Wright, author of the History of Rutland. The other books that sir William Dugdale hath published are these, (3) The Antiquities of Warwickshire, illustrated from Records, Leiger-Books, Manuscripts, Charters, Evidences, Tombes and Arms: Beautified with Maps, Prospects and Portraitures. Lond. 1656. fol.⁶ The foundation of this book (which is his masterpiece) was laid on the collections of divers antiquities for the said county made and gathered by sir Simon Archer, knight, whom I have mention'd in the second vol. of this work, col. 572. which sir Simon dying at Warwick, about the beginning of 1666, was gathered to the graves of his fathers in Tamworth church. (4) The History of St. Paul's Cathedral in London from its Foundation till these Times: extracted out of original Charters, Records, Leiger-Books and other Manuscripts: Beautified with sundry Prospects of the Church Figures of Tombes and Monuments. Lond. 1658. in a thin fol.⁷ (5) *The History of Imbanking and Draining of divers Fens and Marshes, both in foreign Parts and in this Kingdom; and of the Improvement thereby. In the said Chronology or Chronica series, are many faults. (7) Monastici Anglicani, Volumen tertium & ultimum: Additamenta quædam in Volumen primum, ac Volumen secundum, jam pridem edita: Necnon Fundationes, sive Dotationes diversarum Ecclesiarum Cathedralium ac collegiatarum continens; ex Archivis regis, ipsis Autographis, ac diversis Codic. Manuscriptis decerpta. Lond. 1673. fol. Which, so soon as published, the faction commonly reported that it was made extant purposely to introduce popery, they being then exasperated against it. To this book is only the bare name of Will. Dugdale set, without any mention of Dodsworth, tho' no doubt there is but some of his collections are therein. Some time before it was published, Mr. Dugdale desired the author of these Athenæ Oxon. that if in his searches towards the work of Hist. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon. he could meet with any materials towards the completion of the said third vol. of Mon. Angl. he would by all means help him to them. Whereupon for the great respect he had to the author, and such a noble work as that was, he soon after sent to him copies of many evidences, as first those four inserted in p. 11, concerning Wallingford. Secondly eleven others in p. 13, 14, 15. concerning Littlemore nunnery within the precincts of Sandford in Oxfordshire, which by a mistake sir William hath added to Sandford in Berkshire. Thirdly three copies of chartes in p. 18. concerning the hermitage of Muswell in the parish of Piddington. Fourthly four copies in p. 30, 31. concerning Horkesley a cell to the abbey of Tefford. Fifthly the six copies mentioned in p. 55, 56, 57. concerning the priory of Cold Norton in Oxfordshire. Sixthly the twelve copies in p. 62, 63, 64. concerning the lands belonging to the knight templers of Sandford near to, and in the county of, Oxon, which I transcrib'd from a leiger-book containing all the evidences belonging to the preceptory of Sandford; near which place was the nunnery of Littlemore before-mentioned situated. The said leiger-book, which was then my proper book, is now in Bodley's library. Seventhly that copy in p. 77. b. concerning Otteham priory. Eighthly those copies of charters in p. 83, 84, 85, concerning the hospital of Brackley in Northamptonshire. Ninthly that charter in p. 96. a. concerning the hospital of Ginges in Essex, otherwise called Gynges-Monteygney. Tenthly that large charter concerning the priory of Newinton-Longaville in Bucks. and others. He the said sir Will. Dugdale was also assisted in the said third vol. of Mon. Angl. by sir Thomas Herbert baronet, but the number of charters which he transcribed and sent to him, I cannot justly tell you. He was a great collector of ancient MSS. a singular lover of antiquities, and there is no doubt, but that he having had more leisure than I, did his share therein. Sir Will. Dugdale hath also published, (8) The Baronage of England: or an historical Account of the Lives and most memorable Actions of our English Nobility in the Saxon's Time, to the Norman Conquest; and from thence, of those who had their Rise before the End of K. Henry the Third's Reign. Deduced from public Records, ancient Historians and other Authorities. Lond. 1675. fol. tom. 1. (9) The Baronage of England: or an historical Account, &c. from after the end of K. Henry the third's Reign, and before the eleventh of K. Rich. II. deduced, &c. Lond. 1676. in a thin fol. tom. 2. (10) The Bar. of England: or an historical Account, &c. from the 10th of Rich. II. until this present Year, 1676, deduced, &c. Lond. 1676. in a thin fol. tom. 3. These two last were printed, and do always go together. Augustin Vincent, sometimes Windsor herald and clerk of the records in the Tower of London, had laid a foundation of a Baronage of England, but he dying before it was finished, it was taken in hand and continued by his son John Vincent, who intituled it—Herologia Anglica. Or a Genealogical History of the Succession and Creation of all our Princes, Dukes, Earls and Viscounts since the Norman Conquest to this Day. This I have seen in a thick fol. manuscript, (for 'tis not yet published) containing many quotations from the records in the Tower of London, but 'tis a very slight and trite thing in comparison of that of sir W. Dugdale's. The said three tomes of the Baronage of England he gave, with other of his books, to the coll. of armes, but two of the kings, and other heralds there tell me that there are a world of faults in them; and they dare not depend upon the generality of matter relating to pedigree therein. The author also sent to the writer of these Athenæ and Fasti Oxon. copies of all the tomes, with an earnest desire that he would peruse, correct and add to them what he could obtain from record or other authorities. Whereupon spending a whole long vacation in that matter, he drew up at least 16 sheets of corrections, but more additions; which being sent to the author, he remitted a good part of them into the margin of a copy of large paper of his three tomes of Baronagium. (11) A short View of the late Troubles in England; briefly setting forth their Rise, Growth and Tragical Conclusion. As also some Parallel thereof with the Barons Wars in the Time of K. H. III. but chiefly with that of France, called the holy League, in the Reign of Hen. III. and Hen. IV. late Kings of that Realm. Oxon. 1681. fol. To this book is added A perfect Narrative of the Treaty at Uxbridge; which, having been before extant, was thought by the generality of scholars to be superfluous, yet it made the book a folio, which otherwise might have been made an ordinary quarto. This book (A short View, &c.) was presented by the vicechancellor of Cambridge, in the name of the members of that university to queen Catharine, 27 Sept. 1681, at which time their majesties were entertained there. (12) The ancient Usage in Bearing of such Ensigns of Honour as are commonly called Arms. Oxon. 1682. oct. There are two editions of this book, one of which was published in Oxon, 4 Feb. 1681, and the other in the beginning of the year 1682. 'Tis mostly taken from Will. Wyrley's book entit. The true Use of Armory, &c. see in the second vol. of these ATHENÆ, col. 217. (13) A true and perfect Catalogue of the Nobility of England. Printed with The ancient Usage, &c. To which is added, A true and exact List of all the present Knights of the Garter, &c. as they now stand in St. George's Chap. in Windsor Castle, 10 Sept. 1681. (14) A Cat. of the Baronets of England; from the first Erection of that Dignity until the 4th of July 1681, inclusive. Printed also with The ancient Usage, &c. The second edit. reacheth to the 6th of Dec. the same year. To both these editions are added first, An exact alphabetical Catalogue of all the Shires, Cities, Burrough-Towns, Cinque Ports in England; specifying the Number of the Knights of the Shires, Citizens, Burgesses and Barons of the Cinque-ports, they do respectively elect, to serve as their Representatives in Parliaments, &c. collected and written by Charles Hatton, esq; son of Christopher L. Hatton.⁹ Secondly, A true and perfect Cat. of the Nobility of Scotland, with a List of the Royal Burroughs therein, &c. collected and written by the same hand; and thirdly, A true and perfect Cat. of the Nobility of Ireland, with a List of all the Shires, Cities and Burroughs of Ireland, which make Returns of Parliament, &c. collected and written by the same hand. (15) A perfect Copy of all the Summons of the Nobility to the great Councils and Parliaments of this Realm from the 49 of Hen. III. to this present; with Catalogues of such Noblemen, as have been summoned to Parliament in Right of their Wives, &c. Lond. 1686. fol. Further also our author sir W. Dugdale took a great deal of pains in publishing the second vol. of Councils, and Glossary of sir Hen. Spelman, as I have before told you. At length this most industrious person contracting a great cold at Blythe-Hall by attending too much his worldly concerns, died thereof in his chair, about one of the clock in the afternoon of the tenth day of February (St. Scholastica's day) an. 1685. Whereupon his body being conveyed to the parochial church of Shustock in Warwickshire before-mentioned, was on the 12th of the same month deposited in a stone-coffin, lying in a little vault, which he before had caused to be made under the north side of the chancel of the church there. It was laid near another stone-coffin in the said vault, containing the remains of his then late wife named Margery daughter of John Huntbache of Seawell in Staffordshire gent. who died 18 Decemb. 1681, after she had continued his wife from the 17th of March 1622. Sir Will.

Dugdale did also in his life time erect over the said vault a strong tomb of free-stone, in form of an altar, joyning to the north-wall, with his arms and those of his wife carved on the south side thereof: And above it he caused to be fixed on the wall a tablet of white marble, bordered with the like free-stone, on which was engraven his epitaph made by himself. By his last will and testament he bequeathed all his manuscripts and collections of antiquities to the museum of Elias Ashmole in Oxon, who divers years before had married one of his daughters; where they remain, and are of great use to curious and critical persons. To conclude, had this indefatigable person sequestered himself from worldly troubles, and totally addicted himself to his studies, and had minded the public, more than his private concerns, the world might have justly enjoyed more of his lucubrations, and those more true and accurate, than such that are already published, especially those in his latter days: Yet however what he hath done, is prodigious, considering the great troubles that he had endured for his loyalty, and the cumbances of this world that he had run through; and therefore his memory ought to be venerated and had in everlasting remembrance for those things which he hath already published, which otherwise might have perished and been eternally buried in oblivion. Let's now go on with the creations.

Nov. 1. Sir RICH. BYRON knight, a most valiant colonel in the king's army, and brother to John lord Byron.

JOH. NEWTON of St. Edm. hall.—He was afterwards a noted mathematician.

THOM. SMITH
THOM. LAMPLUGH
THOM. TULLY } of Queen's coll.

The two first of these three were afterwards bishops.

EDW. WALKER¹ herald of arms by the title of Chester.²—This person, who was second son of Edw. Walker of Roobers in the parish of Nether Stowey in Somersetsh. by Barbara his wife, daughter of Edw. Salkeld of Corby-castle in Cumberland, was born at Roobers, bred a servant in the family of Thomas earl of Arundell earl marshal of England, to whom afterwards being secretary, he gave the pursevant's place called Rogue-Croix in the coll. of arms. In 1639, when that noble count was made general of the English forces in the Scotch expedition, this Mr. Walker was by him made secretary of war, and executed that office till the return of the said army to London. Afterwards when his majesty and the royal family were by the endeavours of that unhappy parl. that began 3. Nov. 1640, forced from London in Jan. 1641, Mr. Walker followed him into the north parts of England, and was with him at Edghill fight, and afterwards at Oxon, where he was actually created master of arts, being then Chester herald as I have before told you. In the latter end of 1643 he was made Norroy king of arms in the place of sir Henry St. George promoted to the office of Garter, and in the year following, upon the death of the said sir Henry, he was made Garter, and on the 2d of Feb. the same year (1644) he received the honour of knighthood.

See Harl. Catal. MSS. No. 6272. Walker's name does not appear in the index to the late printed catalogue, as author.

Proposals for the Settlement of the Reputation and Interest of the Office of Armes. MS. Ashmole 797.

Walker's VIII. Historical Discourses (most of them relating to king Charles I.) were printed 1704, folio; among them was the Life of Tho. Earl of Arundell, mentioned above by Mr. Baker.]

² [See Anstis's Supplement to Mr. Ashmole's History touching Garter King of Arms, page 407.]

This person, who with great diligence and observation had committed to writing in a paper book the several occurrences that passed in the king's army, and the victories obtained by his majesty over his rebellious subjects, the book was seized on at the battel at Naseby by some of the forces belonging to the parliament, then victors. Afterwards it was presented to their general, called sir Thomas Fairfax, who perusing it, found one passage therein which was very observable to him, viz. that whereas he (Walker) had taken occasion³ to speak of the Irish and call'd them rebells; his majesty, who before that time had perused the book, did, among several alterations made therein with his own hand, put out the word Rebells with his pen, and over it wrote Irish. This book was after his majesty's restoration regain'd, and is now, or at least was lately, in the hands of sir Joh. Clopton, who married the daughter and heir of sir E. Walker,⁴ who also hath written The Order of the Ceremonies used at the Celebration of St. George's Feast at Windsor, "when the Sovereign of the most noble Order of the Garter is present. Lond. 1674. qu. Another bears date 1671. qu. This sir Edw. Walker was with king Charles II. in Scotland 1650, and has written The Acts of the Knights of the Garter in the Civil Wars, Temp. Car. I. which are still preserved in MS. among Mr. Ashmole's books in the musæum at Oxford." [No. 1110.] After his majesty's return, he was confirmed in his Gartership, and made one of the clerks of the privy council; and dying suddenly in Whitehall, 19 Febr. 1676, his body was conveyed to Stratford upon Avon in Warwickshire, and buried in the church there, among the graves of the Cloptons of Clopton in that parish. In his office of Garter king of arms succeeded Will. Dugdale, Norroy, as I have before told you, and in his clerkship of the privy-council sir Tho. Dolman of Shaw near Newbury in Berks.

Nov. 1. MATTHEW SMALLWOOD of Brasen. coll.—He was afterwards dean of Litchfield.

FERDINANDO MARSHAM esq;—He was brother to sir Joh. Marsham the critic.

JERVAIS HOLLIS a parliament man for Great Grimesby in Lincolnshire.—He had lately retired to his majesty, because of the violent proceedings against him his said majesty in the parliament sitting at Westminster, being then serjeant major, and in the next year he sate as a member in the parl. held at Oxon.—"Coll. Jervais Hollis, master of the requests, died 10 Feb. 1674, and was buried at Mansfield in Nottinghamshire." See Mr. Ashmole in his Diary.

GEORGE WENTWORTH another parliament man for Pomphret in Yorkshire.—He also left that parliament, retired to his majesty, and sate in the Oxford parliam. 1643.

[18] On the said first of Nov. were more than 70 persons actually created masters of arts, among whom, towards the latter end of the solemnity, when it grew dark, some did obtrude themselves that were not in the catalogue of those to be created, which was signed by his majesty. One of them was named HENRY LEIGHTON a Scot, mostly educated in France, but at this time (1642) actually in arms for his majesty, and soon after was an officer. Some years after the declining of the king's cause, he settled for altogether in Oxon, read and taught the French language to young scholars, and for their use wrote and published (1) Linguae Gallicae addiscenda Regulae. Oxon. 1659. in tw. Published afterwards again with many additions to the great advantage of the learner. (2) Dialogues in French and English, &c.

This person, who might have been more beneficial to mankind than he was, had his principles been sound, (which were not, and therefore in some respects he debauched young men) died by a fall down stairs in St. John's coll. (where he had a chamber allowed him by the society) on the 28th of January 1668: whereupon his body was buried the next day in the church of St. Giles in the north suburb of Oxon.

Dec. 20. THO. PENAUDDOCK of St. Mary's hall.—He was a younger son of sir Joh. Penruddock, whom I shall mention among the created doctors of the civ. law.

EDWARD SHERBURNE commissary general of his majesty's artillery in Oxon, was actually created master of arts on the same day.—This person, who hath been greatly venerated for his polite learning, was born in his father's house in Goldsmiths-rents near Red-cross-street in the parish of St. Giles Cripplegate in London, on the 18th of Sept. 1618, son of Edw. Sherburne esq; a native of the city of Oxon, and clerk of his majesty's ordnance within the kingdom of England, son of Hen. Sherburne, gent. a retainer to C. C. C. in this university, but descended from the ancient and genteel family of his name now remaining at Stonyhurst in the county palatine of Lancaster, "and born at Houghton not far from Preston in the said county. The said Edw. father of our author having taken to wife Frances the second daughter of John Stanley, sometimes of Roydon-Hall in the county of Essex, esq; descended from the Stanleys of Houghton in Chesh. by whom he had besides other children" Edw. whom I am further to mention, having been mostly trained up in grammar-learning under Mr. Tho. Farnaby, who then taught in Goldsmiths-rents before-mentioned. He was privately instructed for a time in his father's house by one Charles Aleyn then lately usher to the said Mr. Farnaby, but originally a member of Sidney coll. in Cambridge; I mean the same Ch. Aleyn, who wrote a poem entit. The Battel of Cressy and Poitiers, and afterwards The History of Hen. the Seventh. Lond. 1638. oct. written in verse also, with The Battel of Bosworth; who dying about 1640, was buried under the north wall of St. Andrew's church in Holbourn near London. In 1640, his father thinking it fit for his better education to send him abroad to travel, he set forward at Christmas that year, and continued beyond sea till about three quarters of a year, having spent his time in viewing a considerable part of France, and was intended for a journey into Italy, but then unfortunately called back by occasion of his father's sickness, who, not many weeks after his return, died some few days before Christmas 1641. Immediately after his death, he succeeded his father in the clerkship of his majesty's ordnance, granted him by patent 5 Feb. 13 Car. I. and about the months of April and May he was outed by warrant of the then house of lords, and committed to the Black-rod, for only adhering to the duty of his place, and allegiance to his prince, where he lay for several months at great expences, and charge of fees, till having in the beginning of Oct. following gain'd his liberty, he went immediately to the king, who made him commissary general of his artillery. In which condition he served him at the battel of Edghill, and during the four years civil war; while in the mean time he was depriv'd of an estate of 160*l.* per an. (till a debt of 1500*l.* was satisfied by way of extent out of the land of Ord of Ord in Northumberland) his house plunder'd, and all his personal estate and household goods taken away, among which was the loss of a study of books, as considerable in a manner as that he bought and obtained after his majesty's restoration, which was great and choice, and accounted one of the most considerable belonging to any gent. in or near London. After Edghill battle he retired with his majesty to Oxon, where he was created M. of A. as I have told you, and was not wanting while he continued there to improve himself in learning as other gentlemen did. After the rendition of Oxford to the parliament forces, he lived for some time in the Middle Temple at London, in the chamber of a near kinsman of his, *Joh. Povey, esq; near that of his kinsman Tho. Stanley, at which time he published some pieces which I shall anon mention.

While he continued there, you cannot imagine but that he was liable, (as indeed he was) to frequent midnight searches and proclamation banishments out of the lines of communication, as being a cavalier, which the godly party then called malignant; till at the return of sir George Savile (afterwards marquess of Halifax) from his travels about 1651, or 1652, he was invited to take upon him the charge of his concerns, and some time after by his honourable mother the lady Savile her good favour, he was recommended to undertake the tuition of her nephew sir John Coventry in his travels abroad. In the beginning of March therefore in 1654 he left England with his charge, ran through all France, Italy, some part of Hungary, the greater part of Germany, Holland and the rest of the Low Countries, and returned about the end of Oct. 1659. By which voyage he did advance and promote his bookish inclination, by conference with learned persons, when he came to such places that could afford him their desired converse, more than what he could obtain at home. After his majesty's restoration he found a person put into his place of clerk of his maj. ordnance within the kingdom of England (after his old sequestrators were dead) by a relation of the gent. whose care and tuition he had undertaken, I mean by that busy "and meddling" man sir Anth. Ashley Cooper, (afterwards earl of Shaftsbury) so that he was forced to plead the right of his patent before the house of lords e'er he could get readmittance. After some time of the king's settlement he met with a discouragement worse than the former; for by the politic reducers of the charge of his majesty's revenue and treasure, he was retrenched from the best perquisites of his office, to the value of no less than 500*l.* per an. and never received any consideration more than what the king was pleased of his own bounty to confer upon him, which was 100*l.* per an. in compensation of quadruple the loss he sustained. This person, who hath been always an intimate friend and acquaintance as well of the ancient Greek and Latin, as of the choicest modern poets, both Italian, French and Spanish, hath written and translated, (1) Medea, a Tragedy. Lond. 1648 oct. translated from Lat. into English verse, with annotations: "Tis one of Seneca's tragedies. (2) Seneca's Answer to Lucilius his Quære, why good Men suffer Misfortunes, seeing there is a divine Providence? Lond. 1648. oct. written originally in Lat. prose, and translated into English verse. It was dedicated by Mr. Sherburne to king Charles I. during his captivity in the isle of Wight, which he was pleased most graciously to approve and accept of. (3) Salmacis, Lyrian and Sylva, forsaken Lydia, the Rape of Hellen, a Comment thereon, with several other Poems. Lond. 1651. oct. On which three translations, as also annotations on each of them, the most ingenious Thomas Stanley before remembred (mention'd also in the FASTI, 1640) did make an excellent copy of verses, as also upon the mutual friendship between him and our author Ed. Sherburne: the beginning of which is this,

Dear friend! I question, nor can I yet decide Whether thou more art my delight or pride?

(4) The Sphere of Marcus Manilius made an English Poem. Lond. 1675, fol. 'Tis adorned with cuts, and an account thereof is in the Philosophical Transactions, num. 110. p. 233. It was chiefly intended by its author for the use of the young gentry and nobility of the land, to serve as their initiation in the first rudiment of spherical learning. (5) A Catalogue (with a Character) of the most eminent Astronomers, ancient and modern: Which, with other matters, as first Of the Cosmical System, secondly A Cosmographical Astronomical Synopsis, &c. are added by way of an astronomical appendix to The Sphere of Marc. Man. before mention'd. (6) Troades: or the Royal Captives, a Trag. Lond. 1679. oct. Written originally in Lat. by L. An. Seneca, Englished with annotations, by Mr. Sherburne. He had likewise lying by him another trag. of Seneca (Hippolytus and Phædra) long since by him translated, with annotations. Which three tragedies, viz. Medea, Troades and Hippolytus, he endeavours to prove that they belong only to the philosopher, among all the rest that go under the name of Seneca. The sixteenth Idyllium of Theocritus in N. Tate's Miscellanies is ascribed to him, and perhaps other things in other books. In 1682, Jan. 6, his majesty king Charles II. did, in consideration of his great sufferings, and the long and faithful services by him performed to his royal father of blessed memory, and to himself, confer upon him the honour of knighthood in his private bedchamber at Whitehall; having also suffered several indignities from the faction in the time of the popish plot, who endeavoured to out him of his place, for being, as they supposed, a Rom. cath. After king James II. had abdicated the government, and left the nation, he was outed for altogether and put to trouble: So that whereas he before for 19 years together had suffered for his loyalty to his prince, and had in some manner suffered after his restoration, as I have told you before, so now doth suffer upon account of his religion, being living near London in a retired, yet cheerful, and devout condition, spending his time altogether in books and prayer.⁵

HENRY SHERBURNE younger brother to Edw. before-mention'd, was then also Dec. 20. actually created master of arts — He was soon after made comptroller of the ordnance in the army of Ralph lord Hopton, but how long he continued in that employment, I know not. While he continued in Oxon, he drew an exact ichnography of the city of Oxon, while it was a garrison for his majesty, with all the fortifications, trenches, bastions, &c. perform'd for the use of sir Tho. Glemham the governour thereof, who shewing it to the king, he approved much of it, and wrote in it the names of the bastions with his own hand; "and as a mark of his "favour, was pleased to confer upon him the grant of his "chief engineer, then void by the death of sir Charles Lloyd, "which yet he lived not long to enjoy." This Ichnography, or another drawn by Rich. Rallingson, was by the care of Dr. John. Fell, engraved on a copper plate and printed, purposely to be remitted into Hist. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon. lib. 1. between p. 364. and 365. This Henry Sherburne, who was an ingenious man, was kill'd in a mutiny that hapned among some of the soldiers in Oxon, on the 12th of June 1646. Whereupon his body was buried the next day in the church of St. Peter in the East in the said city.

January 16. In a convocation then celebrated were these ⁵ [Sir Edward Sherburne died November 4, 1702, aged 85.

In 1702 were published Medea, Troades, Phædra and Hippolytus, with a Life of Seneca, and some of Sherburne's Poems, collected, a thick 8vo.

He also translated from the French of Blondel The Comparison of Pindar and Horace, printed Lond. 1696, 8vo.]

following persons actually created masters of arts, by virtue of the king's mandamus then read, viz.

HENRY LORD SEYMOUR, son of Will. marq. of Hertford—He was knighted by his maj. on the 17th of Jan. 1644. See among the doctors of phys. an. 1645.

SIR JOHN STAWELL.—See among the doctors of physie this year.

AMIAS PAULET esq.

JOH. STAWELL esq.

MR. EDW. STAWELL.

ROB. HAWLEY a captain—Francis lord Hawley one of the gent. of the bedchamber to James duke of York died 22d of Dec. 1684, aged 76 or thereabouts; but whether Robert was nearly related to him I know not.

JOH. STANHOP—He was master of the horse, as it seems, to the marquess of Hertford.

GEORGE STRANGEWAIES an officer—He was one of the ancient and genteel family of his name in Dorsetshire.

GEOR. TRIMME, secretary to the marq. of Hertf.

ANTH. LIGHTFOOT servant to prince Charles.

ROG. SANDERS a captain.

RICH. KNIGHTLEY, &c.

All which, with others, were lately come to Oxon, among the forces under the conduct of the said William marquess of Hertford.

In the same convocation were others also created, by virtue of the letters of the said marq. (soon after chanc. of this univ.) which were then read: The names of some of them follow.

EDW. WINDHAM esq.

EDW. KIRTON esq.—He was a parliamentary Burgess for Milborne in Somersetsh. to serve in the parl. began at Westm. 3 Nov. 1640. but leaving it, because of the violent proceedings of the members thereof, he retired to his majesty at Oxon, and sat in the parl. there, 1643.

THO. LOWER esq.—He was also a Burgess for Eastlow in Cornwall, but leaving the said parliament he retired to Oxon, and sat there. I take this person to be the same who was son and heir of sir W. Lower of St. Winnow in Cornw. knight, which Thomas dying a batchelor 5 Feb. 1660, was buried in the parish of St. Clements Danes within the liberty of Westminster, as I have elsewhere told you.

... BAMPFIELD a colonel.

JOH. MILLER a captain.

HUGH WINDHAM.

HUGH SMITH.

FRANC. CHALK or CHOCK of Avington in Berks—He was knighted 26 Oct. 1643.

All which, with others, did attend the said marq. of Hertford when he came to Oxon.

Feb. 1. ANTH. GOSLYNG was then created by virtue of a dispensation pass'd in convocation.

Feb. 21. was another convocation celebrated, and therein a creation of masters made to the number of about eleven: Among whom were,

PAUL BOSTON⁶ of Cambridge—After his majesty's return he became minister of St. Brides parish in London; whence being forced by the dreadful fire that hapned in 1666, he became reader of St. Giles in the Fields in Middlesex.

RICH. POWELL a retainer to the lord Mowbray.

WILL. JAY a retainer to the marq. of Hertford.

⁶ [Paulus Boston A. M. admiss. ad vic. S. Bridgitæ Lond. 21 Aug. 1666, ad pres. dec. et capit. Westm. Reg. Laud.

VOL. IV.

CHARLES WHITTAKER secretary under sir Edw. Nicholas one of the secretaries of state, &c.

ASTON COCKAINE was also about the same time created, but neglected to be registred.

Batchelors of Physic..

From the first of Nov. to the 31st of Jan. were actually created 17 batch. of phys. or more; of which number were,

Nov. 1. { HEN. JACOB of Mert.
EDW. BUCKOKE of Trin.
WILL. CROOT of Exeter. } coll.
{ HEN. SAWYER
STEPH. BOUGHTON } of Magd.

The aforesaid Edw. Buck. was created Dr. of the same faculty in 1645.

Dec. 10. { JAM. HYDE of Corp. Ch. } coll.
{ GEORGE ROGERS of Linc. }

The first of these last two was afterwards the king's professor of phys. and the other a publisher of certain things of his faculty, and is now, or at least lately was, living.

Jan. 31. { NICH. OUDART.
THO. CHAMPION OF CAMPION.
THO. JOHNSON.

Of the first I have spoken already in the FASTI; under the year 1636. Of the second I know nothing, only that one of both his names was a noted poet in the reign of king James I. see in the FASTI under the year 1624. And of the other you may see more among the created doctors of phys. 1643.

Batchelors of Divinity.

From the first of Nov. to the 21st of Feb. were about 70 batchelors of div. actually created; of which number were these following.

Nov. 1. CÆSAR WILLIAMSON lately M. A. of Trin. coll. in Cambridge.—After the declining of the king's cause he went into Ireland, became fellow of the coll. at Dublin,* and doct. of div. and orator of the university there, and under that capacity he published Panegyrisin excellentiss. Dominum Dom. Henric. Cromwellium Deputatum Hi-berniciæ, Cancellariumq; Acad. Dubliniensis. Lond. 1658, oct. The imprimatur before it in praise of the lord deputy and author or orator is subscribed by Will. Petty clerk of the council, 2 Jan. 1657. Afterwards the coll. gave him a living at, or near, Tredagh, where he ended his days in a craz'd condition, about 4 or 5 years after his majesty's restoration.

EDW. SYLVESTER of Bal. coll. was created the same day—This person, who was a professed tutor in the Latin and Greek tongues for many years in a private house in All-saints parish in Oxon, was born at Mansfield in Nottinghamshire, and had his sole education in the said coll. He was the common drudge of the university either to make, correct or review the Latin sermons of certain dull theologists thereof before they were to be delivered at St. Mary's: as also the Greek or Latin verses of others (as dull as the former) that were to be put in, or before, books that occasionally were published. He lived to see several of his scholars to be heads of houses in this university: among whom were John Owen dean of Ch. Ch. John Wilkins warden of Wadh. coll. Hen. Wilkinson princ. of Magd. hall, &c. who, with other scholars of his that were doctors, batchelors of div. law and phys. and masters of arts, had an annual feast together; to which their master was always invited, and being set at the upper end of the table, he would feed their minds with learned discourses, and criticisms in grammar. He died on the first of Dec. 1653, aged 67 or more, and was buried in the chancel of All-saints church in Oxon. Near to his grave was afterwards buried his brother Henry Sylvester, sometimes mayor of the city.⁷

* Where being esteemed a good orator, was put upon several harangues extempore, and wrote a panegyrick on Henry Cromwell, lord lieutenant of the said kingdom, which I have seen several times quoted. First edit.

ROB. WILD of Cambridge⁸ was also created the same day, Nov. 1.⁹—He was afterwards a covenant, rector of Aynoe in Northamptonshire,¹ in the place, as I conceive, of an honest cavalier sequestered from it, ejected thence for nonconformity after the king's restoration, being then D. of D. and much celebrated for his poetry, which he wrote in behalf of the presbyterians, as John Cleaveland did against them. Some of his works are (1) The Tragedy of Christ. Love at Tower-hill. Lond. 1660. 'Tis a poem in one sh. in qu. (2) Iter Boreale. Attempting something upon the successful and matchless March of the L. Gen. George Monk from Scotland to London, &c. Lond. 1660. A poem in 2 sh. and an half in qu. Another Iter Boreale you may see in Rich. Eedes in the first vol. col. 749. a third in Rich. Corbet's poems, and a fourth in Thomas Master in the third vol. col. 85. There is extant an ingenious Lat. poem entit. Iter australe, a Reginensibus Oxon. An. 1658 expeditum. printed the same year in 3 sh. and an half in qu. Which poem was written by Thom. Bispham a gent. com. of Qu. coll. (son of Dr. Sam. Bispham a physician of London) and by him dedicated to the provost thereof Tho. Barlow, who had the author in his company when he and some of the society of that house went the college progress into Hampshire and other places. Dr. Wild hath also written (3) A Poem upon the Imprisonment of Mr. Edm. Calamy in Newgate, printed on one side of a broad sheet of paper, an. 1662, whereupon came out two poems at least in answer to it, viz. First,—Anti-boreale, An Answer to a lewd Piece of Poetry upon Mr. Calamy's late Confinement. Secondly, Hudibras on Calamy's Imprisonment and Wild's Poetry: both printed the same year, and each on one side of a sheet of paper. In 1668 and 1670 was published in oct.—Iter boreale, with large Additions of several other Poems, being an exact Collection of all

The youngest son of this marriage was a Joshua Sylvester of St. Alban's hall, Oxon, who is mentioned vol. ii, col. 580. This Joshua, son of Gregory Sylvester, settled at Mansfield, and seems to have been a mercer. See some account of his descendant in the Gentleman's Magazine for 1804. There are extant some of his poems, with some of John Wilmot's earl of Rochester and others in a collection, entit. Rome Rhym'd to death, but whether genuine I cannot tell. This Dr. Wild, who was a fat, jolly and boon presbyterian, died at Oundle in Northamptonshire, about the beginning of winter, an. 1679, and soon after had a poem written on his death, entit. A Pillar on the Grave of Dr. Wild, besides another called A Dialogue between Death and Dr. Wild; both printed in folio sheets, an. 1679. In the month of May 1672 there had like to have been a poetical war between this Dr. Wild and Tho. Flatman, but how it was terminated I cannot tell.

The first of these four was, after his majesty's restoration, made prebend of Stratford in the church of Salisbury, and of Welton-Westhall in the church of Linc.² The third (Hen. Myriell) died 22 Apr. 1643, aged 33 years, and was buried in All-saints church in Oxon. As for Fulham and Gurgany, there will be mention made of them in these FASTI, an. 1660.

Tho' 'tis said that NATH. CONOPIUS a Grecian, and about this time one of the petty canons of Ch. Ch. was actually created batch. of div. yet nothing appears in the university register of that matter.

Doctors of Law.

From the first of Nov. to the 21st of Feb. were actually created 60 or more doctors of the civil law, the names of most of which do follow.

Nov. 1. ROB. LORD PIERPONT, viscount Newark and earl of Kingston upon Hull, sometimes a gent. com. of Oriel coll. was actually created doct. of the said faculty—He was now lieutenant general of all his majesty's forces within the counties of Lincoln, Rutland, Huntingdon, Cambridge and Norfolk, and lost his life in his service near to Gainsborough in Lincolnshire, 30 of July 1643. The most loyal sir Francis Wortley hath an elegy on him in his Characters and Elegies, which being just and deservedly spoken of him, I shall refer the reader to it; but the book, I doubt, is scarce to be seen or had. This most noble count Pierpont was father to Henry marq. of Dorchester, born at Mansfield in Nottinghamshire, an. 1606, educated for some time in Eman. coll. in Cambr. and afterwards was a hard student for 10 or 12 hours a day. Upon the breaking out of the civil war in 1642 he adhered to his majesty, was with him at Oxon after the battel at Edghill, and had a degree conferred on him, or at least was incorporated, tho' neglected to be registered by the common scribe of the university. He was then esteemed a learned man, as being well read in the fathers, schoolmen, casuists, the civil and can. law and reasonably well versed in the common law, having about that time been admitted a bencher of Grey's inn. In 1649 he applied his study to medicine and anatomy, and in 1658 he was admitted fellow of the coll. of phys. at Lond. and became their pride and glory.³ He hath published (1) Two Speeches spoken in the House of Lords. One concerning the Rights of Bishops to sit in Parliament, 21 of May, and the other Concerning the Lawfulness and Conveniency of their intermeddling in temporal Affairs, on the 24 of the same Month. Lond. 1641. in one sh. and an half in qu. (2) Speech to the Trained-Bands of Nottinghamshire at Newark, 13 July 1642.—Lond. 1642. qu. (3) Letter to John Lord Roos, written the 13, and printed on one side of a sheet of paper on the 25 of Feb. 1659. It was written upon occasion of some differences between the said lord Roos and his wife Anne, daughter of the said marquess: From which lord the said Anne was afterwards for her whorishness lawfully divorced by sentence of the court-christian, and then commonly known by the name of the lady Anne Vaughan. As soon as the said letter was received by the lord Roos, he wrote another in answer to it, in a buffooning style, 25 Feb. 1659, assisted therein by Sam. Butler, afterwards known by the name of Hudibras: Which being printed also on one side of a sh. of paper, the marq. made a reply with another paper entit. (4) The Reasons why the Marq. of Dorchester printed his Letter, 25 Febr. 1659, together with his Answer to a printed Paper, called, A true and perfect Copy of the Lord Roos his Answer to the Marquess of Dorchester's Letter, written 25 Febr. 1659.—Printed 20 of March 1659 on one side of a sh. of paper. He the said marquess hath, as 'tis probable, other things extant,⁴ or at least fit to be printed, which I have not yet seen. He died in his house in Charterhouse yard near London, 8 Decemb. 1680; whereupon his body, after it had lain in state for some time, was conveyed to his antient seat called Holme-Pierpont in Nottinghamshire, where it was buried in the church of that place among the sepulchres of his name and family. Soon after was published an elegy on this noble and generous marquess, by John Crouch sometimes his domestic servant; which being too large for this place, shall be now omitted.

ROB. DORMER, EARL OF CAERNARVON, was actually created at the same time, Novem. 1.—This most loyal count, who was Mercurio magnus, sed Marti major, was killed the next year at Newbury fight, and soon after had an elegy made on him by sir Francis Wortley before-mentioned; which is printed among his Characters and Elegies. His body was for the present deposited in Jesus coll. chappel, but soon after removed to his seat in Bucks.⁵

JAMES LORD COMPTON.—He was afterwards earl of Northampton, lieutenant of the county of Warwick, as also of the city of Coventry, recorder likewise of the said city, as also of Northampton and of Tamworth, and did excellent service for his majesty in the time of the rebellion, especially by his routing the parliament forces near Banbury, 6 of May 1643. He died at Castle-Ashby in Northamptonshire, in Dec. 1681, and was buried in a vault by his ancestors, under the church of Compton Winniate, commonly called Compton in the hole, in Warwickshire. He had a younger brother named sir Charles Compton a most valiant person, and one that had done his maj. great service in the said rebellion. He died in the latter end of Nov. 1661, (being then a parl. man for the town of Northampton) and was buried at Sywell in Northamptonshire.

ROBERT LORD RICH.—The same, if I mistake not, that was afterwards earl of Holland.

Colonel SIR JOH. BYRON knight of the Bath, lately lieutenant of the Tower of London.—He was about this time made field-marshal of all his majesty's forces in the county of Worcester, Salop, Chester, and North Wales, and in the 19 of Car. 1. was advanced to the title of lord Byron of Rochdale in Lancashire.

SIR WILL. LE NEVE knt. Clarenceaux king of arms.⁶—This person was of the antient family of his name living at Aslacton in Norfolk, received some academ. education in Caius college in Cambridge, and afterwards by the favour of the earl marshal of England was created herald extraordinary by the title of Mowbray, 29 June 1624. Soon after he was made York herald, was employed into France in the first of Car. 1, and from thence attended qu. Henrietta Maria into England; who with sir Henry S. George then Richmond herald, were royally rewarded by her majesty, with the ⁷ gift of a thousand French crowns. He was also employed to attend upon his majesty's embassy, which was sent in the year 1629 unto the French king Lewis 13, and at the ceremonies done thereat, he there performed his office in his coat of arms, as it appears in a French relation about that time printed. At his return from thence, the king rewarded him with a chain of gold of good value, and a medal of his portraiture. Afterwards he was made Norroy, and at length Clarenceaux; and closely adhering to his majesty's cause, was not only several times in danger of his life by summoning certain garrisons to be delivered up to his majesty, and afterwards upon denial, by proclaiming the soldiers of those garrisons traitors, in his coat of arms and trumpets sounding, but also lost his estate during the time of usurpation. I have seen several of his collections concerning ceremonies, which are often quoted in the book of Elias Ashmole, esq; entit. The Institutions, Laws and Ceremonies of the most noble Order of the Garter. I have also seen other of his collections of monumental and fenestral inscriptions, which have been used and quoted by others, and may be of great use to some that are curious and critical in those matters. At length being craz'd or distemper'd in his brain, was kept close in a house of lunatics at Hogsden alias Hoxton near London: So that being not in a capacity of being restored to his place of Clarenceaux after his majesty's return, much less at his coronation in the beginning of 1661, his office was conferred on sir Edw. Bysshe, who kept it to his dying day. This sir Will. Le Neve, who had been very knowing and well versed in matters of arms, armory, and all matters pertaining thereunto, dyed at Hogsden before-mentioned: Whereupon his body being conveyed to the church of St. Bennet near Paul's Wharf in London (in which parish the coll. of arms is situated) was therein buried, 15 Aug. 1661. After his death most of his collections came into the hands of sir Edw. Walker, some of which he gave to the said coll. and others he left to sir John Clopton who married the said sir Edward's daughter and heir.

⁵ [This day also (at Newbury fight) fell the earl of Carnarvon, who, after he had charged and routed a body of the enemy's horse, coming carelessly back by some of the scatter'd troopers, was, by one of them that knew him, run through the body with a sword; of which he died within an hour. He was a person, with whose great parts and virtue the world was not enough acquainted. Before the war, though his education was adorned by travel, and an exact observation of the manners of more nations than our common travellers use to visit, for he had, after the view of Spain, France, and most parts of Italy, spent some time in Turkey, and those eastern countries, he seem'd to be wholly delighted with those looser exercises of pleasure, hunting, hawking and the like, in which the nobility of that time too much delighted to excel. After the troubles began, having the command of the first or second regiment of horse that was raised for the king's service, he wholly gave himself up to the office and duty of a soldier; no man more diligently obeying, or more dexterously commanding; for he was not only of a very keen courage in the exposing of his person, but an excellent discernor and pursuer of advantage upon his enemy. He had a mind and understanding very present in the article of danger, which is a rare benefit in that profession. Those infirmities, and that license, which he had formerly indulged to himself, he put off with a severity, when others thought them excusable under the notion of a soldier. He was a great lover of justice, and practised it then most deliberately, when he had power to do wrong: and so strict in the observation of his word and promise as a commander, that he could not be perswaded to stay in the west, when he found it not in his power to perform the agreement he had made with Dorchester and Weymouth. If he had lived, he would have proved a great ornament to that profession, and an excellent soldier, and by his death the king found a sensible weakness in his army.—Such is lord Clarendon's excellent character of this nobleman.]

HENRY HASTINGS, esq; "the second son of Henry earl of "Huntingdon," was actually created also doctor of the civil law on the same day, Novemb. 1.—He was created lord Hastings of Loughborough in Leicestershire, 22 Oct. 1643.

CHRISTOPHER LEWKNORE, esq;—He was a burgess for the city of Chichester, to serve in that parl. that began 3 Nov. 1640, but leaving it because of the violent proceedings of the members thereof, he retired to Oxon, adhered to his majesty's cause, sat in the parliament there 1643, and on the 18 of Dec. 1644, he being then a colonel in his majesty's army, received the honour of knighthood.

THO. HANMORE.—His bare name only standing in the register, I can say nothing of him, only by conjecture, viz. That he was sir Tho. Hanmore, baronet, who had been burgess for the town of Flint in that parliament that began at Westm. on the 13 of Apr. 1640.

SIR ROB. STAPYLTON knight.—This person, who was the third son of Rich. Stapylton of Carleton in Moreland in Yorkshire, esq; was educated a Rom. cathol. in the coll. of the English Benedictines at Doway in Flanders, and being too gay and poetical to be confined within a cloyster, he left them, went into England, turned protestant, was made one of the gentlemen in ord. of the privy chamber to prince Charles, followed his majesty when he left London, was knighted 13 Sept. 1642, followed him after Edghill battel to Oxon, where he was actually created doct. of the civil law, as before 'tis told you, suffered when the royal cause declined, lived a studious life in the time of usurpation, and at length upon the restoration of king Charles II. (if not happily before) he was made one of the gent. ushers of the privy chamber belonging to him. He hath written (1) The slighted

Holyday used often to say that he made use of his translation of Juvenal, which sir Robert borrowed of him in MS. when he was about to publish the said Six Satyrs. (3) The Loves of Hero and Leander, a Greek Poem. Oxon. 1645. qu. in 3 sh. and at Lond. 1647. in oct. It was written originally by Musæus. To which translation he hath added Annotations upon the Original. (4) Leander's Letter to Hero, and her Answer. Printed with The Loves, &c. 'Tis taken out of Ovid, and hath Annotations put to it by sir Robert. (5) Juvenal's sixteen Satyrs. Or, a Survey of the Manners and Actions of Mankind, with Arguments, marginal Notes and Annotations, clearing the obscure Places out of the Hist. Laws and Ceremonies of the Romans. Lond. 1647. oct. with sir Rob. picture before it. It is dedicated to Henry marquess of Dorchester, (as one or two of the former books are) who seems to have been a favourer of his muse. This last book being much enlarged by him, was printed in a very fair fol. at Lond. 1660, bearing this title—Mores Hominum: The Manners of Men described in sixteen Satyrs by Juvenal, as he is published in his most authentic Copy, lately printed by Command of the King of France. Whereunto is added the Invention of seventeen Designs in Pictures, with Arguments to the Satyrs. Before this book is the effigies of sir Robert, curiously engraven, but represented too young. (6) The History of the Low Country Wars (or de Bello Belgico,) &c. Lond. 1650. fol. Written in Lat. by Favianus Strada. What other books he hath written and translated I know not, nor any thing else of him, only that he paying his last debt to nature on the tenth or eleventh day of July, an. 1669, was buried near to the vestry door in the abbey church of St. Peter at Westminster. He was uncle to sir Miles Stapylton of Yorkshire, younger brother to Dr. Stapylton a Benedictine monk: which last wrote himself and was usually called Benedictus Gregorius Stapylton, being president of the English Benedictines. He died in the monastery of the English Benedictines at Delaware in Loraine, 4 Aug. 1680, and was there interr'd.

WILL. KILLIGREW esq; sometimes a gent. com. of St. Joh. coll.—He was afterwards a knight and a publisher of several books, and therefore to be mention'd at large hereafter, he being now living.

SIR WILL. WALTER of Sarsden in the parish of Churchill in Oxfordshire baronet.—He was son and heir of sir John Walter sometimes chief baron of the exchequer, and dying on the 23d of March 1674, aged 74 years, was buried in the parish church of Churchill before-mention'd.

SIR JOHN MONSON or MOUNSON of South Carleton in Lincolnshire knight of the Bath, and baronet.—This person, who was son of sir Tho. Mounson of the same place baronet, was born in the parish of St. Sepulcher in London, not bred in any university, only spent some time in one of the inns of court, whereby he became as good a lawyer as any in London, and as wise a man as any now (1642) in Oxon, when then he assisted in all councils, and was in all treaties, particularly in that concerning the surrender of the garrison of Oxford to the parliament, an. 1646. He afterwards suffered much for his loyalty, and at length was permitted a quiet retirement. He hath written (1) An Essay of Afflictions by Way of Advice to his only Son. Lond. 1661, 62. Written in the time of the unhappy wars. (2) Antidote against the Errors of Opinions of Many in their Days, concerning some of the highest and chiefest Duties of Religion, viz. Adoration, Almes, Fasting and Prayer. Printed with the former book. (3) "A short Answer to several Questions, proposed to a Gent. of Quality by a great Minister of State, &c. shewing the Author's Judgment concerning the public Exercise of several Religions and Formes of Worship, &c. under one and the same Government, as they may relate both to Discipline and Doctrine, Ceremonials or Essentials in Worship," Lond. 1678, in 3 sh. qu. (4) "A Discourse concerning supreme Power * " and common Right.

* This I have not yet seen, and therefore I cannot give you a fuller title nor the time when printed. First edit.

before-mention'd, among the graves of his ancestors. The report among his relations at this day is, that when he was in Oxon in the war time he was made doctor of physic, but false; for he being vers'd in the common, thought it convenient to be created doctor of the civil, law, and among those doth his name stand.

SIR CHRISTOPHER HATTON knight of the Bath.—He was created lord Hatton of Kirby in Northamptonshire, by let. pat. bearing date at Oxon 29 Jul. 1643, and about that time was made privy-counsellor to king Charles I. and comptroller of his household, he being then accounted a friend to all that loved the king and church of England, for which he suffered in a high degree. Some time after the restoration, his majesty was pleased, of his own accord, in consideration of his vast sufferings and eminent loyalty, to make him one of his privy-council, and as a testimony of further favour, he not only made him governour of the isle of Guernsey, for his life, but conferr'd the reversion of that government on his son, as a lasting mark of honour on his family. This Christoph. L. Hatton was a principal Mecænas of learning, and more especially of antiquities,⁸ wherein his skill and knowledge did far surpass any within the compass of his orb (the nobility) that I know.

SIR BRIAN PALMES of Ashwell or Astwell in Rutlandshire kt.—This loyal knight, (son of sir Guy Palmes) who had been educated in Trin. coll. was chose a Burgess for Aldburg in Yorkshire, to serve in that parl. which began at Westm. 13 Apr. 1640, but whether he did sit in the parl. at Oxon 1643 I know not. He died in 1654.

SIR WILL. BROUNKER kt. late commissary general of the musters in the Scotch expedition, an. 1639, now vice-chamberlain to prince Charles and one of the privy chamber to king Charles I. was then also (Nov. 1.) actually created doctor of the civil law.—This loyal knight, who was son of sir Hen. Brounker president of Munster in Ireland, by Anne his wife sister of Henry lord Morley, was created viscount of Castle-Lyons in the said kingdom 12 Sept. 1645, and dying in Wadh. coll. in the middle of Nov. following, was buried on the 20th of the said month in the isle joyning, on the west side, to the north transept of the cathedral of

Ch. Ch. in Oxon, leaving then behind him a son named William, aged 25 years or thereabouts, of whom I shall speak at large under the year 1646. Winefrid the widow of the said lord Brounker (dau. of Will. Leigh of Newenham in Warwickshire) died 20 July 1649, after she had lost and won vast sums of money by gaming: whereupon her body was convey'd to Oxon, and buried by that of her husband. Many years after was a large marble stone laid over their graves, and in the wall near it was erected a splendid monument of alabaster containing their statues sitting, both leaning on a table that stands between them.

SIR NICH. BYRON of Norfolk, was also then created doctor of the civ. law.—He was uncle to John lord Byron, was a colonel and an excellent commander of foot. King Charles I. did so much value him, that in warlike engagements he would have him always near to him. I have been told by persons that had degrees conferr'd upon them in these creations, that THOMAS, ROBERT⁹ and WILLIAM BYRON, all knights, valiant colonels for his majesty and brothers to the most couragious lord Byron before-mention'd, had degrees conferr'd on them, but in what faculty they knew not, nor are they registred. For the truth is the public scribe or registry of the university that now was, being given more to bibbing and smoaking than the duty of his office, many learned and valiant persons are omitted by him. Nay, those also that are by him remembred have only their bare names, and sometimes only their surnames, set down, without the addition of their titles, quality, office, or place of habitation. Sir Tho. Byron before-mention'd was buried on the left side of the grave of William lord Grandison in a little isle joyning on the south side of the choir of Ch. Ch. cathedral in Oxon, 9 Feb. 1643.

WINGFIELD LORD CROMWELL.—He was, after the death of his father, earl of Arglas in Ireland.

SIR THOM. SALISBURY baronet, sometimes of Jesus coll. in this university.

⁹ WILL. CHADWELL esq;—He was burgess for Michel in Cornwall to serve in that parl. that began at Westm. 3 Nov. 1640: which parliament he leaving because of the violent proceedings therein, retired to his majesty at Oxon, and sate in the parl. there.

FERDINANDO STANHOPE esq;—He was a burgess for Tamworth in Staffordshire for the said parliament, but leaving it, he retired to his majesty and sate in the Oxford parliament: this worthy person, who was a younger son of Philip earl of Chesterfield, was made a colonel of horse in the king's army, and was soon after slain at Bridgford in Nottinghamshire.

JOHN DUTTON of Sherbourne in Gloucestershire esq;—He was one of the knights for that county to sit in the said parliament; but being frighted thence by the tumults that came up to the parliament door, as other royalists were, he conveyed himself privately to Oxon, and sate there. He was a learned and a prudent man, and as one of the richest, so one of the meekest, men in England. He was active in making the defence, and drawing up the articles, of Oxon, when the garrison was to be surrendred to the parliament: for which, and his steddly loyalty he afterwards was forced to pay a round sum in Goldsmiths hall at London. "He died 14 Jan. 1656."

JOHN LUFTON of St. Joh. coll.—He was now rector of Ibstock in Leicestershire, where being always esteemed a great royalist and episcopalian, was therefore forced thence by the faction: so that flying to Oxon as an asylum, he was created doctor of the civil law, and often preached there. He died (at Ibstock I think) an. 1647, or thereabouts.

DANIEL VIVIAN of New coll.—He was a founder's kinsman, and dying at Farnish in Bedfordshire, an. 1670, was there, I suppose, buried.

BRONE WHORWOOD of Halton in Oxfordshire esq; sometimes a gent. com. of Trin. coll.—This person, tho' he stuck close to king Ch. I. in his necessities, yet he did not to his son king Charles II. after whose restoration he was several times elected burgess for the city of Oxford. He died in the Old Palace Yard at Westminster, 12 Apr. 1684, and was buried in the church of Halton near to the grave of his father sir Thom. Whorwood knt. leaving then behind him a natural son named Thomas, begotten on the body of his servant named Katharine, daughter of Thomas Allen of the parish of St. Peter in the East in Oxon, baker.¹

SIR THOM. HELE of Devonsh. bart.—He was burgess for Plimpton in the parl. that began 13 Apr. 1640, and with sir Joh. Hele (both lords of great estates in their country) and Walt. Hele of Winston did retire to his majesty at Oxon, adhere to him, and thereby brought his cause into great credit for the justness of it, as also rich contributions thereunto, and many forces to maintain it.

WILL. DOWDESWELL of Pemb. coll.—This person, who was accounted a learned man among those of his society, became preb. of Worcester in 1660, in the place of Francis Charlet M. A. some years before that dead; and had, if I mistake not, other spiritualities in the church. In his prebendship succeeded Dr. George Benson archdeacon of Hereford, au. 1671.

On the same day (Nov. 1.) were also created doctors of the civil law JOH. KNOTSFORD (a knight I think) JOH. WANDESTON, WILL. ATKYNS, JOH. PALMER, and one PEACHY; or at least were permitted to be created when they pleased; which is all I yet know of them.

NOV. 10. WILL. SMITH esq; sometimes a gent. com. of Trin. coll.—He was a burgess for one of the Cinque-Ports called Winchelsea, for that parl. that began at Westminster 3 Nov. 1640, but left it, went to Oxon, and sate in the parliament there 1643.

Dec. 20. SIR THO. MANWARING² knt. "of the Inner-Temple, steward or" recorder of Reading in Berks.

HEN. MOODY sometimes a gent. com. of Magd. hall.—I take this person to be the same with sir Hen. Moody bart. (son of sir Hen. Moody of Garsdon in Wiltshire knight and baronet) who was now in some esteem at court for his poetical fancy. The father who had been a well bred gentleman died in 1630.

Dec. 20. { THO. THORY.
GEORGE THORALD.

SIR JOH. HEYDON or HEYDEN knt. lieutenant-general of the ordnance belonging to his majesty.—He was of the family of the Heydens in Norfolk, was as great a scholar as a soldier, especially in the mathematics, suffered much for his majesty's cause, and died 16 Oct. an. 1653. One Joh. Heyden gent. was entred into the public or Bodleian library, under the title of 'juris municipalis studiosus' an. 1627: Whether the same with the former I cannot tell. I have made mention of sir Christoph. Heyden (who was father to sir John) in the first vol. of this work, col. 745.

Jan. 31. EDW. LORD LITTLETON, lord keeper of the great seal.

SIR JOHN BANKS knt. lord chief justice of the common pleas, was actually created doctor of the civil law the same day.—This worthy person was born of honest parents in Cumberland, at Keswick as 'tis said, became a commoner of Qu. coll. in this university, an. 1604, aged 15 years, left it before he took a degree, entred himself a student in Greys inn in Holborn near London, where applying himself most severely to the study of the common law, became a barrister and a counsellor of note. In the 6th of Car. I. he being then a knight, and attorney to pr. Charles, was constituted Lent reader of that house, and in the 7th of Car. I. he was made treasurer thereof. In 1640, 16 Car. I. he was made³ lord ch. just. of the king's bench, and soon after following his majesty when he was forced by tumults from Westin. he was made one of his privy council at Oxon, and lord ch. just. of the com. bench or pleas; where dying 28 Dec. 1644, was buried in the north transept joyning to Ch. Ch. cathedral. See his epitaph in Hist. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon. lib. 2. p. 289. a.

SIR FRANCIS CRAWLEY of Luton in Bedfordshire knight, one of the justices of the common pleas, was also then actually created doctor of the civil law.—You may read much of him in the Memoirs of the Lives and Actions of excellent Personages, &c. published by David Lloyd M. A.—Lond. 1668. fol.

SIR ROB. FORSTER knight, one of the justices of the common pleas, was also then created.—He was the youngest son of sir Thom. Forster knt. one of the justices of the common pleas in the time of king Jam. I. was, after he had left the university, a student in the Inner-Temple, where he became a barrister and counsellor of note. In the 7th of Car. I. he was elected summer reader of that house, in the 12th he was made serjeant at law, and in the 15th of the said king's reign one of the justices of the king's bench, and about that time a knight. Afterwards he followed his majesty to Oxon, sate in the parl. there, as sir Joh. Banks and sir Franc. Crawley did, suffered as other royalists when the king's cause declined, and compounded for his estate. After his majesty's restoration, he was made lord chief just. of the king's bench 31 May 1660, and in Oct.⁴ following lord chief just. of the common pleas. He died on the fourth day of Oct. 1663, aged 74 years, and was buried in the church at Egham in Surrey, where there is a comely monument in the wall over his grave, in the body of the said church.⁵

Feb. 7. SIR ROB. HEATH lord chief justice successively of the com. pleas and king's bench, was then actually created doctor of the civ. law.—This noted and loyal person was born in the parish of Eatonbridge in Kent and baptized in the church there,⁶ educated in the knowledge of the common law in the Inner-Temple, made recorder of London 10 Nov. 1618, in the place of Rich. Martin deceased, summer reader of the same Temple in 1619, solicitor general in the year following, (being then of Mitcham in Surrey, and justice of the peace for that county) attorney general in 1625, serjeant at law 1632, one of the justices of the common bench in 1640, and two years after, or more, lord chief just. of the common bench or pleas, he being then with his maj. at Oxon.⁷ He hath extant Objections in a Conference desired by the Lords and held by a Committee of both Houses concerning the Rights and Privileges of the Subject, 3 Apr. 4 Car. I. Lond. 1641, qu. Upon the declining of the king's cause he fled beyond the sea, being an excepted person by the parliament, and died at Caen in Normandy⁸ about the end of Aug. 1649, leaving then behind him a son named Edward, who had his father's estate restored to him after his majesty's return from his exile. One Rob. Heath esq; wrote and published, Clarestella, together with other occasional Poems, Elegies, Epigrams and Satyrs. Lond. 1650, in tw. but what kin he was to sir Rob. Heath the judge, or whether he was of this university, I know not as yet.

SIR SAMPSON EWRE knight, sometimes written EVERS, serjeant at law, was created the same day.—This person, who was the third son of sir Franc. Ewre knt. brother to Ralph lord Ewre, had been his majesty's attorney gen. in Wales, was now with him in Oxon, sate in the parliament there, and was afterwards a sufferer for his cause.

ROB. HOLBOURNE a counsellor of Linc. inn, was also created doct. of the civ. law the same day.—In 1640 he was chose Burgess for Michel in Cornwall to serve in that parl. that began at Westminster 3d of Nov. the same year, and on the 15th of Dec. following, he argued two hours in the house of commons in justification of the canons. In 1641 he was Lent reader of the same inn, and soon after leaving the parl. because of their desperate proceedings, “(tho’ he “had formerly given advice against ship-money)” he retired to his maj. at Oxon, sate in the parl. there, 1643, and in the latter end of that year was made the prince's attorney, in the place of sir Rich. Lane, one of his majesty's privy council, and a knight. In the latter end of 1644 he was present at the treaty at Uxbridge in the behalf of his majesty, as he was afterwards at that in the isle of Wight: About which time retiring to London, he was forced to compound for his estate, but not permitted to abide in any of the inns of court. He hath published, (1) The Reading in Lincoln's Inn, 28 Feb. 1641, upon the Statute of the 25 of Ed. III. Cap. 2. being the Statute of Treasons. Oxon. 1642, in two sh. in qu. Feb. 7. { CHARLES ROSER esq.

{ DEGORY COLLINS esq.

SIR TROYLUS TURBERVILL knt. was created the same day. —This most valiant person, who was of the Turbervills of Moreden in Dorsetshire, was afterwards captain-lieutenant of the king's life-guard of horse, and was slain at his majesty's going from Newark to Oxford, towards the latter end of August 1645.

SIR THOM. THYNNE knt. was also created the same day. —I take this to be the same sir Thom. who was a younger son of sir Thom. Thynne of Longleat in Wilts. knt. and the same who was father, by his wife the daughter of Dr. Walt. Balcanquall sometimes dean of Durham, to Thom. Thynne of Longleat, who was murdered in the Pall-Mall at Westminster on the 12th of Feb. 1681.

Feb. 21. JOHN PENRUDDOCK of Compton-Chamberlaine in Wilts. esq; was then (being in the service of his majesty) actually created doctor of the civ. law, and three days after had the honour of knighthood conferr'd upon him by his majesty.—He was father to colonel John Penruddock, who when a youth at Blandford school, and after when a fellow com. of Qu. coll. in this university delighted in books, when a man, in arms; which in his maturer years he willingly put on to redeem the liberties of three enslaved kingdoms, tho' with the loss of his own life by the axe in the castle of Exeter, 16 May 1655. Let therefore all military men of honour approach with devotion his altar-tomb, and offer up their tributary tears, as due victims to distressed valour.

ADRIAN SCROPE of Cockrington in Lincolnshire esq; was actually created the same day.—This most valiant person, who was son of sir Jervais Scrope of the same place and high sheriff of Lincolnshire 1634, did most loyally attend his majesty at the fight of Edghill, where receiving several wounds, was strip'd and left among the dead, as a dead person, there, but brought off by his son, and recovered by the immortal Dr. Will. Harvey, who was there; but withdrawn under a hedge with the prince and duke, while the battle was in its height. 'Tis reported that this Adr. Scrope received 19 wounds in one battle in defence of his majesty's cause,⁹ but whether in that fought at Edghill I cannot justly say: sure I am that he was made knight of the Bath at the coronation of king Charles II. an. 1661. There was another Adrian Scrope a soldier also, but taking part with the parliament, became one of the judges of king Charles I. as I shall elsewhere tell you.

Looking by chance over your hooke I found at p. 711 in the 2nd vol. of FASTI some mention of sir Jervais Scroope, where I think there is a mistake, where you say that Adrian Scroope (his son) received 19 wounds. It was not he, but his father sir Jervais, that rece^d those wounds, for I saw him brought up early on Monday morning from Kinton field to Edge Hill (where the king lay all night in his coach) by his son Adrian, and shown to the king in almost a dead condition; therefore you may please to retouch that paragraph, and give the loyal old gentleman his due. And remove from that place the mention of Adrian Scroope the rebel, not fit to stand so near so eminent an example of loyalty.]

This year, but the month, week or day when, I know not, (being omitted by the registry) was actually created doctor of the civ. law ROB. LEVINZ M. A. of Linc. coll. now in arms for his majesty, and a very zealous person for his cause. He was son of Will. Levinz of Seukworth, joyning to Botley, near Abingdon in Berks, (who exercised the trade of brewing in the parish of St. Peter in the Bailly, within the city of Oxon) and he the son of Will. Levinz sometimes alderman and apothecary of the said city. This Rob. who was afterwards a captain, did considerable service according to his capacity, but upon the surrender of the garrison of Oxon, to the parliament, he betook himself to his book again, as some hundreds of scholars did that had bore arms. After the murder of king Charles I. he engaged himself for his son, received a commission from him for the raising of forces and blank commissions for divers officers. But being at length discovered by certain inquisitive persons employed purposely to find out plots against the state, he was hurried before a court-marshal, where acknowledging their allegations against him and the justice of his cause, was by them sentenced to be hang'd. Whereupon he was hurried away in a coach from the Mewse (guarded by a troop of horse) to the exchange in Cornhill, where he was executed about noon on the 18th of Jul. 1650, aged 35 years, leaving a widow behind him, daughter of sir Peregrine Bertie, son of Robert earl of Lindsey. These things I here set down because the said Dr. Levinz was afterwards numbred among the loyal martyrs.

Doctors of Physic.

From the 1st of Nov. to the 31st of Jan. were more than 20 doctors of physic actually created, of which number were these that follow.

Nov. 1. SIR RICH. NAPIER knt. originally of Wadh. coll. afterwards fellow of that of All-soul's, was then actually created doctor of phys.—This person, who was nephew and heir to Rich. Napier rector of Linford in Bucks, a younger son of sir Rob. Napier of Luton-Hoe in Bedfordshire bt. was afterwards one of the first members of the Royal Society, a great pretender to virtue and astrology,¹ made a great noise in the world, yet did little or nothing towards the public. He died in the house of sir John Lenthall at Besills-Lee near Abingdon in Berks. 17 Jan. 1675, and was buried in the church at Linford before-mentioned; the manor of which did belong to him; but after his death his son Thom. sold it for 19500*l.* or thereabouts.² The said sir Richard drew up a book containing A Collection

When E. W. esq^r (Edward Waller) was about eight years old, he was troubled with the worms. His grandfather carried him to Dr. Napier at Lynford. Mr. E. W. peeped in at the closet, at the end of the gallery, and saw him upon his knees at prayer. The doctor told sir Francis, that at fourteen years old, his grandson would be freed from that distemper, and he was so: the medicine he prescribed was to drink a little draught of Muscadine in the morning. 'Twas about 1625. This Dr. Richard Napier was rector of Lynford in Bucks, and did practise physick, but gave most to the poor that he got by it. 'Tis certain he told his own death to a day and hour. He dyed praying upon his knees, being of a very great age 1634, Apr. 1. He was nearly related to the learned lord Napier baron of M. . . . in Scotland, I have forgot whether his brother. His knees were horny with frequent praying. He left his estate to sir Richard Napier M. D. of the college of physicians, London, from whom Mr. Ashmole had the doctor's picture now in the museum. The said Joh. Hinton was afterwards a knight and physician to king Charles II. and his queen.

Jan. 16. { JOH. MERRET a captain in Cornwall.
WALT. CHARLTON of Magd. hall.

Jan. 31. { THOM. BAYLIE lately of Hart-hall.
THOM. HAYES a physician in the king's army.
SIR HEN. MANWARING knt.

The first of these last three, was son of Dr. Ralph Baylie sometimes fellow of New coll. and afterwards a physician of note at Bath;³ which Thomas practising afterwards at Newbury in Berks. died there of a high infection in the prime of his years. As for the last, sir H. Manwaring, I find one of both his names and a knight too, author of *The Seamen's Dictionary: or an Exposition and Demonstration of all the Parts belonging to a Ship.*⁴ Lond. 1670. qu. Whether the same I cannot tell.

SIR JOH. TERRYNGHAM knt. high sheriff of Buckinghamshire, was created the same day.—He died on the second day of May 1645, and was buried in St. Mary's church in Oxon.

SIR JOHN STAWELL knt. of the Bath, sometimes gent. com. of Queen's coll. was also created the same day.—He was one of the knights for Somersetshire to serve in that parl. which began at Westm. 3 Nov. 1640, but leaving it when the king was forced to leave Westminster, he retired to him at Oxon, and sate there for a time in the parliament conven'd there. That which is chiefly memorable of this most worthy person, is, that being one of the most eminent men in Somersetshire for estate, wisdom and prudence, did, after he had undergone all the principal services and employments for his country, viz. high sheriff, deputy lieutenant, and knight for the shire in several parliaments, most loyally and courageously take up arms, with three of his sons, raised three regiments of horse, and two of dragoons and of foot upon his sole charge in defence of his majesty king Charles I. as also of the laws of this kingdom, and rights of the subject, invaded by wicked conspirators under colour of reformation, an. 1642. He was then a colonel of horse, and soon after was made governour of Taunton, and continued there till remanded. Upon the declining of the king's cause, he was not admitted to his composition, as others were, tho' compriz'd within the articles of Exeter upon the surrender of that city to the powers at that time prevailing: And the reason was, because they thirsted not only after his large estate, but conspired also to take away his life. He endured in those times of affliction long and tedious imprisonments in the press-yard in Newgate, and other goales, and after in the Tower of London: And did with admirable wisdom and courage approve himself an eminent assertor of the laws and liberties of the kingdom by making such a defence in their several bloody tribunals, (viz. at their upper bench bar and high court of justice) as that he put to silence those bold judges, who sate there with design to take away his life. And tho' he was reduced to the greatest want and misery which his severe opposers by sale of his lands, and cutting down his woods and demolishing the principal seat of his family at Cotholstone could bring upon him, yet by the subsistence which his aged mother the lady Elizabeth Griffin afforded him, which was all he had, he most cheerfully underwent the same, lived to see the happy restoration of king Charles II. and to be again elected one of the knights of the county of Somerset to sit in that parl. which began at Westm. 8 May 1661. After he had continued there some months, his urgent affairs drew him to his house at Ham, three miles distant from Somerton in his own country; where dying 21 Feb. 1661, aged 62 years, was buried on the 23d of Apr. following on the south side of the church at Cotholstone, five miles distant from Taunton. There goes under the name of this most loyal person, his Petition and Remonstrance to the Parliament of the Commonwealth of England, Scotland and Ireland; as also his Vindication, printed 1653 and 55. fol. In the latter end of Jan. 1682, his majesty king Charles II. was graciously pleased to create Ralph Stawell esq; a baron of England, by the name and stile of lord Stawell of Somerton, in consideration of the eminent loyalty and sufferings of his father before-mentioned, during all the time of his troubles, and the many good and acceptable services performed by him.

Jan. 31. { SIR ROB. LEE } knights.

Doctors of Divinity.

From the 1st of Nov. to the 21st of Feb. were between 40 and 50 doctors of divinity actually created: most of whom follow.

Nov. 1. { ROB. PAYNE ⁵ } canons of Ch. Ch.
 { GEORGE MORLEY }

The last of which was afterwards successively bishop of Worcester and Winchester.

BARTEN HOLYDAY sometimes of Ch. Ch. now archdeacon of Oxford, was created the same day.

Nov. 1. { HEN. STRINGER of New coll.
 { JER. TAYLOR }

The first of these last three had been Greek professor of this university, and was afterwards warden of his coll. whence being ejected he retired to London, where dying in Febr. 1657, was buried in the church of the Black Fryars. The second was now, or about this time, fellow of Eaton coll. and master of Wigston's hospital at Leicester:⁶ from both which being ejected in the times of usurpation, he suffered equally with other loyalists: At length upon his majesty's return he was not only restored to his fellowship and hospital, but elected warden of All-s. coll. in the place of Dr. Sheldon promoted to the see of London, and made provost of Eaton coll. in the room of Dr. Nich. Monk, advanced to the see of Hereford. See his epitaph in Hist. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon. lib. 2. pag. 185. b. The third, Dr. Taylor, was, after his majesty's return, made bishop of Downe and Conner in Ireland.

Nov. 1. { . . . MASON } of Cambridge.
 { . . . SHEAWOOD }

The first of these two was perhaps Charles Mason of King's coll. who was afterwards rector of the church of St. Peter le Poor in London,⁷ author of (1) Concio ad Clerum Londinensem in Eccles. S. Alphagi. Lond. 1676. qu. (2) Miles Christianus, preached to the Artillery Company 16 Octob. 1673, at St. Mich. in Cornhill; on 2 Tim. 2. 3. and of other things. He died in the time of winter 1677.

PETER HAUSTED M. A. of Cambridge was actually created D. of D. the same day.—This noted person was born at Oundle in Northamptonshire, educated in Queen's coll. in the same university, enter'd into holy orders when M. of A. became curate of Uppingham in Rutlandshire, and at length rector, as 'tis said, of Hadham in Hertfordshire. Upon the breaking out of the rebellion, or thereabouts, he became chaplain to the noble and loyal Spencer earl of Northampton, stuck close to him in all engagements, was with him in the castle of Banbury in Oxfordshire, when stoutly defended against them; where concluding his last day in the year 1645, was either buried in the precincts of that castle, or else in the church belonging to Banbury. This person, who was always accounted an ingenious man, and an excellent poet, hath written and published several things, as, (1) The Rival Friends, a Comedy. Lond. 1632. qu. Acted before the king and queen at Cambridge, 19 Mar. 1631. (2) Senile Odium: Comœdia Cantabrigiæ publicè Academicis recitata in Coll. Reginali ab ejusdem Collegii Juventute. Cantab. 1633. in tw. A Lecture to the People, with a Satyr against Separatists.* Oxon. 1644. &c. in three sh. in qu. 'Tis a poem, and the title of it was given by king Charles I. who seeing it in manuscript with the title of A Sermon to the People, he alter'd it, and caused it to be called A Lecture, &c. being then much pleased with it. Nov. 1. GEORGE ROBERTS sometimes fellow of Trin. coll. in this university, now rector of Hambledon in Bucks.—This person, who was a general scholar, and a most accurate preacher, was afterwards thrown out of his living by the usurpers, and suffered much for his loyalty. After his majesty's return was restored to his living, and on the 9th of August 1660, he was install'd archdeacon of Winchester, in the place of Dr. Edw. Burby, some years before dead. Dr. Roberts died at Istleworth in Middlesex about the middle of March an. 1660, and was buried in the chancel of his church at Hambledon before-mention'd, on the 17th of the same month. Over his grave was soon after erected a comely monument, with an inscription thereon made by Dr. Ralph Bathurst.⁸ In his archdeaconry was installed on the 19th of the said month of March, Dr. Thom. Gorges sometimes fellow of All-s. coll.

⁵ [This person appears to have been a very able mathematician; among Dr. Rawlinson's books in Bodley is a copy of Roger Bacon's Specula Mathematica, 4to. containing a great number of MS. notes and additions, as I understand, of much merit.]

GILB. WATS batch. of div. of Linc. coll. was actually created D. D. the same day.

JAMES FLEETWOOD of Cambridge was also then created.—He was the seventh son of sir George Fleetwood of the Vache in the parish of Chalfont S. Giles in Bucks. knight, by his wife Catherine⁹ daughter of Henry Denny of Waltham in Essex, and sister to sir Edw. Denny earl of Norwich: And, being when a child, very forward to learn, he was sent to Eaton school, where being ripen'd for the university, was admitted scholar of King's coll. in Cambridge, an. 1622. After he was four years standing in the degree of master of arts, he became chaplain to Dr. Wright bishop of Litchfield, by whom he was presented to the vicaridge of Prees or Priss in Shropshire, and soon after collated to the prebendship of Eccleshall belonging to the said church of Litchfield, but before he was admitted or installed, the rebellion broke out. Afterwards being forced for his loyalty to forsake his preferment, he betook himself to the wars, and became chaplain to the regiment of John earl of Rivers, and in the quality of a chaplain he continued to the end of the said wars. In 1642, he was by the king's special command honoured with the degree of doct. of div. for the service he did him at Edg-hill fight, and soon after was made chaplain to Charles prince of Wales, and rector of Sutton-Colfield in Warwickshire. After the wars were ceased, and he ejected thence, he became tutor to three earls, viz. to the earl of Litchfield, earl of Kildare, and the earl of Sterling: Afterwards to two dukes, namely to Esme duke of Richmond and Lenox, with whom he travelled into France (where he died) and to Charles who succeeded him in his dukedoms. After the restoration of king Charles II. he was the first that was sworn chaplain in ord. to him, was made provost of King's coll. in Cambridge in June 1660, and about that time rector of Anstey in Hertfordshire, and of Denham in Bucks.¹ On the 29th of Aug. 1675, the archbishop of Cant. being then at Croydon, and the bishop of London (Henchman) languishing and near his end, he the said Dr. Fleetwood was consecrated bishop of Worcester, not in the chap. at Lambeth, or in that at Fulham, nor in Bow Church, because unfinished, but in the church of St. Peter le Poor in Broadstreet in London, in the place of Dr. Walt. Blandford deceased; at which time his old friend and acquaintance Dr. Charles Mason sometimes of King's coll. was rector of the said church, and procured for him a neighbouring hall to keep his consecration feast in. He died on the 17th of July 1683, aged 81 years, and was buried near the body of bishop Gauden in our Lady's chappel within the precincts of the cath. ch. at Worcester. In his provostship of King's coll. succeeded sir Tho. Page knight, about Michaelmas 1675, a person of great experience, learning, and infinite accomplishments, (who died 8 Aug. 1681) and in his bishoprick Dr. Will. Thomas, as I have elsewhere told you. After Easter in 1687 was erected over the grave of the said bishop Fleetwood a large marble monument, with an epitaph of his own making, which being too large for this place, shall be now omitted. Tho' this bishop was a very loyal person, yet several of his family of the Vache were great parliamentiers and Cromwellians, among whom was George Fleetwood one of the judges of king Charles I. for which he lost the Vache and his other estate.

WILL. CHILLINGWORTH of Trin. coll. was put into the same roll with the former persons, by his majesty, to be created D. D. but he came not to take it, nor was he diplomated.

These two last were created the same day, or at least were allowed their degrees when they would please to call for them; but whether they were educated in Ch. Ch. it appears not, and therefore I presume they were strangers that came with, and attended, the king's court, lodging now in that house. I find one Thom. Hodges to be rector of Kensington² near London before the rebellion broke out, a preacher sometimes before the long parliament, one of the ass. of divines, and a covenanter. After his majesty's restoration he became rector of St. Peter's church in Cornhill, London,³ and dean of Hereford⁴ in the place of Dr. H. Croft⁵ made bishop thereof an. 1661; which deanery he holding to the time of his death, was succeeded therein by Dr. George Benson about midsummer, an. 1672. This Tho. Hodges hath extant, (1) A Glimpse of God's Glory, Sermon before the H. of Com. at a solemn Fast, 28 Sept. 1642, on Psal. 113. 5, 6. Lond. 1642. qu. Another Thom. Hodges I find who was rector of Soulderne near Deddington in Oxfordshire, and batch. of divinity, not of this university but that of Cambridge, and afterwards one of the chaplains of All-soul's coll. in the time of Oliver, which he kept with his rectory. Dec. 20. EDW. WOLLEY M. of A. or batch, of div. of Camb. and at this time one of the chapl. to his majesty, was actually created doct. of div.—He was born in the antient borough of Shrewsbury, educated in the King's school there, transplanted thence to St. Joh. coll. in the said university,⁹ where he took the degrees in arts; and afterwards adhering to the cause of his majesty, retired to Oxon to attend, and preached sometimes before him there. When his majesty's cause declined he suffered as other royalists did, attended his son in his adverse fortune, while he himself endured great misery. After the return of king Charles II. he became rector of a church in Essex (Finchingfield¹ I think) to settle the inhabitants thereof in loyal principles and to undo and invalidate the doctrine which that most notorious independent Steph. Marshall² had instill'd into them. In 1665 he was promoted to the episcopal see of Clonfort and Kilmacogh in Ireland, to which being³ consecrated at Tuam on the 16th of Apr. the same year, sate there for some time, and was held in great veneration for his admirable way of preaching and exemplary life and conversation. Among several things that he hath extant, are these (1) *Eulogia. Rogers, who some time before had fled from Oxon to the parliament. This person, who was always esteemed a good Grecian, and well furnish'd with other parts of learning, died about half a year before his majesty's return, and thereby prevented not only his restoration to what he had lost for the king's cause, but his promotion to higher dignities.

WILL. OLDIS of New coll. sometimes proctor of the university, was actually created the same day—He was afterwards slain by the parliament soldiers, without any provocation given on his part, between Adderbury⁴ in Oxfordshire (of which place he was vicar) and the garrison of Oxon, about 1644.

"who took the degree of batch. of arts, an. 1637, as I have "in the FASTI of that year told you:" the said Matthew Fowler was now deeply engaged in his majesty's service, for which afterwards he suffered as other royalists did. After his majesty's restoration he became rector of the rich church of Whitechurch in Shropshire in the place of Dr. Nich. Bernard deceased, where he continued to his dying day. June 15. HEN. FERNE D.D. of Cambridge.⁵—This learned person, who was originally of St. Mary's hall in Oxon, was afterwards bish. of Chester.

Dec. 9. SIR JOHN LAMB Kt. doct. of the laws of Cambridge and dean of the arches.⁶—This worthy knight, who had been a great persecutor of the puritans, was now forced by them to leave his station and retire to his majesty at Oxon, where for a time he found security. Afterwards he suffered much for the royal cause, paid a large sum of money for his composition, and was in a manner utterly ruin'd. He died in London (in the Bell Inn, as 'tis said, in St. Martin's lane) in the beginning of the year 1647. "He was "a different person from Dr. Lamb the conjuror, with whom "he is by some authors confounded."

Jan. 31. PAUL KNELL mast. of arts of Clare hall in Cambridge,⁷ now chaplain to a regiment of curiasiers in his majesty's army, was then incorporated in the same degree—He hath written and published (1) A Looking-glass for Levellers, Sermon on Luke 20. 14. Lond. 1648, qu. Mar. 21. WILL. HOLDER M. of A. of Pembr. hall in Cambr. — You may see more of this person, who was about this time rector of Blechington in Oxfordshire, among the created doctors of div. an. 1660.

JOHN CRUSE or CRUSO M. A. of the said university, was incorporated the same day.

Creations.

Notwithstanding the chief members of the university had the last year put up a petition to his majesty, against the promiscuous conferring of degrees, and the danger that the university was like to fall into, if some remedy in that matter was not taken, as namely that the solemn arts and sciences would be destroyed, the fountain of the university treasury dried up (because that few or none that were created paid any fees) and hopeful scholars discouraged and the university dishonoured; yet nevertheless his majesty could not otherwise at this time but recommend (as he did the year before) several of his faithful subjects to have degrees conferr'd upon them, tho' with this caution (as the chancellor of the university did the like in his recommendatory letters) that they should pay all or most of the fees belonging to each degree. The names of most of such persons that were actually created in several faculties, are here set down.

Batchelors of Arts.

Oct. 17. MARTIN BARNES, created in convocation.

Feb. 8. THO. CULPEPER of Univ. coll. was created by virtue of the letters of the chanc. of the university. — He was afterwards fellow of All-s. coll. and a writer, and therefore to be numbred hereafter among the Oxford authors.

Batchelors of Law.

Jan. 31. WILL. HINSON.

Mar. 18. JOHN BALDWIN — He was created in respect had to his loyalty and faithful service to his majesty, and extraordinary sufferings and imprisonment for religion and the laws.

Both these were created by virtue of the chancellor's letters, tho' Baldwin had not been educated in any university.

On the 9th of May this year THO. FLETCHER a student in the municipal laws had liberty granted to him (tho' then absent) to take the degree of batch. of the civil law, when he should come to the university.

Masters of Arts.

Jun. 16. { Sir FRANC. LEE knight.
{ WILL. KILLINGTREE esq.

The last of these two was buried in the middle isle of those three that joyn on the north side of the choir of Ch. Ch. cathedral in Oxon, 4 Aug. 1643.

Jul. 6. JOHN THEYER gent. sometimes a student in Magd. coll. — He was created by virtue of his majesty's rescript written with his own hand to sir Edw. Nicholas his secretary, which was the same day sent to the venerable convocation, to the end that the members thereof freely bestow that honour upon him who hath well deserved of his majesty and the church. The said Mr. Theyer had a little before presented to his majesty on the mount in Merton coll. garden, a book which he had dedicated to him, as I shall tell you among the writers, an. 1673.

July 18. RICH. EVANS B. A. of Magd. coll. — He was then created master because he had lately done for the king service in the western parts of England, and for that also he was now about to go into Ireland.

Oct. 17. RICH. RALLINGSON B. A. of Qu. coll. — He was then created master by virtue of the king's letters, which say that by our direction, and for our service he hath drawn a mathematical scheme or plot of this garrison (Oxon) wherein he hath given us good satisfaction, and is very like to be useful to us in our fortifications, &c. See among the created doctors of divinity 1661.

Oct. 17. { JOHN POSTON.
{ CAVE BECK.

The last of these two hath published The universal Character, by which all Nations may understand one another's Conceptions. Lond. 1657, oct. and perhaps other things, "and is rector of St. Helen's in Ipswich."¹

Dec. 9. JOHN COKE or COOK.

Jan. 31. DAN. SOUTHMEAD batch. of arts of this university was then created master.

Mar. 18. WILL. ZANCHIE who had rendred both his life and fortunes in the king's service under the command of Richard viscount Molineaux, and thereby had lost time in the university, was actually created M. of A. by virtue of the king's letters, dat. 10 Jan. this year.

"EDW. WALSINGHAM, under-secretary to George lord Digby secretary of state to king Charles I. was as it seems created M. A. or LL. B. this year. He was a Roman Catholic, and born of a genteel family, and author of (1) Britannicae Virtutis Imago: or the Effigies of true Fortitude express'd to the Life, in the famous Actions of that incomparable Kt. Maj. Gen. Smith, &c. Oxon, 1644, qu. (2) Alter Britannicae Heros — The Life of Hen. Gage."

Batchelors of Physic.

Oct. 17. FRANC. METCALF of St. Mary's hall.

Feb. 8. JOHN CATCHPOLE of Christ's coll. in Cambridge.

Batchelors of Divinity.

Oct. 17. JAMES BARDSEY. — He was a stranger as it seems, and the only batch. of div. that was created this year.

In the month of May it was granted to EDW. WILLISFORD then absent, that he might be created, when he came to the university, but whether he came or was admitted it appears not; perhaps he was the same Mr. Willisford who was lately ejected from Peter house in Cambr. for denying the covenant.

June 16. JEFFREY PALMER of the Middle Temple esq; — This worthy gentleman, who was son of Thom. Palmer of Carleton in Northamptonshire, by Katharine his wife, daughter of sir Edw. Watson of Rockingham knt. sister to the first lord Rockingham, was chosen burges for Stanford in Lincolnshire to sit in that parliament which began at Westminster 3 Nov. 1640, wherein he was a manager, of the evidence against Thomas earl of Strafford, and seemed to be an enemy to the prerogative. But afterwards perceiving full well what mad courses the members of the said parliament took, he boldly delivered his mind against the printing of that declaration called the Grand Remonstrance; for which he was committed to custody in Nov. 1642. Afterwards being freed thence, he retired to Oxon, sat in the parliament there, and was esteemed a loyal and able person in his profession. Upon the declining of the king's cause, he suffer'd as other royalists did, lived obscurely in England, and upon pretence of plotting with the cavaliers against Oliver the protector, he was imprison'd in the Tower of London, in the month of May 1655. On the 31st of May 1660, his majesty being then restored, he was made attorney-general, and about that time chief justice of Chester and a knight, and on the 7th of June following he was created a baronet. He hath collected and written Reports bearing this title, Les Reports de Sir Geoffrey Palmer Chevalier & Baronet, &c. Lond: 1678. fol. He paid his last debt to nature at Hampsted in Middlesex on the fifth day of May, an. 1670, aged 72: Whereupon his body being conveyed to the hall of the Middle Temple, lay there in state for a time, attended by three heralds of arms. Afterwards it was conveyed to the seat of his ancestors at Carleton in Northamptonshire before-mentioned, and there buried in a vault under part of the parish church. What inscription there is for him over his sepulchre I cannot tell; sure I am that Dr. Thom. Pierce hath composed a most noble⁴ epitaph on him, as also on his

He attended on the earl of Arundell in his expedition against the Scots in 1639, and the next year was sent into Wales in his majesty's service, and waited on his majesty in Oxford, where on the 12th of April 1643, he was created a doctor of law; but afterwards miserably swerved from his loyalty (and attended at the funeral of the earl of Essex, solemnized 22 Oct. 1646) and, by a scandalous agreement, got himself to be made Norroy king of arms by the usurper Cromwell. However, after the restoration he was permitted to enjoy his office of York, till he resigned the same. He married Rebecca, the only daughter of Sir Thomas Dayrell of Lillingston, by whom he had two sons, who both dyed without issue, the first baptized 26 Nov. 1633, the second April 2, 1635, and Mary his sole daughter married to his successor John Wingfield. July 18. JOHN PHILIPOT herald of arms by the title of Somerset — This person, who was of Eltham in Kent, was born at Folkston in that county, and having a geny from his childhood to heraldry and antiquities,⁵ was, from being an officer of arms extraordinary called Blanch Lyon, created officer in ordinary called Rouge Dragon, the 19th of Nov. 1618, and on the 8th of July 1624, herald by the title of Somerset: In which capacity he was employed by his majesty to make a presentation of the most noble order of the Garter to his highness Charles Lodowick prince elector, in the army at Bockstell or Bockstall in Brabant. In the beginning of the presbyterian rebellion in 1642; he was one of those loyal heralds who followed his majesty, was with him at Oxon, but took up his quarters two miles distant thence, at a place called Chawley in the parish of Comnore: where being seized on by certain parliament soldiers of the garrison of Abingdon, was conveyed thence a prisoner to London, in 1644 or thereabouts. But being soon after set at liberty, he spent the short remainder of his days in London in great obscurity. At length yielding to nature, I cannot say in want, was buried within the precincts of St. Bennet's church near to Paul's-wharf on the 25th of Nov. 1645. He hath written, (1) Catalogue of the Chancellors of England, the Lord Keepers of the Great Seal, and the Lord Treasurers of England. With a Collection of divers that have been Masters of the Rolls. Lond. 1636. qu. (2) Additions to Will. Cambden's Remains concerning Britain. Lond. 1637. &c. qu. (4) An Historical Catalogue of the High Sheriffs of Kent. This is added to the said Villare Cantianum. He the said Joh. Philipot hath also written, as 'tis said, a book proving that gentry doth not abate with apprenticeship, but only sleepeth, during the time of their indentures, and awaketh again when they are expired. But this book I have not yet seen.⁶

Aug. Sir JOHN BOROUGH knt. Garter principal king of arms — His grace did then pass in a convocation to be doctor of the civil law, but whether he was admitted, it appears not (as several creations do not) in the public register. This person, who was the son of a Dutch man, a brewer by trade, living in Sandwich in Kent, as I have been informed at the Office of Arms, was educated a scholar, and afterwards in the com. law in Grays inn, but his geny inclining him much to the study of antiquity, he obtained the office of keeper of the records in the Tower of London, where by his searches he laid the foundation of certain books.

⁵ [He was an officer of good industry, as appears by some of his collections deposited in the library of the college of arms.

In 1623 he, by the favour of the earl marshal, to whom he was then, or lately, secretary, was sworn herald extraordinary by the title of Mowbray, because no person can be king of arms before he is herald, and on the 23d of Dec. the same year, was created Norroy king of arms at Arundel-house in the Strand, in the place of sir Rich. St. George created Clarenceaux. On the 17th of July 1624, he received the honour of knighthood, and in 1634 he was made Garter king of arms in the place of sir Will. Segar deceased. This learned and polite person, who writes his surname in Latin Burrhus,⁷ hath written (1) Impetus Juveniles, & quadam Sedatoris aliquantulum Animi Epistolæ. Oxon. 1643. oct.⁸ Most of the epistles are written to Philip Bacon, sir Frane. Bacon afterwards lord Verulam, Thom. Farnabie, Tho. Coppin, sir Hen. Spelman, &c. (2) The Sovereignty of the British Seas, proved by Records, History and municipal Laws of the Kingdom. Lond. 1651. in tw. It was written in the year 1633. He hath also made A Collection of Records in the Tower of London, which I have not yet seen. He died in Oxon, to which place he had retired to serve his majesty according to the duty of his office, on the 21st of Octob. 1643, and was buried the next day at the upper end of the divinity chappel joyning, on the north side, to the choir of the cath. of Ch. Church in the university of Oxon.

Octob. 31. SIR GEORGE RADCLIFF knt. sometimes a gent. com. of Univ. coll. was, after he had been presented by Dr. Rich. Steuart dean of St. Paul's cathedral, actually created doctor of the civil law in a convocation celebrated in the north chappel (commonly called Ad. Brome's chap.) of St. Mary's church.—He afterwards suffered much for the king's cause, (as he in some part had done before for the sake of the most noble Thomas earl of Strafford) was with him in exile, and died some years before his restoration. You may read much of him in the Memoirs of the Lives, Actions, &c. of excellent Personages, &c. by Dav. Lloyd M. A. pag. 148, 149, &c.

Nov. 18. THOM. BIRD a captain in the king's army, and about this time governour of Eccleshal in Staffordshire, was then actually created.—After his majesty's restoration, he became one of the masters in ordinary of the high court of Chancery, and on the 12th of May 1661, received the honour of knighthood from his majesty.

Jan. 31. SIR RICH. LANE knight, lord chief baron of the exchequer, was then actually created doctor of the civ. law, with more than ordinary ceremony.—This worthy person, who was the son of Rich. Lane of Courtenhall in Northamptonshire, by Elizabeth his wife, daughter of Clem. Vincent of Harpole in the said county, was educated from his youth in the study of the com. law in the Middle Temple, where he made great proficiency beyond his contemporaries, was called to the bar, and became a counsellor of note. In the 5th of Char. I. he was elected Lent reader of his inn, but did not read because of the pestilence; and when the long parliament began, he was so much esteemed for his great knowledge in the law, that the most noble Thomas earl of Strafford made use of him to manage his cause when he was tried for high treason in the latter end of 1640. Soon after he was made attorney to prince Charles; at which time seeing what strange courses the members of parliament took, when the king had given them leave to sit, he entrusted his intimate friend⁹ Bulstrode Whitlock, a counsellor of the Middle Temple, with his chamber there, all his goods therein, and an excellent library; and forthwith leaving London, he retired to the king at Oxon, where in 1643 he was made serjeant at law, lord chief baron of the exchequer, a knight on the 4th of Jan. the same year, and about the same time one of his majesty's most honourable privy-council. In the latter end of the next year, he was nominated one of the commissioners by his majesty to treat of peace with those of the parliament at Uxbridge, and on the 30th of Aug. 1645 he had the great seal delivered to him at Oxon, on the death of Edward lord Littleton. In May and June 1646 he was one of the prime commissioners to treat with those appointed by parliament for the surrender of the garrison of Oxon, and soon after conveyed himself beyond the sea to avoid the barbarities of the parliament. In his absence his son was conducted to the said B. Whitlock, then in his greatness, to the end that the said goods of his father, then in his possession, might be delivered to him for the use of his said father, who then wanted them; but Whitlock would not¹ own that he ever knew such a man as sir Richard, and therefore he kept what he had of his, to the great loss of him the said sir Richard, who died, as a certain² author tells us, in the isle of Jersey before the month of Aug. 1650, but false, as I presume, because that on the 22d of Apr. 1651, a³ commission issued forth from the prerogative court to the lady Margaret his relict, 'to administer the goods, chattels and debts of him the said sir Richard, late of Kingsthorp in Northamptonshire, who died in the kingdom of France.' This sir Rich. Lane, who was an eminent professor of the law, hath written Reports in the Court of Exchequer, beginning in the third, and ending in the ninth of K. James I. Lond. 1657. fol. On the 29th of Jan. 1657, the great seal was delivered by his majesty at Bruges in Flanders to sir Edw. Hyde knight.

SIR JOHN GLANVILL knt. serjeant at law, was created the same day (Jan. 31.) and admitted in the house of congregation and convocation, as sir Rich. Lane was.—This sir John was a younger son of John Glanvill of Tavistock in Devonshire, one of the justices of the Common Bench, (who died 27 July 1600) and he the third son of another John of the same place, where and in that county their name was genteel and ancient. When he was young, he was educated in this university, but was (as his father before him) bred an attorney, and afterwards studied the common law in Lincoln's inn, and, with the help of his father's notes, became a great proficient. When he was a counsellor of some years standing, he was elected recorder of Plymouth, and Burgess for that place to serve in several parliaments. In the 5th of Char. I. he was Lent reader of his inn, and on the 20th of May 1639, was made serjeant at law, at which time having engaged himself to be a better servant to the king than formerly, (for in several parliaments he had been an enemy to the prerogative) he was in the year following elected speaker for that parliament which began at Westminster, on the 13th of April, in which he shew'd himself active to promote the king's desires. On the 6th of July the same year, he was made one of the king's serjeants (being then esteemed an excellent orator, a great lawyer, and an ornament to his profession) and on the 7th of Aug. 1641 he received the honour of knighthood from his majesty at Whitehall. wards when the king was forced to leave the parliament, he followed him to Oxon, and was very serviceable to him in many respects. In 1645 he was disinabled from being a member of parliament, sitting at Westminster, for his delinquency, as 'twas then called: So that retiring to his home after the king's cause declined, he was committed to prison, where continuing till he had made his composition, was released in 1648.⁴ Under his name are these things extant,

In Sept. 1673, Winifrid his widow put a monument over his grave, with an inscription thereon, which for brevity's sake shall be now omitted. One John Glanvill of Exeter coll. took the degree of batch. of arts in 1622, and afterwards that of master, but he is not to be understood to be the same with sir John, because he was never bred in any university, as his son hath informed me. The said sir John Glanvill had an elder brother called sir Francis, an inhabitant of Tavistock; who, when young, being very vicious, was disinherited by his father, and the estate settled on sir John: But sir Francis becoming afterwards a sober man, sir John restored to him the estate.⁵ See in The Life and Death of Sir Matthew Hale, &c. Written by Gilb. Burnet D. D.—Lond. 1682, in a large octavo, p. 11.

Feb. 12. SIR RICHARD VIVIAN knight—He had been elected a burgess for Tregony in Cornwall to serve in that parliament, which began at Westm. 3 Nov. 1640, but leaving it in 1642, he retired to Oxon, and sate in the parl. there, an. 1643.

SIR PETER BALL of the Middle Temple knight, son and heir of Giles Ball of Mamhed in Devon, was created the same day—In 1632 he became recorder of the city of Exeter, afterwards the queen's solicitor, and now (1643) her attorney, and upon the declining of the king's cause a great sufferer. After his majesty's return, he was restored to what he had lost, became recorder of Exeter again, after that place had been occupied by two Cromwellians named Edm. Prideaux, and Tho. Bampfild. At length the infirmities of age coming upon him, he surrendered that office in 1676.

Feb. 20. { JOHN BODVILL, esq.
OWEN GRIFFITH, esq.

The first of these two, was a knight for Anglesey, to serve in the parl. began at Westm. 3 Nov. 1640, but leaving it in 1642, sate in the parl. at Oxon.

March 21. { AMBR. MANATON, esq.
PIERCE EDGEcombe, esq.

The first of these two, who was of Erccarrell in Cornwall, was parliament man for Lancelston in that county, and afterwards sate at Oxon, suffered for the king's cause, and dying in 1650, or thereabouts, was buried in the church at South Petherwyn. The other was a parliament man for Cameilford in the said county, and afterwards sate at Oxon, for which also he suffered in his estate.

This year was, among others, nominated to be created doctor of the civil law, one colonel BARD, but whether he was admitted I cannot tell—I take this person to be the same with Henry Bard son of George Bard, vicar of Stanes in Middlesex, who after he had been educated in grammar learning in Eaton coll. school, was admitted in King's coll. in Cambridge, an. 1631. Whilst he was scholar, he made an excursion to Paris, upon the customary leave of absence (which is but for 9 weeks in a year) without the college or his relation's privity. After he was made fellow, he travelled for some years into France, Germany, Italy, Turkey, Palestine, Egypt, Arabia, and sent a large account of his several travels to his contemporary Dr. Charles Mason. After his return he lived high, as he had done before, without any visible income, and gave a fair Alcoran to King's coll. library, supposed to be stolen by him out of a Mosque in Egypt; which being valued but at 20*l.* he made answer that 'he was sorry that he had ventur'd his neck for it.' This person, who was a compact body of vanity and ambition, yet proper, robust and comely, did, upon the approach of the grand rebellion, retire to his majesty king Charles I. at York, where making himself known to be a traveller, and master of several languages, especially of the French, which the queen took notice of, he had a commission given him to be a colonel, and afterwards to be governor of Camden-house in Gloucestershire, (which, when he quitted, he burnt) and then for a time of Worcester. On the 22d of Nov. 1643, he received the honour of knighthood, and soon after being made a baronet, his ambition was so great, that being not content with that station, he, by his, and the endeavours of others, was created baron of Brombry, and viscount Bellemont in Ireland, 8 July 1645. Afterwards being taken prisoner in one of his majesty's unfortunate battles, he wrote to the parliament and told them that he had taken up arms neither for religion (for there were then so many that he knew not which to be of) nor for that mouse-trap, the laws, but to re-establish the king in his throne, and therefore seeing that the time was not yet come, he desired leave that they would discharge him, that he might relinquish the land, which accordingly was done. After the murder of king Charles I. he was sent by his majesty king Charles II. then in exile, ambassador to the emperor of Persia, upon hopes of great assistance of money from that court, in consideration of great services done to the Persian by the English ships at Ormus: But so it was, that he being unhappily overtaken in his travels in that country by a whirlwind, was choak'd by the sands, giving thereby a period to his vain hopes of being the grand master of Malta, having been a Roman Catholic several years before he died. He left behind him a widow, not so rich, but that she received relief upon her petition after his majesty's return, from King's coll. in Cambridge, and two daughters who were of his religion, one of which was afterwards mistress to prince Rupert, as I have elsewhere told you. He had also a brother called Maximilian Bard a rich milliner in London, who was employed by the long parliament to buy for them horses in the time of their rebellion. This brother, as 'tis supposed, furnished him with money in his travels and high living, being a great admirer of his accomplishments, and as much despised by him.

Doctors of Physic.

May 9. SIR HENRY ST. GEORGE knight, garter principal king of arms, was then actually created doctor of physic—This person, who was the eldest son of sir Rich. St. George Clarenceaux king of arms, was born of an ancient family at Hatley St. George in Cambridgeshire, bred up to heraldry, and by the endeavours of his father, became first of all Rouge-Rose extraordinary in the office or coll. of arms, commonly called the Herald's-Office, afterwards Blue-mantle, and in the latter end of 1615 Richmond, herald of arms. In 1627, he was joint ambassador with the lord Spencer and Peter Yonge gent. usher, and daily waiter to king Charles I. " (one Peter Young became master of St. Cross's hospital " near Winchester in the place of Dr. Arthur Lake, Jan. " 1616,") to invest the king of Sweden with the order of the Garter, which being done, that king not only knighted him and Pet. Yonge at Darsaw in Prussia; but gave them the arms of the king of Sweden, to be used by them and their posterity for ever, as an augmentation to their own arms. Afterwards he was Norroy king of arms, and at length Garter, and dying in Brasen-nose coll. 5 Nov. 1644, was buried in the north-west corner of the west isle joyning to the north transept of the cathedral of Ch. Church in Oxon, leaving then issue behind him a son named Thomas, afterwards a knight, Norroy, and now (1691) Garter principal king of arms; Henry another son, afterwards Norroy, a knight, and now (1691) Clarenceaux king of arms, and lastly a third named Richard an esq; who became Ulster king of arms of the realm of Ireland in the place of Will. Roberts of Lincoln inn esq; and doctor of the civil law of Dublin, an. 1660; which place he surrendring in 1683, was succeeded therein by Athlone, pursevant or officer of arms, named Rich. Carney, who before (while he was Athlone) had received the honour of knighthood from the earl of Arran, and is the first king of arms of that kingdom that had that honour confer'd on him. The said sir H. S. George Garter king of arms, who died at Oxon, hath published nothing, only made collections of several matters relating to his profession, particularly A Catalogue of the Nobility of England according to their Creations, as they were in 1628, &c. MS. fol. It begins with George Villers duke of Buckingham, and ends with sir Franc. Cottington, knt. and bart. lord Cottington of Hanworth. This Cat. is involved in A new Catalogue of Dukes, Marquesses, Earls, Viscounts, Barons, &c. Lond. 1658. oct. collected and published by Tho. Walkley.

May 9. THOM. JOHNSON, whom I have mention'd among the created batchelors of phys. an. 1642, was actually created also doct. of physic, in consideration of the large testimony of his industry (before this year) published—He was born near Hull in Yorkshire, bred an apothecary in London, and afterwards lived and kept a shop on Snow-hill; where by his unwearied pains, advanced with good natural parts, he attained to be the best herbalist of his age in England. His works as to his profession are, (1) Mercurius Botanicus in duabus Partibus, &c. Lond. 1634. oct. (2) Thermæ Bathonicae. (3) His enlarging and amending Joh. Gerard's Herbal, or general History of Plants, Lond. 1636. fol. (4) His translation of Ambr. Parrey his Works of Chirurgery. Lond. 1634. fol. &c. This Dr. Th. Johnson was now (1643) a lieutenant coll. in the garrison of Basing-house in Hampshire, whence going with a party on the 14th of Sept. 1644, to succour certain of the forces belonging to that house which went to the town of Basing to fetch provision thence, but beaten back by the enemy (headed by that notorious rebel col. Rich. Norton) he received a shot in his shoulder, whereby contracting a fever, he died in a fortnight after in the said house: At which time his worth did justly challenge funeral tears, being then no less eminent in the garrison for his valour and conduct as a soldier, than famous through the kingdom for his excellency as an herbalist and physician.

Nov. 18. SPENCER LUCIE a colonel in the king's army, son of sir Tho. Lucie of Charlcot in Warwickshire knight.

Jan. 31. HENRY NISBETT, who had spent several years in the study of physic in the university of Padua, was then actually created doctor of that faculty by virtue of the letters of the chancellor of this university—He was a Scot born, or at least of Scotch extract, but what he hath extant relating to his faculty I know not.

Feb. 27. HEN. HANKS—His bare name only stands in the reg. as created doctor of physic, and therefore I can say no more of him.

Mar. 21. WILL. GLANVILL esq;—He was burgess for Cameilford in Cornwall to serve in the parliament began at Westminster 3 Novemb. 1640, but leaving it, he retired to Oxon, and sate in the parliament there.

Doctors of Divinity.

Apr. 12. EVAN OWEN batch. of div. of Jesus coll. in Oxon, was then created D. of D.

May 29. JOH. WEEKS preb. of Bristol,⁶ and batch. of div. of Cambr. above 20 years standing.⁷—This doctor, a jocular person, was now a preacher in Oxon, sometimes either before the king or parliament, and suffered much for the royal cause. Afterwards he was made dean of St. Burian in Cornwall upon the promotion of Dr. Creighton to that of Wells, and after his death the said deanery was annex'd to the bishoprick of Exeter. "There was one Dr. Weeks " chaplain to Dr. Laud when lord bish. of London."⁸

June 15. JOSEPH GOULSTON batch. of div. of Cambridge and preb. of Winchester, was created in congregation by virtue of the king's letters, as Owen and Weeks were. In his last will and test. proved 3 Apr. 1674, he is said to be 'Nuper decanus ecclesie cath. S. Trinitatis Cicestrensis in com. Sussex.'

June 16. MATTHEW GRIFFITH priest, sometimes of Brasen-n. coll. afterwards of Gloc. hall.

July 18. WILL. STAMPE of Pembr. coll.

Oct. 17. RICH. LANGHAM.—Of him I know nothing. THOM. HYDE preb. of Stratford in the church of Sarum, sometimes of Bal. coll. now, as it seems, of St. Edm. hall, was actually created the same day.—This person, who was of the family of the Hydes of Wiltshire, became not only preb. of Teynton Regis with Yalmeton in the said church of Salisbury, but also chauntor thereof, in Nov. 1660, upon the promotion of Dr. Humph. Henchman to be bishop thereof. He died about the beginning of Sept. 1666; whercupon his prebendship of Teynton with Yalmeton, was conferr'd on Gab. Thistlethwayt sometimes fellow of New coll. on the 10th of the same month, and his chauntorship on Dr. John South on the 24th.

JOHN ALLIBOND of Magd. coll. was created the same day, Oct. 17.—This worthy doctor, who was a Buckinghamshire man born,⁹ and lately the chief master of the free-school joyning to Magd. coll. was a most excellent Lat. poet and philologist, and hath published, Rustica Academia Oxoniensis nuper reformatæ Descriptio: una cum Comitibus ibidem, 1648 habitis. 'Tis a Latin poem, and was twice printed in 1648.¹ He died at Bradwell in Gloucestershire, (of which place he was rector) an. 1658.

JOH. HEWIT of Cambridge,² was actually created also the same day.—This is the person who was minister of St. Gregory's church near St. Paul's in London, and who suffer'd death by the axe on Tower-hill 8 June 1658, for conspiring against the then power and authority.³ He hath extant several sermons, among which are Nine select Sermons preached at St. Gregory's. Lond. 1658, oct. as also A Speech and two Prayers on the Scaffold, when he was to be beheaded. Lond. 1658, qu. and A Letter to Dr. George Wild, written the day before his execution; printed with his Speech and Prayers.

Oct. 19. ROB. HALL of Exet. coll.—This worthy person, who was the eldest son of Dr. Joseph Hall bishop of Exeter, was now canon residentiary and treasurer of the cath. ch. there, suffered for his majesty's cause, lost all, but restored upon his majesty's return. He was a learned man, a constant preacher, very hospitable and pious. He died on the 29th of May 1667, aged 61 years, and was buried in the north side of the choir of the said cath. ch. at Exeter.

Nov. 16. WALT. HUNGERFORD of All-s. coll.—He was afterwards preb. of Wells and rector of Buscot in Berks, where dying 18 Nov. 1681, was buried in the church there.

Feb. 22. GEORGE EDGELEY of Cambridge.—In the letters of the chancellor of the university, written in his behalf and read in convocation, I find these things of him: 'He is prebend of Chichester and rector of Nuthurst, a grave and orthodox divine.—He is a person that hath expressed his loyalty by his active services and passive sufferings in these times of hostility for the defence of his majesty's person, religion and the laws.—He is so deserving this honour (D. of D.) that he is beyond all manner of exception.—He is a senior of the university of Cambr.' &c.

In the same congregation whercin Dr. Edgeley was created, were letters from the chanc. read in behalf of THO. EDWARDS formerly of this university, now vicar of Keinton in Hertfordshire, to be doctor of divinity, but whether he was admitted it appears not.

On the 29th of Dec. also, were letters read in behalf of JOH. BURY batch. of div. and can. resid. of Exeter, to be created doctor of the said faculty; who being then absent in the king's service, was to have the said degree conferr'd on him when he should desire it.

Jun. 4. THO. JONES of Mert. coll.

21. THOM. PIERCE of Magd. coll.

Admitted 29.

✚ Not one batch. of phys. was this year admitted; nor one batch. of div. only one by virtue of the chancellor's letters, which was properly a creation.

✚ Not one doctor of law, physic, or divinity, was admitted this year, only incorporated and created, as I am now about to tell you.

Incorporations.

Divers worthy persons, who had been formerly of Cambr. or lately ejected thence, retiring now to Oxon for safety, were incorporated as they had stood in their own university. Among such I find these following.

Mar. 26. THOM. WESTFIELD D. D. now bishop of Bristol, and a sufferer for his own and his majesty's cause.—See among the incorporations in the FASTI of the first vol. an. 1611.

Apr. 4. THO. YARDLEY M. A. of Trin. coll.

Jun. 4. JOH. BOTELER⁴ M. A. of St. Joh. coll.

Jul. 10. PET. GUNNING M. A. of Clare hall.

Aug. 7. THO. BAYLY M. A.⁵ and sub-dean of Wells.

All which were admitted into the house of congregation and convocation.

As for JOH. BOTELER, several of both his names have been writers; and one Joh. Butler hath written against Joh. Selden, as you may see in Joh. Selden under the year 1654. And as for Tho. Bayly, I have made mention of him in the second vol. col. 526, 527. But as for Isaac Barrow,⁶ who as 'tis said, was also incorporated this year, he appears not in the register as incorporated master of arts, or created batch. of div. otherwise I should have made a chapter or number of him among the bishops, as I have done of Pet. Gunning among the writers, who was incorporated and took a degree here.

Creations.

This year were no creations in arts, only of one in music: the rest were in the three great faculties, and of them only doctors.

Doctors of Music.

Mar. 10. JOHN WILSON now the most noted musician of England, 'omnibus titulis & honoribus academicis in professione musicæ par, & in theoria & praxi musicæ maxime peritus' (as it is said in the public register of convocation) was then presented and actually created doctor of music.—This eminent person who was much admired by all that understood that faculty, especially by his majesty king Charles I. an exact judge therein, was born at Feversham in Kent, and being naturally inclin'd in his youth to vocal and instrumental music, became at man's estate so famous for it, that he was first made a gent. of his maj. chappel, and afterwards his servant in ordinary in that faculty. So that ever after giving his majesty constant attendance, had oftentimes just opportunities to exercise his hand on the lute (being the best at it in all England) before him to his great delight and wonder; who, while he played, did usually lean or lay his hand on his shoulder. After the surrender of the garrison at Oxon, an. 1646, he spent some years in the family of sir Will. Walter of Sarsden in the parish of Churchill in Oxfordshire, who, with his lady, were great lovers of music. At length, upon the desire of Mr. Tho. Barlow of Qu. coll. (then lecturer at Churchill) made to his quondam pupil Dr. Joh. Owen vice-chancellor of this university, he was constituted music professor thereof, an. 1656; which, with other helps from some royalists in these parts (he having then a lodging in Bal. coll.) found a comfortable subsistence. Upon the return of king Charles II. to his dominions, he was restored to his places belonging to his majesty, and was made one of the choir at Westminster: all which he kept to his dying day. He hath published (1) Psalterium Carolinum. The Devotions of his sacred Majesty in his Solitudes and Sufferings, rendred into Verse, set for three Voices, and an Organ or Theorbo. Printed about 1656, in fol. (2) Chearful Aires or Ballads, first composed for one single Voice, and since set for three Voices. Oxon, 1660, qu. in 3 vol. then usher'd into the world by certain poets of this university. (3) Aires for a Voice alone to a Theorbo or Bass-Viol, &c. These are in a book entit. Select Aires and Dialogues. Lond. 1653, &c. fol. In which book are, besides Dr. Wilson's labours, the compositions of several masters of music, viz. of Dr. Charles Coleman, Henry and Will. Laves, Will. Webb, Nich. Lanier or Laneare an Italian, one of the private music to king Charles I. and an excellent painter, (who died after 1648,*) Will. Smegergill alias Cæsar, Edward Coleman and Jeremy Savile.

(4) Divine Services and Anthems, the words of one of which are extant in James Clifford's collection of Divine Services and Anthems, &c. Lond. 1663, oct. p. 235. But above all things that our author Wilson hath published, is highly valued by curious men, a manuscript of his framing, containing compositions, partly to be play'd on the lute, but chiefly on a treble or bass, set to several odes in the first book, and in others, of Horace, on some part of Ausonius, Claudian, Petronius Arbitr's Fragment, Statius, &c. This book, which is in folio, bound in Russia leather, with silver clasps, he gave to the public library at Oxon before his majesty's restoration, but with this condition that no person should peruse it till after his death. 'Tis in the archives of the said library, num. 102, and hath several copies of verses put before it, or in the beginning, made in praise of the author and the book: one of the copies being made by that excellent Latin poet Hen. Birkhead of All-s. coll. was afterwards remitted into his book entit. Poemata, &c. Oxon, 1656, p. 122, 123. This Dr. Wilson, who was a great humourist and a pretender to buffoonry, died in his house at the Horse Ferry within the liberty of Westminster, on the 22d day of Febr. 1673, aged 78 years, ten months and 17 days: whereupon his body was buried in the little cloyster belonging to the abby church of St. Peter within the said city of Westm. He did often use to say for the honour of his country of Kent, that Alphonso Farabosco was born of Italian parents at Greenwich, and Joh. Jenkyns at Maidston; both highly valued and admired not only in England but beyond the seas for their excellent compositions in music, especially for fancies. The last was living 10 years or more after the restoration of king Charles II. but we have not yet his picture in the music school, as that of Dr. Wilson hanging near to that of Nich. Lanier before mention'd.

Doctors of Law.

Apr. 6. WILL. PLEYDELL esq;—He was a burgess for Wotton Bassett in Wilts. to serve in that parl. which began at Westm. 3 Nov. 1640, but leaving it afterwards, retired to Oxon, and sate there.

—LLOYD was created the same day and admitted into the house of congreg. and convocation.—His Christian name I cannot yet learn, or in what coll. or hall in this university, or in that of Cambridge, educated.

May 1. GEORGE BONCLE or BONKLEY of Greenwich in Kent esq;—On the 30th of Jan. following he received the honour of knighthood, being about that time deputy-governour of the garrison of Oxon; but afterwards being taken by the forces belonging to the parliament, he was committed prisoner to Lambeth house, where he shortly after expired. He had before obtained great fame for his valour and activity in the relief of Basing house in Hampshire.

June 10. SIR THOM. BLACKWELL of Mansfield Woodhouse in Nottinghamshire knt.—He had lately at his own charge raised many men and arms for his majesty's service, and had fought most valiantly in divers battels for him. He afterwards suffer'd much for the royal cause, and compounded for his estate.

June 12. HENR. BATE.—He was admitted and actually created doctor of the civil law by virtue of the letters of the chancellor of the university, and of those of the marquiss of Newcastle, which say that 'he had paid his fees already by the large contribution he hath given to his majesty in his service, and losses sustained by the rebels,' &c.

Jul. 10. SIR ROBERT FENNE knt.

Nov. 4. ROB. CARY M. A. lately of C. C. coll. in this university.—He was kinsman to the marquiss of Hertford chancellor thereof.

This year was actually created doct. of the civ. law sir JAMES WARE of Ireland knt. as his son hath by his letters informed me, but the day or month he cannot tell: neither doth it appear in the acts of the public register, in this, or in the year following, because omitted, as it seems, among many that were actually created in several degrees from the 1st of Nov. 1642 till the surrender of Oxon, 1646.—This worthy person sir Jam. Ware, who, by his pen, hath done admirable service for the credit of the Irish nation, I desire the reader by the way (if not too tedious) to take these observations of him following. He was born in Castle-street within the city of Dublin, about two of the clock in the morn. of the 26th of Nov. an. 1594. His father was sir James Ware knt. sometimes secretary to two of the lords justices or deputies of Ireland, and afterwards auditor general of that kingdom; who finding his said son to make early advances towards learning, spared neither cost or labour to encourage him therein. At 16 years of age he caused him to be entred a student in Trin. coll. at Dublin, where making great proficiency in his studies, was in less than six years made master of arts. In 1629, or thereabouts, he received the honour of knighthood from Adam lord viscount Ely and Rich. Boyle earl of Cork, they both being at that time lords justices of Ireland, and in 1632 he became, upon the death of his father, auditor general of Ireland: notwithstanding which place of trouble, as well as of profit, and the cumbrances of marriage, he wrote and published several books, the titles of which I shall anon set down. In 1639 he was made one of the king's privy council in Ireland, and when the rebellion broke out there, he suffered much in his estate. In 1644, he with the lord Edward Brabason (afterwards earl of Meath,) and sir Hen. Tichbourne knt. were sent by James marquiss of Ormond, then lord lieutenant of Ireland, to king Charles I. at Oxon, about the affairs of that kingdom. Which being concluded to their minds, they returned; but in their way, they were taken on the seas by a parliament ship, just after sir James had flung over board the king's packet of letters directed to Ormond: whereupon being all conveyed to London, were committed prisoners to the Tower, where continuing eleven months, were then released upon exchange. Afterwards sir James returned to Dublin, continued there for some time, and was one of the hostages for the delivery of that city to col. Mich. Jones for the use of the parliament of England. Afterwards the said colonel, thinking it not convenient, for several reasons, that he should remain there, commanded him to depart; so that by virtue of his pass he went into France, where he continued an year and an half, mostly at Caen and partly at Paris. In 1651 he left that country, went into England, and settling in London, wrote several books, and published one or more there. Upon the restoration of king Charles II. he went into Ireland, and by special order was restored to his place of auditor general and continued a privy counsellor there. His works⁷ are these (1) Archiepiscoporum Cassiliensium & Tuamensium Vita, duobus expressa Commentariolis. Dubl. 1626, qu. This book was afterwards involved in his De Præsulibus Hibernia Commentarius. (2) Cenobia Cisterciensia Hibernia. Included afterwards in his Disquisitiones de Hibernia, &c. (3) De Præsulibus Lagenia, sive Provinciae Dubliniensis Lib. unus. Dubl. 1628, qu. Included also in his Comment. de Præsulibus Hib. (4) De Scriptoribus Hibernia Libri duo. Dubl. 1639, qu. A great part of which is taken out of the book of Joh. Bale entit. De Script. Maj. Britan. and from Rich. Stanyhurst his book entit. The Description of Ireland. Patricio, qui Hibernos ad Fidem Christi convertit, adscripta*, &c. Lond. 1656, oct. He also⁸ wrote and published Rerum Hibernicarum Henrico 7 regnante Annales. Pr. at the end of his Disquisit. de Hibernia, and De Præsul. Hib. Comment. Also Rerum Hib. Hen. 8. Ed. 6. & Maria regnantibus Annales, (which are at the end of the said book De Præsul.) besides the publication of Campian's Hist. of Ireland, the Chronicle of Mered. Hanmer, that of Hen. Marleburrough, and The View of Ireland, by Edm. Spenser. At length sir James having lived beyond the age of man, and by his endeavours had gotten a fair estate, departed this mortal life at Dublin, on Saturday Dec. the first, an. 1666, and was buried on Tuesday following in a burying place appointed for his family within the church of St. Warborough in the said city. He had a choice collection of antient MSS; (many of which related to Irish affairs) procured from many persons as well in Engl. and Irel. a Catalogue of which was printed at Dublin, an. 1648, in 3 sh. and an half in qu.⁹ All or most of which MSS, came into the hands of Hen. earl of Clarendon, when he was lord lieutenant of Irel. an. 1686, who soon after brought them with him into Engl. and deposited them in the custody of Dr. Tho. Tenison vicar of St. Martin's church in the Fields, in Westm. a Catalogue of which is lately made extant by Edm. Gibson B. A. Qu. coll. in Ox.

This year also, about the beginning thereof, as it seems, was a proposal made by virtue of a letter sent to the vice-chancellor, that RICH. FANSHAW esq. servant to prince Charles, should have the degree of doctor of the civil law conferr'd upon him; but whether he was presented thereunto, tho' diplomated he might be, it appears not in the public register. Howsoever it is, sure I am that certain masters now living in the university, did many years after report that he had that degree conferr'd on him here, yet whether personally presented thereunto, they could not positively affirm.—This right worthy and loyal person Richard Fanshaw (originally of the university of Cambr.) was descended of the family of Fanshaw of Fanshawgate in Derbyshire, being the great grandchild of John Fanshaw of that place, brother of Henry Fanshaw, and father of Tho. Fanshaw esquires, who were successively remembrancers of the Exchequer to qu. Elizabeth: which Thomas was father to sir Hen. Fanshaw knt. (who died of an apoplexy at the assizes in Hertford 10 Mar. 1615.) father of Thomas sometimes lord viscount Fanshaw of Dromore in Ireland, father of him who is now, or at least was lately, lord viscount Fanshaw: which three last have also been remembrancers of the Exchequer to king James I. king Charles I. and II. The said Rich. Fanshaw (brother to lord Thomas) of whom we are farther to speak, was, for his early abilities, taken into the employment of the state by king Charles I. an. 1635, and then sent resident to the court of Spain: whence being recall'd in the beginning of the troubles (1642) into Engl. he followed the royal interest during all the calamitous time that followed, and was employed in several weighty matters of state. In 1644 he was appointed secretary at war to Charles prince of Wales (afterwards king) whom he attended into the western parts of Engl. and thence into the isles of Scilly¹ and Guernsey. In 1648 he was appointed treasurer of the navy under the command of prince Rupert, which he managed till the year 1650, when then he was preferr'd by his majesty to the dignity of a baronet, and sent envoy extraordinary to the crown of Spain; and being thence recalled into Scotland, he there served in the quality of secretary of state: which weighty and difficult employment he performed in that conjuncture with great satisfaction of all parties, notwithstanding he never took covenant or engagement. Thence he attended his majesty at Worcester, was at the battel there (1651) taken prisoner, and conveyed to Lond. by the rebels; where continuing in close custody till he contracted a great sickness, had liberty allow'd him, upon bail given, for the recovery of his health to go to any place he should choose, provided he stirred not five miles from the place without leave from the parliament. During which time and other vacant hours, he made several translations and wrote divers poems, as I shall tell you by and by. In February 1659 he repaired to his majesty king Charles II. at Breda, who there knighted him in April 1660, and made him his secretary of the Latin tongue (in which he did excell) and master of the Requests. In 1661 he being then burgess for the university of Cambridge, he was sworn one of the privy council of Ireland, and sent envoy to the crown of Portugal, with a dormant commission to the ambassador, which he was to make use of as occasion should require. In 1662 he was again sent to that crown with the title of ambassador; and at his return thence in 1663 he was sworn one of his majesty's privy council and took his place accordingly,⁴ and in January the same year he was sent ambassador⁵ to both the crowns of Spain and Portugal: in which time the foundation of peace betwixt those crowns and England was laid by him. His deportment during his former employments in those courts won him such high value and estimation with the princes, that his reception was most splendid and magnificent; exceeding all that were before: which those kings declared was done as a particular respect to the person of the ambassador, and was not to be a precedent for succeeding ambassadors. He hath written (1) Divers Poems. Lond. 1664, oct. Printed with his translation of Il pastor fido. The first of the said poems is An Ode upon Occasion of his Majesty's Proclamation, An. 1630, commanding the Gentry to reside upon their Estates in the Country. (2) A summary Discourse of the Civil Wars of Rome. Lond. 1664, oct. extracted out of the best Lat. writers in prose and verse. He hath translated from English into Lat. verse The faithful Shepherdess: a Pastoral. Lond. 1658, written originally by Joh. Fletcher gent. and from Latin into English, (1) The fourth Book of Virgil's Æneis on the Loves of Dido and Æneas, Lond. 1664, oct. (2) Two Odes out of Horace relating to the Civil Wars of Rome against covetous rich Men. Ibid. 1654, oct. He hath translated from Italian into English, — Il Pastor fido: The faithful Shepherd; a Pastoral. Lond. 1646, qu. 1664, oct.⁶ Written originally by Guarini, a native of Ferrara in Italy: and from Spanish into English an historical poem called—Querer per solo querer: To love only for Love's Sake. Lond. 1671, qu. 'Tis a dramatic romance, was originally written by Anton. de Mendoza, translated and paraphrased by our author at Tankerley park in Yorkshire, 1654; when then he had obtained leave from the superior power to range beyond 5 miles within London. To this is joyned another translation by the same hand entit.—Fiestus de Aranjuez. Festivals represented at Aranjuez. He also translated from Portuguese into English, The Luciad: or Portugal's Historical Poem. Lond. 1655, 56, &c. fol. Written originally by Lewis de Camoens. Besides these translations, he hath performed others as I have been informed, which continue partly in MS, and hath written other poems as well Lat. as English, which for brevity's sake I shall now pass by the mentioning. At length this worthy person being overtaken with a violent fever at Madrid in Spain on the fourth of June 1666, during the time of his being there ambassador, died thereof on the 16th of the same month old stile, aged 59 years: whereupon his body being embalmed, was (after his funeral had been solemnized there, 25 of the said month⁷) conveyed by his disconsolate lady, with all his children then living, by land thro' France to Calais, whence it was transported to England, and landed near Tower-hill at London. Thence it was removed to Lincolns Inn Fields, to the Pine Apples, which was then his lady's hired house. The next day the corps was carried to Allhallow's church in Hertford, and there deposited in the vault of his father-in-law sir John Harrison, until the 18th of May 1671; on May 1. SIR ARTH. ASTON knt. serjeant major-gen. of the king's horse forces, governour of the garrison of Oxford, was created doctor of phys. with great solemnity, and admitted by the vicechancellor with this clause, 'Honoratiss. domine, tu dabis fidem ad observand. statuta, libertates & consuetudines hujus universitatis.'—This person, ("who was son of sir Arthur Aston of Fulham in Middlesex, and he the 2d son of sir Tho. Aston of Aston in Bucklow hund. in Chesh.") who was of an ancient and knightly family in that country,) was a great traveller, had spent most of his time in wars in several countries beyond the seas: whence coming in the beginning of the grand rebellion [commenced by the presbyterians⁸] into Engl. with as many soldiers of note as he could bring with him, joyned himself and them to his majesty's forces, commanded the dragoons at Edghill fight, and with them did excellent service. Afterwards, his majesty having a great opinion of his valour and conduct, made him governour of the garrison of Reading in Berkshire, where he beat the earl of Essex, general of the parl. forces, thrice from that place, till having received a dangerous wound he was forced, as tis said, to devolve his command upon col. Rich. Feilding, called lord Feilding, of the family of those of his name at Newenham Padox in Warwickshire, who afterwards surrendering that garrison to the use of the parliament upon quick and easy terms, suffered much in his reputation for so doing, yet recovered it afterwards in the battels at Newbury and Naseby. As for Aston, who was lately made governour of the garrison of Oxford, and afterwards expressed himself very cruel and imperious while he executed that office, he broke his leg by a fall from his horse on Bullington green near Oxon on the 19th of Sept. this year, and on the 25th of Dec. following being discharg'd of his office, to the great rejoycing of the soldiers and others in Oxon, colonel Will. Legge was placed in his room, and in his sir Tho. Glemham 8 Oct. 1645, who kept the said garrison till it was surrender'd to the parliament. Sir A. Aston had, at that time, his broken leg cut off to save his life, and in its place had one of wood put: So that being recovered and in a posture to do his majesty farther service, he went with the flower of the English veterans into Ireland, where he became governour of Drogheda commonly called Tredagh, about which time he laid an excellent plot to tire and break the English army. But at length the said garrison being overpower'd and soon after taken by Ol. Cromwell and his forces, about the 10th of September 1649, all the defendants were put to the sword, and Aston the governour (a zealous R. Catholic) was hewen in pieces, and his brains beat out of his head with his wooden leg. He then left behind him a daughter named Elizabeth Thompson alias Aston.

May 1. { ROB. CROKE.
LISTER BLOUNT.

The first of these two was of the family of the Crokes of Chilton in Bucks, was a burgess for Wendover in the same county to serve in the parl. began at Westm. 3 Nov. 1640, but leaving it, he retired to Oxon, and sate in the parl. there.

⁸ [Wood, MS. insertion in Ashmole.]

One Rob. Croke was knighted by his maj. at Whitehall 9 Aug. 1641, but whether the same with the former (who is not stiled knt. in the register) I cannot tell.

Jul. 10. JOH. CASTLE esq;⁹—He was father to George Castle mention'd among the writers, an. 1673. vol. iii, col. 998.

Dec. 12. WILL. THOMAS of Trin. coll. in Oxon, was then admitted into the house of congreg. and convoc.

Doctors of Divinity.

Apr. 2. JAMES DUODALE chaplain to the marquiss of Hertford.—He had been forced for his loyalty out of Somersetshire, where he was vicar of Evererech, and rector of Shepton Beauchamp, did suffer also afterwards for his majesty's cause; but upon the return of king Charles II. he was restored to what he had lost, and was made, as I have been informed, canon of Wells. He died in the beginning of the year 1661.

Jun. 10. THO. BUNBURY of Bal. coll.—He had succeeded Dr. Joh. Denison in the vicaridge of St. Mary's church in Reading, but being put out thence by the presbyterians, when that town came into their possession, he fled to Oxon for protection.

Dec. 12. THOM. STEPHENSON of Qu. coll. in this univ.—He was then created because his majesty had present and special occasion to employ him in places more remote about certain weighty affairs.

Jun. 5. ARTHUR BURY of Exet. coll.

Batchellors of Physic.

Only two were admitted by virtue of the chancellor's letters, viz. PET. ELIOT of C. C. coll. master of arts and preacher, and THO. KING M.A. of Brasen. coll. both which were admitted 26 Feb. being then in actual service for his majesty in Oxford.

✂ Not one batch. of div. was admitted this year.

✂ Not one doctor of law, phys. or div. was admitted or licensed this year, only incorporated and created.

Incorporations.

Several persons, who were lately forced to leave the university of Cambridge for their loyalty, and others, who had formerly been of that university, their respective cures and dignities, retired to Oxon, to avoid the cruelties and barbarities of the presbyterians, and were this year either incorporated or created. Those that were incorporated are these following.

Aug. 12. { EDISHAW M. A. of Cambr.
 SHARPINGTON M. A. of Cambr.
 PINDAR batch. of div. of Cambr.

Aug. 12. THO. FULLER D. of D. of Cambr.¹ now bishop of Ardfert in Ireland.—In the year 1660 he was made archb. of Cashills in the said kingdom. He hath one or more sermons extant.

WILL. FULLER D. of D. of the same univ. and dean of Ely, was incorporated the same day.—This worthy person, who had, as it seems, succeeded Dr. Hen. Cæsar in the said deanery, an. 1636, was about the middle of March this year (1645) made dean of Durham on the death of Dr. Christop. Potter, and without doubt would have risen higher had it not been for the iniquity of the times.² He was the son of Andrew Fuller of Hadleigh in Suffolk, at which place he was born, was educated in all kind of learning in Cambridge, and afterwards became famous for it, his prudence and piety. He was also a good linguist and an excellent preacher, preached several times before his majesty (to whom he was chaplain in ord. as he had been to king Jam.) while he was in Oxon this year, to his great approbation. In the beginning of the rebellion,³ 1642, he was sequestered from his church of St. Giles near Cripplegate, London, plunder'd, imprison'd, and spoiled of all for his loyalty to his prince, by the impetuous and restless presbyterians. After Oxford was surrender'd, he retir'd to London, and lived there obscurely till the time of his death, which happening on Holy-Thursday (May 12⁴) 1659, aged 79 years, was denied rest in his sometime church of St. Giles before-mention'd. Whereupon his body being conveyed to St. Vedastus in Foster-lane, was there buried at the upper end of the south isle. Soon after was a comely monument put over his grave by his daughter the wife of Dr. Brian Walton, and upon his majesty's restoration his deanery of Ely was confer'd on Dr. Hen. Ferne. Under this doctor Fuller's name goes a sermon entit. The Mourning of Mount Lebanon. Printed 1628, and perhaps other things.

Aug. 12. LODOWICK WENMYS or WEEMS D. D. of Cambr.⁵ and prebendary of the fourth stall in the collegiate church at Westm. in the place of Dr. Joh. Holt, was then incorporated.⁶

THOM. WILSON D. of D. of the said university, was incorporated the same day.—He was originally of Merton coll. and was batch. of div. of this university an. 1621, at which time he was preb. of St. Paul's cath. ch. in London, and had been sub-almoner under bishop Mountague. In 1625, Jan. 10, he was installed preb. of Westminster in the place of Dr. Hen. Cæsar resigning; and about the same time was D. of D. of Cambridge. In 1640 he occurs arch. of Westminster;⁷ but he is not to be taken to be the same with Tho. Wilson beneficed at Stratford upon Avon in Warwickshire, because he died in 1638.⁸

THOM. SOME or SOAME D. D. was incorporated also the same day. (Aug. 12.) as he before had stood at Cambridge.—He had been fellow of Peter house, was now canon of Windsor,⁹ preb. of St. Paul's in London, vicar of Stanes in Middlesex, and, if I mistake not, rector of Haseley near to, and in the county of, Oxon; in which last benefice he was succeeded by Dr. Edw. Corbet of Mert. coll. This Dr. Some, who hath one or more sermons extant, died at Stanes, as it seems, in the beginning of the year 1649, leaving a son then behind him called Henry.¹

WILL. BEALE D. D. sometimes of Pemb. hall, afterwards master of St. John's coll. in Cambridge,² now one of his majesty's chaplains, was incorporated the same day.—This most worthy person, who had been much favoured by Dr. Laud archb. of Canterbury, and by him promoted,³ and therefore esteemed an Arminian, and popishly affected by the inveterate puritans, did suffer much in the beginning of the rebellion raised by them; as first, for his having a hand in gathering and conveying the plate belonging to the university of Cambr. to his majesty, he was violently hurried thence prisoner to London, suffered great indignities from the rabble in his way through that city to the Tower, where continuing some years, was at length exchange'd. Secondly, by being plunder'd and thrown out of his headship of St. John's coll. before-mention'd, for the same reason, and for denying their wicked covenant; and lastly sequester'd from all other his spiritualities. After his exchange, he fled to Oxon, the common asylum of afflicted royalists, where he exercised his function, sometimes before his majesty, and at other times before the remnant of the royal court there remaining. After the king's cause declined, he went beyond the seas, where he died heart-broken in 1651, or thereabouts.

DAVID STOKES D. D. of the said univ. was incorporated the same day.—This most loyal doctor was educated in the college school at Westminster, and thence elected into Trin. coll. in the same university an. 1610; afterwards he was fellow of Peter house,⁴ fellow of Eaton coll. canon of Windsor, and rector of Binfield in Berks:⁵ All which preferments he losing in the time of the rebellion, was put to his shifts as other royalists were, retired to Oxon for refuge, and there exercised his function for a time as others did. After his majesty's return, he was restored to what he had lost, lived several years in great quiet and repose with much content to himself, and died the 10th of May 1669. He hath written and published, (1) An Explication of the twelve minor Prophets, Hosea, Joel, &c. wherein the difficult Places are unfolded, the seeming Contradictions are reconciled, according to the best Commentators now extant, &c. Lond. 1659. oct. GEORGE BARDSEY D. D. of Qu. coll. in the said univers.⁶ was also then (Aug. 12.) incorporated.—He died in Oxon, in January 1645, and was buried on the twentieth of the same month in that chancel commonly called the college chancel in St. Michael's church joyning to the north gate of the said city.

was also then incorporated.—This most learned and loyal doctor was born in Cleaveland in the North Riding of Yorkshire, an. 1600, admitted first in Magd. coll. under Mr. Joh. Gooch as a sizer or servitor, and thence removing to Peter house under one Mr. Blake, 4 Dec. 1616, took the degree of M. of A. as a member thereof, an. 1623.⁹ About that time, or before, he taught school in Suffolk, and served as a curate there. Thence he removed to London, and lived for a little time under the rev. and learned divine Mr. Rich. Stock rector of Allhallows Bread-street in London. After his death he became rector of St. Martin's Orgar in the said city, and of Sandon in Essex, at both which places he was highly valued by the orthodox party for his learning and religion.¹ In 1639 he commenced D. of D. at which time he was preb. of St. Paul's cathedral, chaplain to his majesty, and a person of great esteem, especially for his skill in the common-laws of this realm, so far, I mean, as they related to the patrimony and liberties of the church,² as it appears by a little book written³ by him in defence of the tithes within the city of London, according to the proportion of two shillings and nine pence the pound-rent. Upon the breaking out of the diabolical rebellion, he was assaulted by the faction, abused, sequestered and forced to fly: Whereupon retiring to Oxford, he did there lay the ground of a most noble design, which afterwards he did live to accomplish. For upon the declining of his majesty's cause, he returned to London, and residing with his father-in-law Dr. Will. Fuller, then a great sufferer for the royal cause, as he was, he had time and leisure at command, as being debar'd the exercising of his ministerial function, (tho' often disturb'd for his loyalty) of proceeding in the work, with the advice of the most learned and religious Dr. Usher primate of Ireland, his said father-in-law, Dr. Bruno Ryves, and some others residing in London, yet not without the leave and license of Dr. Juxon bish. of that city. I say that this most worthy person Dr. B. Walton being most eminent for his learning, especially in the holy Scriptures and Eastern languages, did undertake and happily perform the publishing of the Biblia Polyglotta, printed at Lond. in six volumes in folio, an. 1657, wherein the sacred text was, by his singular care and oversight, printed, not only in the vulgar Latin, but also in the Hebrew, Syriac, Chaldee, Samaritan, Arabic, Æthiopic, Persian, and Greek languages, each having its peculiar Latin translation joyned therewith; and an Apparatus fitted for each, for the better understanding of those tongues. In this great work, tho' he met with infinite disturbances and discouragements, by reason of the times, wherein the usurping powers ruled, and a multitude of other difficulties, yet he most happily accomplished it in about four years space: which, when published, was by the generality of scholars esteemed the most absolute and famous edition of the BIBLE that the Christian world had, or is like to enjoy. In this most noble work, so far as concerned the correcting of it while at the press, and in collating of exemplars, he had the assistance of several learned persons, of whom Edm. Castle or Castell⁴ batch. of div. was the chiefest, 'vir in quo eruditio summa magnaque animi modestia convenere,' &c. as he doth characterize him; yet if you'll believe that learned person, who was afterwards doctor of div. Arabic professor of Cambridge, and preb. of Canterbury,⁵ he'll tell you in his preface to his Lexicon Heptaglotton, printed in Lond. 1669, that he had more than an ordinary hand in that work, as indeed he had, and therefore deserved more matter to be said of him than is in the said pref. to Bib. Polyglot. The other persons were Alex. Huish of Wadh. coll. Sam. Clarke (Clericus) of Mert. coll. (of both whom I have spoken already) and Thom. Hyde, since of Qu. coll. in this university. He had also some assistance from Dr. D. Stokes, Abr. Weelock,⁶ Herb. Thorndyke,⁷ Edw. Pocock, Tho. Greaves, Dudly Loftus, &c. men most learned in their time. Towards the printing also of the said great and elaborate work, he had the contribution of monies from many noble persons, and gentlemen of quality, which were put into the hands of sir Will. Humble treasurer for the said work; as Charles Lodowick prince elector, William marq. of Hertford, Will. earl of Strafford; Will. earl of Bedford, Will. lord Petre, Will. lord Maynard, Arth. lord Capel, John Ashburnham of his maj. bedchamber, sir Rob. Sherley bart. Will. Lenthall mast. of the rolls, Joh. Selden of the Inner-Temple esq; Joh. Sadler of Linc. inn esq; Joh. Hele esq; Tho. Wendy esq; afterwards knt. of the Bath; and others, as Mountague earl of Lindsey, lord chamb. of England, George earl of Rutland, Mildmay earl of Westmorland, John earl of Exeter, Tho. lord Fairfax, Bapt. lord Noel, visc. Cambden, sir Will. Courtney, sir Anth. Chester and sir Will. Farmer baronets, sir Franc. Burdet knt. and Joh. Wall D. D. canon of Ch. Ch. in Oxon. After his majesty's restoration the author Dr. Walton presented his said six vol. of Bib. Polyg. to him, which being well received by him, he not only made him his chaplain in ordinary, but for his great virtues, learning, loyalty, sufferings, and indefatigable industry for the public benefit of learning, did advance him to the see of Chester; to which being consecrated in the abbey church of St. Peter in Westminster on the second day of December an. 1660, sat there (tho' a little while) to the time of his death. In Sept. 1661 he, with a good retinue, went to take possession of his see, and when he came to Litchfield, many persons of very good worth, who had ridden from Chester to that city, which is 50 miles, did meet and congratulate him there, and very many others in his way to Chester. On the tenth day of the said month all the gentry almost of the whole county of Chester, and the militia both of the country and city, went out to meet him, and the day following the spiritual militia (the true sons of the church of England) went to their reverend diocesan upon the road. All which, and others, having brought him to his palace, with the loud acclamations of thousands of people, blessing God for so happy a sight, he forthwith put on his episcopal robes, and hasted to the performance of his devotions in the choir. When he enter'd the body of the cathedral church, Dr. Hen. Bridgman the dean, and all the members of the cathedral, habited in their albes, received a blessing from his lordship, sung Te Deum, and so compassing the choir in manner of procession, conveyed him to his chair: This was on the eleventh of the said month of Sept. a day not to be forgotten by all the true sons of the church of England, tho' curs'd then in private, by the most rascally faction and crop-ear'd whelps of those parts, who did their endeavours to make it a maygame and a piece of foppery. After his lordship had made some continuance there, and was highly caress'd and entertained by noble and generous spirits, he return'd to London, fell sick, and died in his house in Aldersgate-street, on the 29th of Nov. an. 1661, to the great reluctancy of all learned and loyal persons. On the 5th of Dec. following he was buried in the south side of the cathedral church of St. Paul, (of which he was prebend) opposite to the monument of sir Christopher Hatton sometime lord chancellor of England, being then attended to his grave by three heralds of arms in their formalities.⁸ Soon after was a noble monument put over his grave, with a large inscription thereon running thus.⁹ Manet hic novissimam, &c. 'Here awaiteth the sound of the last trump Brian Walton lord bishop of Chester. Reader, look for no farther epitaph on him, whose very name was epitaph enough. Nevertheless, if thou lookest for a larger, and louder one, consult the vocal oracles of his fame, and not of this dumb marble. For let me inform thee (if it be not a shame to be ignorant) this was he, that with the first brought succour and assistance to the true church, sick and fainting under the sad pressure of persecution. This was he, that fairly wiped off those foul and contumelious aspersions cast upon her pure and spotless innocence by those illiterate and clergy trampling schismatics. This was he, that brought more light and lustre to the reformed church here establish'd;

⁸ [The right reverend father in God Bryan Walton D. D. born in Clive-land anno 1600; brought up in St. Peter's college in Cambr. and afterwards preb. of St. Paul's church London, was lastly bishop of Chester, and departing this mortal life in Aldersgate-street in the city of London, upon the 29th day of November in the year of our Lord 1661, on the 5th day of December following was solemnly interred in the south isle of the said church of St. Paul's, opposite to the lord chancellor Hatton's monument. The proceedings to whose funeral (at which were the earles of Derby and Bridgwater, with diverse more of the nobility, as also the greatest number of bishops in their rochets, deans and prebends of many cathedral churches, with a multitude of the most learned clergymen of England) from Sadlers hall in Cheapside was marshal'd and directed by George Owen esq. York herald, Elias Ashmole esq. Windsor herald, and Henry St. George esq. Richmond herald, and the funeral office performed by the bishop of London. This worthy bishop being a person most eminent for his learning, especially in the H. Scriptures and Eastern languages, did undertake and happily perform the publishing of the BIBLIA POLYGLOTTA printed at London in 6 volumes in the year 1657. Wherein the sacred text was by his singular care and oversight printed not only in the vulgar Latin, but also in the Hebrew, Syriac, Chaldean, Samaritan, Arabick, Ethiopick, Persick and Greek languages, each having its peculiar Latin translation joined therewith. As also for the better understanding of those tongues an apparatus fitted to each. And though he met with infinite disturbances and discouragements by reason of the times wherein those usurping powers ruled, and a multitude of other difficulties, he most happily accomplisht that great work in 4 years space. He took to wife daughter to Dr. William Fuller dean of Ely, and left issue by her only one son. He was a man very well skilled in the common lawes of the realme, especially so far as they related to the patrimony and liberties of the church, as appeareth by a little book written in defence of the tythes, within the city of London according to the proportion of 2s. 9d. the pound rent. whilst, maugre the malice of those hellish machinators, he, with more earnest zeal and indefatigable labour than any, carried on, and promoted the printing of that great Bible in so many languages. So that the Old and New Testament may well be his monument, which he erected with no small expence of his own. Therefore he little needs the pageantry of pompous titles emblazoned, or displayed in herald's books, whose name is written in the book of life. He died on St. Andrew's eve, in the 62d year of his age, in the first year of his consecration, and in the year of our Lord God 1661.—This worthy person Dr. Walton hath written, besides Bibl. Polyg. these two books, (1) Introductio ad Lectionem Linguarum Orientalium. Lond. 1655. oct. (2) The Considerator considered: or, a brief View of certain Considerations upon the Biblia Polyglotta, the Prolegomena and Appendix thereof, &c. Ibid. 1659. oct. See in Jo. Aug. 12. RICHARD DUKESON D. of D. of Cambr.¹—He was minister of the church of St. Clement Danes within the liberty of Westminster, from which being sequestered by the violent and restless presbyterians, because of his orthodox principles, as also plundered of his goods and forced to fly for his own security, retired at length to Oxon, where for a time he exercised his function. After his majesty's return in 1660 he was restored to what he had lost, and lived several years after in a quiet repose.²

Aug. 26. WILLIAM BROUGH D. of D. of the said university.—He had been educated in Christ's coll. there,³ was afterwards rector of St. Michael's ch. in Cornhill, London, chaplain in ordinary to his majesty, and canon of Windsor, in which dignity he was installed on the first of Feb. 1638. This person, who had been much favoured by Dr. Laud archb. of Cant. and therefore esteemed by the puritans an Arminian, popishly affected and I know not what, was, in the beginning of the rebellion raised by them, sequestered of his rectory, plundered, his wife and children turned out of doors and he himself forced to fly: whereupon retiring to Oxon, the common mother and refuge in those times of afflicted royalists, he was, in consideration of his sufferings and loyalty, promoted by his majesty to the deanery of Gloucester, (upon the nomination of Dr. Frewen to the see of Litchfield and Cov.) in Aug. 1643, and was possess of it, as much as then could be, in Apr. following, in which month Dr. Frewen was consecrated. He hath written (1) The holy Feasts and Fasts of the Church, with Meditations and Prayers proper for Sacraments, and other Occasions leading to Christian Life and Death. Lond. 1657, in tw. They are grounded on certain texts of scripture. (2) Sacred Principles, Services and Saliloquies: or, a Manual of Devotions made up of three Parts. 1. The Grounds of Christian Religion, &c. 2. Daily and weekly Forms of Prayer. 3. Seven Charges to Conscience, delivering (if not the whole Body) the main Limbs of Divinity, &c. Lond. 1659. 1671. &c. in tw. and other things, as it seems. Quære. After the king's return, he had restored to him what he had lost, had other preferments given to him, and dying on the fifth day of July, an. 1671, was buried in the chappel of St. George at Windsor. In his deanery succeeded Dr. Thomas Vyner, and in his canonry Peter Scott LL. D. both of Cambridge.

Feb. 21. JOHN BARWICK mast. of arts of 19 years standing, priest and lately fellow of St. Joh. coll. in Cambridge, did then supplicate the ven. congregation that he might have the degree of batch. of div. conferr'd upon him: which being granted simpliciter, he was without doubt then admitted and created, tho' it appears not in the register so to be.—He had been lately turn'd out of his fellowship, being then, I suppose, chaplain to Dr. Tho. Morton bishop of Durham; who, as 'tis said, gave him, about this time, a prebendship in that church.⁴ After his majesty's return he became doct. of div. chaplain in ordinary to his majesty, and was in consideration of his great sufferings installed dean of Durham on the first of Nov. 1660, in the place of Dr. Will. Fuller, who died in the year before going. On the 15th of Oct. 1661, he was elected dean of St. Paul's cathedral in Lond. in the place of Dr. Matthew Nicholas deceased: whereupon being installed in that dignity on the 19th day of the same month, his deanery of Durham was confer'd on Dr. Joh. Sudbury,⁵ who accordingly was installed therein on the 15th of Feb. following. S. Amori & Æternitati, &c. in English thus, that it might be understood by vulgar capacities.—'Sacred to love, and to generations to come. Thou that passest by, whosoever thou art, bring hither thine eyes, and understanding also, intuitively both to look and lament. For within this marble wardrobe are folded up the thin worn weeds of the valuable, substantial, and well accoutred soul of John Barwick doctor of divinity, to whom Westmorland may well boast to have given first breath and being: next Cambr. may boast to have given him his first admission, and St. Joh. coll. there a fellowship in that foundation. From which fellowship (which still makes more for his honour) he was unjustly ejected by a pack of parricides; who notwithstanding, regardless of the rage of those bloody times, or his own blood-spitting malady equally pernicious [and at length more certain alas! to destroy him⁷] boldly attempted, and successfully managed matters of the greatest difficulty and danger, in the behalf of the king and church: and for that cause was shut up in a dire and loathsome prison, where he suffered inhuman and barbarous usage, yet with a constant and undaunted spirit. And in the end, he saw by the miracle, as it were of a new creation, the revival of both crown and mitre, himself playing the man-midwife's part, and vigorously assisting at the new birth of both. Last of all, for his active services and passive sufferings, he was dignified with the deanery of Durham, which he held a few months, and afterwards of St. Paul's, which he enjoyed three years, tho' either of them too short a season; yet discharged both with singular care and fidelity; living and dying a bachelor, and strictly chaste, and sanctimonious both in soul and body. And being much debilitated by a long and lingering consumption, here he rests in the Lord, and deposits his last remains among these ruinous ones of St. Paul's church, being confident of the resurrection both of the one and other. He died in the 53d year of his age, and of our Lord 1664. Reader, if thou desirest to know more of this reverend church-man, go home and learn, by the conspicuous copy of his sincere devotion what it is to be a true Christian indeed.'—After his death succeeded in the deanery of St. Paul's Dr. Will. Sancroft dean of York, in Oct. or thereabouts in 1664.

Apr. 16. Colonel GEORGE L'ISLE governour of the garrison of Faringdon in Berkshire.—On the 21st of Dec. following he had the honour of knighthood conferr'd upon him, being then, as 'tis⁹ said, master of the king's household, and highly valued for his great valour, "invincible spirit," and prudent conduct in martial affairs. This person, I take to be the same with the most magnanimous sir George L'isle, who was afterwards deeply engaged in that as honourable as unfortunate expedition of Kent, Essex and Colchester, an. 1648, in which last place he with the forces under him for his majesty, being besieged by Fairfax the parliament general and those under his conduct, he was (after the surrender thereof) shot to death in cold blood with the most renowned sir Charles Lucas, on the 28th of Aug. the same year: at which time they being both obscurely buried, their funeral was afterwards, viz. on June the 7th an. 1661, with great solemnity celebrated at Colchester by the loyal inhabitants thereof and gentry adjoining: the particulars being too many for this place, must for brevity's sake be now omitted.

Apr. 22. Colonel WILL. LEIGHTON, who hath this character given of him in the public register, fide & fortitudine pro principe & pro patria insignis, was actually created with due solemnity on that day, in convocation.—He was descended from, or at least near of kin to, sir Will. Leighton knt. an excellent musician, author of a poetical piece entit. Virtue Triumphant: or, a lively Description of the four Cardinal Virtues. Published in 1603. and dedic. to king James I. See more of him in the second vol. col. 165:

Nov. 28. SIR THOMAS GLEMHAM kt. sometimes a gent. com. of Trin. coll. in this university, now governour of the garrison of Oxford,¹ was actually created in the house of convocation with very great solemnity: at which time the vice-chancellor spoke a short and pithy speech to the assembly before he was presented, shewing to them the holiness of his life and conversation, the invincibleness of him and his party at York and Carlisle, of which cities he was successively governour, and tho' brought to famine and pestilence, yet yielded neither, but upon honourable conditions, &c. This right valiant and prudent commander was the son of sir Hen. Glemham of Little Glemham in Suffolk knt. by Anne his wife eldest daughter of sir Thomas Sackville knight, earl of Dorset; and after he had thrown off his gown, betook himself to the German wars, then the great nursery for English gentlemen, where gaining much experience, was made fit for the service in the wars at home. In 1639 he was a lieutenant col. in the regiment of the earl of Arundell in the Scotch expedition then undertaken, as also in the next, if I am not mistaken, that was took in the year following. Afterwards taking part with his majesty against his rebellious subjects in England, did him admirable service in the garrisons before-mention'd and was highly venerated by all military mén. When he died, I cannot justly say; sure I am, that by his last will and test. dated 22 Jan. 1647, and proved 13 Mar. 1649, he appointed his younger brother Dr. Hen. Glemham his executor, who caused his body to be buried at Little Glemham before-mention'd, as I have been informed by some of his relations.

May 6. ADRIAN METCALFE batch. of phys. was then created doct. of that faculty.—In 1642, Nov. 1. he was actually created M. of A. and perhaps is the same (but mistaken by the registry) with Franc. Metcalf created batch. of phys. an. 1643, as before 'tis told you.

Aug. 12. The most noble—SEYMOUR was then actually created, and admitted to give his suffrage in the house of congregation and convocation.—Whether this person be the same with Henry lord Seymour, who was created M. of A. an. 1642, as I have before told you, I know not; nor yet to the contrary, but that he may be Robert Seymour another son of William marquess of Hertford, who became a nobleman of Christ Church an. 1635, aged eleven years.²

Oct. 30. EDWARD BUCKOAKE batch. of phys. created doctor by virtue of the chancellor's letters, which say that his majesty hath thought him worthy to serve his highness prince Charles in the place of physician, and therefore that he might be the more capable of that honour, he desires that the convocation would confer on him the honour of doctor of physic, &c.—He was afterwards a physician of some note in Yorkshire.

He had a kinsman named Joh. Aylmer rector of Bletneso and Melchbourne in Bedfordshire before the civil wars broke out, who was son of Tobell, the fifth son of the said bishop Aylmer.

Dec. 17. PHILIP KING was then actually created D. of D. —This person, who was a younger son of Dr. John King sometimes bishop of London, was originally a student of Ch. Ch. afterwards orator of the university, rector of St. Botolph's church near Billingsgate in London, prebend of St. Paul's cathedral church,⁴ and archdeacon of Lewes: but being sequestered of St. Botolph's and forced to fly by the faction, he took sanctuary at Oxon, lived afterwards in a retired condition till his majesty's return; at which time being restored to what he had lost lived for some time in a quiet and sedate repose. At length paying his last debt to nature on the 4th of March 1666, was buried at Langley in Bucks, where he had a sister married to sir Rich. Hobart. Besides this Phil. King I find another of Cambr. who was incorporated M. of A. of this university 23 March 1614, a second born in Oxfordshire, who became auditor of Ch. Ch. in 1608 or thereabouts aged 35, and a third born in Nottinghamshire and the son of "Tho. King" a minister, who being entred into Ch. Ch. in 1624, took one degree in arts four years after. July 1. THANKFUL or GRACIOUS OWEN of Linc. coll.—This person, who was the son of Philip Owen, was born at Taplow in Buckinghamshire, became a sojourner of Exet. coll. under a puritanical tutor, in the year 1635, aged 16 years, elected fellow of Linc. coll. in the beginning of Aug. 1642, he being then batch. of arts, but soon after left the univ. and so consequently did not bear arms for his majesty, as other scholars did, within the garrison of Oxon. Upon the surrender of the said garrison for the use of the parliament he returned to his coll. took the degree of master, as 'tis before told you, submitted to the visitors appointed by the said parliament, being then esteemed a presbyterian. But the independents at that time carrying all before them, he became one of their number, a preacher in their private congregations, proctor of the university in 1650, and the same year, upon Cheynell's marching off, president of St. Joh. coll. and a noted politician for carrying on the then cause. In the latter end of 1653 he was appointed by Oliver one of the commissioners for the approbation of public preachers, and in 1654 he was appointed one of the assistants to the commissioners of Oxfordshire (as certain heads of other colleges were) for the ejection of such who were then called scandalous, ignorant and insufficient ministers and schoolmasters, and was not wanting upon all occasions to promote the independent interest in the university. In 1660 he was forced to leave his beloved presidentship to make room for the right owner Dr. Rich. Baylie, who for 12 years going before had suffer'd much for his loyalty: so that retiring to London he took up his quarters at length in Hatton Garden and was not wanting to carry on the congregational way upon all occasions. This person, with James Baron, did, after Dr. Thomas Goodwin's death, publish certain of his theological works in two volumes in fol. and set before them a preface. See more among the creations, under the year 1653. This Mr. Owen, who had a good command of the Latin tongue, died suddenly in his house in Hatton-Garden in Holborn near London, on the first day of April (Good Friday) 1681, and was buried near to the grave of the said Dr. Goodwin in the yard, called by some Tindal's, and by others The fanatical, burying place, joyning on the north side to the New Artillery Yard or Garden near London. Some time before his death he had almost prepared for the press a book entit. Imago Imaginis. The design of which was to shew that Rome Papal is an image of Rome Pagan, as I have been informed by one of his persuasion, who is remembred among the writers under the year 1669.

July 4. THOMAS CLUTTERBOOK or CLOTTERBOOK⁵ of Magd. coll.—This person is the same, I suppose, who was doctorated in divinity elsewhere, and installed archdeacon of Winchester 31 Jul. 1684. See more in Robert Sharrock among the writers, under the year 1684.

Nov. 10. JOSHUA AHIER of New coll.—This loyal gentleman, who was the son of Guy Ahier of St. Saviour's in the isle of Jersey, translated from French into English The Elements of Logic. Oxon 1647, oct. Written originally by Pet. du Moulin. A translation of the said book had been before made with the author's approbation, and printed at Lond. 1624, oct. by one Nathan. de Laune batch. of arts of Cambridge, educated in the grammar free-school in the city of Norwich, whence he was sent by the mayor, sheriffs and aldermen thereof to C. C. coll. in the said university, an. 1618.

Nov. 10. STEPH. SKINNER of Ch. Ch.—He then accumulated the degrees in arts.

Dec. 9. WILL. LLOYD of Jes. coll.

"Jan. 23. THO. ELLIS of Jes. coll."

Jan. 26. GEORGE STRADLING of All-s. coll.

Admitted 39.

Bachelors of Physic.

Dec. 3. JOH. BABER of Ch. Ch.—He was then admitted by virtue of the letters of colonel John Lambert governour of the garrison of Oxford for the parliament: which garrison was surrendered for their use on the 24th of June this year as I shall tell you anon.

8. { THOM. WILLIS of Ch. Ch.

{ HUMPH. BROOKE of St. Joh. coll.

The last of these two did, on the eleventh of Nov. going before, supplicate the ven. convocation that he might accumulate the degrees of mast. of arts, and batch. of phys. which was granted: see among the doctors of phys. an. 1659.

Besides these three, who were all that were this year admitted, there were two that were licensed to practise phys. viz. PETER DEWEYER of Brasen-n. coll. and EDWARD ATKINSON chirurgcon to his excellency sir Tho. Fairfax the generalissimo of the parl. army.

Batchelor of Divinity.

Jul. 23. GILB. STOAKS of Wadh. coll.—This person, who was the son of a gentleman of Devonshire, had taken one degree in arts as a member of Hart hall, an. 1608; at which time being noted for his scholarship, he was afterwards made the junior of the first two chaplains of Wadh. coll. by Dame Dorothy the foundress thereof. Afterwards he became an indefatigable student in philosophy and theology, and a continual disputant even to his last among the juniors in the time of Lent, being a usual thing in his time and before for grave seniors to take the questions of quadragesimal disputants to try and ferret them from one hole to another with subtilties: but since, that custom is esteem'd forsooth pedantic and ridiculous, to the decay in some respects of disputation. He died on the 16th of Oct. 1654, aged 71 years (being then, or some time before rector of Chilton Cantlow in the dioc. of Wells) and was buried in the outer chappel of Wadh. coll. He had written much, but published nothing, yet left behind a book, by him written in Latin, treating of the Holy Eucharist, which, by the judgment of some, was thought fit to be published.

He was the only person that was admitted this year, having several years before performed all his exercise in order thereunto.

✂ Not one doctor of law was admitted or created this year.

Doctors of Physic.

June 17. JAMES HYDE of C. C. coll.—This person, who was the eleventh son of sir Laur. Hyde of the city of Salisbury knight, became after his majesty's restoration the king's professor of physic of this university and principal of Magd. hall. He died 7 May 1681, aged 64 years, and was buried in the isle joyning to the north side of the chancel of St. Peter in the East within the city of Oxon. In the month of Jan. 1641, the members of parliament sent the oath called the protestation (made by them) to the university of Oxon to be taken by all there, of the university, that were upward of 18 years of age; whereupon the generality of the academians did take it, yet some with limitations and exceptions: others absented themselves because they did not rightly understand it, but this Mr. Jam. Hyde then fellow of C. C. coll. did plainly refuse it, which none else did beside. 'Tis true that Dr. Ralph Kettle president of Trin. coll. did wave it, yet for no other reason, but that he was an old man and had taken many oaths already, &c.

Nov. 16. JOHN WILBY of Mert. coll. was then admitted into the house of congregation and convocation.—In 1638 he took the degree of batchelor of the said faculty at Cambridge.

✂ Not one doctor of div. was adm. or licensed this year, only created.

Incorporations.

sity of St. Andrew in Scotland, was then incorporated by virtue of the letters of the chanc. of the university, which tell us that he is one of his majesty's physicians in ordinary, and a gentleman of known learning and vast experience.—He was originally a professor of philosophy in the said university, but that being too narrow a place for so great a person, he left it, travelled into various countries, and became so celebrated for his great learning and skill in physic, that he was the chief man of his country for many years for that faculty. Afterwards he received the honour of knighthood, and was highly valued when he was in Holland with the prince, 1646-47. At length tho' his infirmities and great age forced him to retire from public practice and business, yet his fame contracted all the Scotch nation to him: and his noble hospitality and kindness to all that were learned and virtuous, made his conversation no less loved, than his advice was desired. One of his name and family named James Wedderburne, had spent some time in Oxon for the sake of the public library, but the particular year when, I cannot justly tell. He was afterwards doct. of div. prebendary of Whitchurch in the church of Wells upon the resignation of Dr. Joh. Harrys of Winchester, in May 1631, and being some years after made bishop of Dumblain in his own country, Tho. Row batch. of div. was adm. to his prebendship, 30 June 1638.⁶

Oct. . . EDMUND WILSON (Anglus-Oxoniensis) son of John Wilson, was incorporated doct. of phys. as he had stood in the university of Padua.—This person, who was admitted to the degree of batch. of that faculty of Cambridge, 9 Apr. 1638, and to that of doctor at Padua in Jan. 1641, I take to be the same with E. Wilson author of—Spadacrene Dunelmensis: Or a short Treatise of an antient medicinal Fountain or vitrioline Spaw near the City of Durham. Together with the constituent Principles, Virtues and Use thereof. Lond. 1675, &c. oct. also the same who published The Spirit of Salt, with the true Oyle or Spirit of Sulphur, &c. Printed in qu. 1665.

Oct. 15. THOMAS COX doct. of phys. of Padua, son of Thom. Cox of Somersetsh.—This gentleman, who had taken the said degree at Padua, in Dec. 1641, was a physician in the parliament army, afterwards fellow of the coll. of physicians, and president thereof, but being whiggishly inclined, was deprived of that office in Oct. 1683; whereupon Dr. Daniel Whistler was put into his place about St. Luke's day in the same month. Afterwards Dr. Cox put himself in prison purposely to compound for his debts, and died as Dr. Whistler did.

Nov. . . WILL. CURREY of Yorkshire, doct. of phys. of Leyden (where he took that degree in 1643) was then incorporated. "A chymical physician, entirely beloved by "Mr. Ashmole, died 16 Sept. 1668, buried in the chancel of "St. Clem. Danes Westminster."

⁶ [The Scots, in their Canterburians Self Conviction, 4to. third edit. 1641, complain, p. 11—

"Doctor Wedderburne in the new college of S. Andrew did stuff his dictates to the young students in divinity, with these Arminian errors. This man upon the feares of our church's censure, having fled the country, was very tenderly embraced by his grace of Cant. at court, and well rewarded with a fair benefice in England for his labours. But to the end his talents should not lie hid, tho' a man very unmeet either for preaching or government, he was sent down to us without the knowledge of our church, for this purpose mainly, that in the royal chapell, whereof that bishop is alwaies dean, he might in despite of all our presbyteries weave out the web he had begun in St. Andrews. So quickly there was erected a societie of twenty four royal chaplains who were thought fittest of the whole clergy of the kingdom to be allured with hopes of favour from court, to preach to the state the dean's Arminian tenets." KENNET.]

Dec. 17. WILL. MARSHALL mast. of arts of Sidney coll. in Cambridge was then incorporated in the same degree.

Feb. 12. EDW. EMILIE of Ch. Ch. doct. of phys. of Leyden, was then incorporated Dr. of phys.—In 1652 or 53 he held up his hand at the bar, at an assize held in Oxon, for coynage, but being freed, he went to London, practised his faculty in the parish of St. Olave's Silver-street, and died there in the beginning of the year 1658, leaving then a relict behind him named Elizabeth.

Mar. 22. RICHARD JACKSON alias KEURDEN batch. of arts of Emanuel coll. in Cambridge.—In 1638 he became a commoner of St. Mary's hall in this university, but upon the breaking out of the rebellion went to Cambridge, where continuing till the Oxford garrison was surrendered, he retired to his hall again, and was incorporated batch. of arts. See more among the created doctors of physic 1663.

Creations.

The creations this year did mostly consist of scholars, not of those only that were factious, after the garrison was surrendered, but of those that were orthodox, or had suffered for their loyalty.

Batchelors of Law.

June 17. NOAH BRIDGES of Bal. coll. lately clerk of the parliament that sate at Oxon, 1643, and 44, was then actually created batch. of the civil law, being at that time esteemed a most faithful subject to his majesty.—He was afterwards author of—Lux Mercatoria: Arithmetical natural and decimal, digested into a more easie and exact Method for Resolving the most practical and useful Questions that have been yet published. Lond. 1661, and perhaps of other things.⁷ This person, who had a lodging allowed him in Bal. coll. during the time of the war, is not to be taken to be the same (as some blundering persons that understand but little of authors and books, have done) with Noah Biggs the author of The Vanity of the Craft of Physic, &c. Lond. 1650, 51, qu.

ALEXANDER DYER of Wadh. coll.⁸ who for many years together had been trained in the courts ecclesiastical and civil at London, &c. was created the same day.

Aug. 4. MILES SMITH of Magd. coll. who had been admitted batch. of arts, an. 1638, was actually created batch. of the civil law by virtue of the chancellor's letters directed formerly to the convoc.—This person, who should have been mention'd among the writers,⁹ could I have obtain'd full information of him, was a minister's son of, or near to, the city of Gloucester, and nearly related to Dr. Miles Smith sometimes bishop of that city, was at his first coming to Magd. coll. a servitour, as his contemporaries have informed me, was now a sufferer for his majesty's cause, and after his restoration a retainer and secretary to the archb. of Canterbury. He hath published The Psalms of K. David paraphrased into English Meeter, Lond. 1668, oct. and perhaps other things. He had a son of both his names sometimes a gent. com. of Trin. coll. who dying in the parish of St. Peter in the East 17 Oct. 1682; aged 18, his body was conveyed thence to Lambeth near London, I think, and there buried. The said Dr. Smith bishop of Gloucester had a son called Miles as I have elsewhere told you, which is all I know of him.

Masters of Arts.

June 17. JAMES ASTON of St. John's coll. a captain in the king's army.—Afterwards he was a sufferer for his majesty's cause, but after his restoration became well benefited, and in Ap. 1682 canon of Wells.

July 1. NATHANIEL READING of Mert. coll.

20. GILES OLDISWORTH batch. of arts of Cambridge was then actually created master, by virtue of the chancellor's letters written in his behalf, and read in a convocation held on the 21st of Feb. going before.—This loyal divine, who was the son of Robert Oldisworth esq; by Miriel his wife, daughter of Nich. Overbury and sister to sir Thomas, who was poyson'd in the Tower of London, was born at Coln-Rogers in Gloucestershire, an. 1619, educated in the college school at Westminster, elected scholar of Trinity coll. in Cambridge 1639,¹ forced thence for his allegiance to the king, retired to Oxon, and was there created master, as before I have told you, he being then rector of the church of Bourton on the Hill near to Morton in the Marsh commonly called Morton Henmarsh in Gloucestershire. He hath written and published, (1) The Stone roll'd away, and Life more abundant: viz. The holy Royalist; or secret Discontents of Church and Kingdom, reduced unto Self-denial, Moderation and Thankfulness. Lond. 1663-64. qu. Before it, is his majesty's picture, as being dedicated to him, from whom he had received, as it seems, some kind of preferment after his restoration. Into the body of this discourse, p. 370, is haled in (2) A Sermon preached at the Funeral of Mrs. Dorothy Rutter, Wife of Mich. Rutter Esq; who died in Child-bearing. 'Tis without a text,² and dedicated to sir John Hales of Warwick bart. nephew to the said Dorothy. In this volume the author inserts many trivial, impertinent and weak passages, yet seems to shew some considerable reading in the fathers, and other old authors, to have been honest, loyal and a zealous stickler to his capacity for the establishment of the church of England in its whole constitution. (3) The Race set before us, shewing the Necessity laid upon Gospel Believers, to run with Diligence through all Gospel Duties, Sermon preach'd at Mercer's Chap. in Lond. on the 11th of May 1665; on 1 Cor. 9. 24. Oxon. 1666. qu. He hath also other things extant, which I have not yet seen, viz. (4) Visitation Sermon; preach'd at Camden in Gloucestershire, on 2 Cor. 7. 1. printed, as it seems, in 1662. qu. (5) The Father of the Faithful tempted, &c. a funeral Sermon, &c. Oxon. 1677. (6) Sir Tho. Overbury's Wife unvail'd, &c. printed in tw. 'Tis a poem, and call'd by some The illustrious Wife, &c. (7) Ad eruditissimos sacrorum Biblitorum Polyglottorum "Compilatores, Poema. printed on one side of a sheet of "paper in double col." This author Giles Oldisworth died 24 Nov. 1678, and was buried in the chancel of the church of Bourton on the Hill before-mention'd.

Aug. 5. THO. VINCENT of Ch. Ch. lately in service for his majesty in remote parts, was then created by virtue of his majesty's letters formerly sent to the university.—He was a Dorsetshire man born, and afterwards a sufferer for the royal cause.

Dec. 17. THOM. WILLIS formerly of St. John's coll. in this university, had then the degree of master conferr'd on him by virtue of the letters of sir Thomas Fairfax general of the parliament army, which partly say that Of his approved ability and integrity for learning and life, he had been sufficiently informed, &c. He was presented to this degree by Mr. Joh. Goad of the same coll. See more of him among the created doct. of div. an. 1670.

Mar. 11. RICH. MANSELL of Bal. coll. who had been adm. batch. of arts in 1643, was then created master of that faculty by virtue of the letters of the said sir Tho. Fairfax, wherein 'tis said that he was then a parliamentary officer —He was one of the guard belonging to the said Fairfax, as a senior fellow of Bal. coll. hath informed me.

Batchelors of Divinity.

June 6. In a convocation then held, the vicechancellor signified to the members thereof, that several preachers of this and the university of Cambridge, had preached several laudable sermons before the king, court, and parliament at Oxon: For which their pains, the delegates, appointed by the university, could think of no other way to requite them but by conferring on them degrees: which matter being at length decreed by them, and approved by the chancellor's letters, their names then were publicly read, with liberty given to the said persons to be created when they pleased. Among those that were created this year, are these following.

- Jun. 17. { RICH. SHERLOCK chapl. of New coll.
JAMES MASTERS of St. Alb. hall.
JOH. CASTILION } of Ch. Ch.
WILL. TOWERS }
THO. JOYCE of Hart hall.
Jun. 27. { ROWLAND NICOLLS of Magd. coll.
THOM. NORGATE of Ch. Ch.

The first of these two last, became chancellor of the diocese of Carlisle, in the room of one Hen. Marshall M. A. an. 1667, and the other was now chaplain to sir Thom. Glemham governour of the garrison of Oxon.

June 22. RICHARD HARWOOD of Magd. hall.

- { PET. GUNNING chaplain of New coll.
GEORGE ASHWELL of Wadh. coll.
23. { WILL. CREED } of St. John's coll.
GEOR. GISBIE }

The last being afterwards ejected, was restored to his coll. in 1660, and dying 13 May 1664, was buried in the chappel of St. John's coll. 'Tis said that on the same day Isaac Barrow chaplain of New coll. (afterwards B. of Man and St. Asaph) was actually created also batch. of div. yet occurs not registered.

July 1. JOSHUA MYNNE of Ch. Ch. lately of Peter house in Cambridge.

10. JOSIAS HOW of Trin. coll.—This person, who was "son of Tho. How minister of Grendon in Buckingham-shire," now in good esteem for his ingenuity, hath published A Sermon before the King at Ch. Ch. on Psal. 4. 7. Printed, as 'tis said, in red letters, an. 1644 or thereabouts, in qu.³

³ [Yesterday Jan. 14, 1723, I purchased out of the late Dr. Charlett's study a sermon in quarto of forty pages upon Psal. 4. 7. It cost Dr. Charlett five shillings as himself formerly told me. It is printed in red letters and is one of the greatest rarities I ever saw. The title page is wanting, and perhaps there never was any. The author was Mr. Josias How fellow of Trinity college Oxon a very great cavalier and loyalist and a most ingenious man. It was preached before K. Charles I. at Christchurch and was printed an. 1644 or thereabouts as Mr. Wood observes, tho' he never could see the sermon. I have been well assured, that this sermon was printed at Oxford, at Lichfield's press and that there were only thirty copies printed, that K. Charles I ordered it himself to be printed in red letters tho' Mr. How being against printing his sermons had before told his friends, that if ever he printed any sermon it should be in red letters and that Lichfield being then printing archbishop Usher's ed. of Ignatius's epistles made use of the very same ink that he did in Ignatius's where is a great deal of red letter. The times being troublesome and in confusion and very bloody a red letter was proper but this I have not yet seen.⁴ He hath also several copies of verses that are extant in various books, which shew him to have been a good poet. He was put out of his fellowship by the parliamentary visitors an. 1648, was restored in 1660, but was no gainer by his sufferings as many honest cavaliers were not by theirs. He is now living, and will tell you the reason why, &c.

Others were created this year, which for brevity's sake I shall now omit to set down: However the reader must know, that several persons besides were allowed to take the same degree of batch. of div. among whom were OBADIAH WALKER of Univ. coll. and ANT. HODGES chapl. of New coll. but they refused that favour.

Doctors of Physic.

April 9. PETER MASSONET lately of the city of Geneva, now second or under tutor to James duke of York, was then actually created.

June 23. CHARLES SCARBOROUGH of Merton coll. lately fellow of that of Caius of Cambr.⁵ was then actually created by virtue of the letters of the chancellor of the university, in which 'tis said that he was master of arts of Cambridge of 7 years standing and upwards, and that he was spoiled of his library in the beginning of these troubles; and afterwards for his conscience deprived of his fellowship at Cambridge, &c. His letters testimonial under the hand of the famous Dr. Will. Harvey, say also that he is well learned in phisic, philosophy and mathematics, &c. While he abode in Mert. coll. he did help the said Dr. Harvey then warden of that house (in his chamber at the end of the said library there) in the writing his book De Generatione Animalium, which was afterwards published by the said Harvey. Afterwards he became a most learned and incomparable anatomist, one of the coll. of physicians, principal physician to king Charles II. (from whom he received the honour of knighthood on the 15 of Aug. 1669) and to his royal highness James his brother, while duke of York, and when king, physician to the Tower of London, and afterwards to king Will. III. &c.

and tis very probable that the sermon being much talked of then as it hath been since to secure both himself and the printer the better, Mr. How might leave out the title page. Mr. Wood was well acquainted with this Mr. How and yet for all that he could neither see this sermon nor get a good clear account of it which makes me think that Mr. How had no copy of it by him when Mr. Wood became acquainted with him. I have heard old Mr. Crosley an Oxford bookseller, who died some years ago at Great Milton, having left off his trade a little before he died, say more than once, upon my asking him, that he once had this sermon in red letters but he could not tell who bought it. It may be tis this very copy that I now have. As for Mr. How who took the degree of batch. of divin. July 10. 1646 being created among others that had the honour of degrees conferr'd on them by creation that year for their laudable sermons before the king, court and parliament at Oxon preached by all of them sometime before he was put out of his fellowship by the parliamentary visitors an 1648: was restored in 1660 tho he gained nothing by his sufferings as many other honest cavaliers did nothing by theirs. He lived to a great age, and died fellow of the college some few years ago; but lived so retirely in the latter part of his life that he rarely came abroad, so that I could never see him tho' I have often much desired to have a sight of him. Hearne, Robert of Gloucester's Chronicle, vol. ii, page 669.

Howe was born about the year 1611, and elected scholar of Trinity June 12, 1632, and fellow May 26, 1637. He was admitted to the degree of B. A. June 18, 1634. He died a fellow of the college, where he had constantly resided, August 28, 1701. Several of his commendatory verses will be found prefixed to the poems of his contemporaries, among others before the works of Thomas Randolph.]

He was the first that introduced⁶ geometrical and mechanical speculations into anatomy, and applyed them well in all his learned conversation, as more particularly in his famous lectures upon the muscles of humane bodies for 16 or 17 years together in the public theatre at surgeon's-hall, which were read by him with infinite applause and admiration of all sorts of learned men in the great city. He is also most admirably well skill'd in the mathematic arts, and was so esteemed by the famous Mr. Will. Oughtred, who speaks thus⁷ of him after he had given a just character of Mr. Christop. Wren—'Accessit & alter hortator vehemens D. Car. Scarborough doctor medicinæ, suavissimis moribus, perspicacissimoque ingenio vir; ejus tanta est in mathesi solertia; & supra fidem fœlix tenaxque memoria, ut omnes Euclidis, Archimedis aliorumque nonnullorum ex antiquis propositiones recitare ordine & in usum proferre potis sit,' &c. He hath extant under his name, (1) Syllabus Musculorum, which is added to The Anatomical Administration of all the Muscles of an human Body as they rise in Dissection, &c. revived with additions by Will. Molins master in chirurgery. This book, which hath been several times printed in oct. is, and ever will be used, as having a prospect of two excellent ends especially: one to shew all the muscles as they naturally rise in dissection, the other, to place every one of them by his proper antagonist. (2) Trigonometry, printed in qu. He hath also compendiously methodized the Grammar of the famous Will. Lilye, which shews him to have been a critical grammarian, as indeed he is; but this I have not yet seen, nor his Elegy upon Mr. Abr. Cowley, which goes from hand to hand in MS. This worthy person is now living in great repute and veneration at court,⁸ within the liberty of Westminster; of whom you may see more in the discourse of Dr. Seth Ward among the writers in this vol. under the year 1689.

June 23. ROB. MEAD M. A. of Ch. Ch. and a captain in his majesty's service.

WILLIAM LORD BOUNCKER viscount of Castle Lyons, son of sir Will. Brouncker, (mention'd among the created doctors of the civil law under the year 1642) was actually created doctor of phisic the same day—This noble person, did then solely addict himself to the study of the mathematics, and at length became a very great artist in that faculty. He was afterwards fellow of the Royal Society, and president thereof for about 15 years: Which society he did much honour and advance by his learning and experience. The places of honour and profit which he held, were the chancellorship of her majesty's courts, and keeping of her great seal, one of the lords commissioners for the executing the office of the lord high admiral, and mastership of St. Catharine's hospital near to the Tower of London: Which last place he obtained in Nov. 1681, after a long suit of law had depended between him and sir Rob. Atkins a judge, concerning the right thereof. He hath extant under his name, Experiments of the recoiling of Guns, mention'd in the Hist. of the Royal Society, and Several Letters to Dr. Jam. Usher Primate of Ireland, which are at the end of his life published by Dr. R. Parr. He died in his house in St. James's-street within the liberty of West. on the 5th of April early in the morning, an. 1684, aged 64 years, and was buried on the 14th of the same month in a little vault which he had

HEN. BOUNCKER younger brother to the said L. Brouncker, was created the same day, Jun. 23.—After the death of Will. lord Brouncker, this Henry succeeded him in his honour, and dying about the 4th of January 1687, was buried at Richmond in Surrey, where there is a mon. over his grave.

Doctors of Divinity.

Jun. 6. In a convocation then held, the vicechancellor signified to the members thereof, &c. as before, under the title of batch. of div. this year: Whereupon these persons following were created, either for their preaching before the court or parl. at Oxon, or for their sufferings for the royal cause.

Jun. 17. { MATTHEW BROOKES of Mert. coll.
JASP. MAYNE of Ch. Ch.
THOM. SWADLIN of St. Joh. coll.
THO. PHILPOT of New coll.

This last, Tho. Philpot son of Dav. Philpot, was born at Michel Dever in Hampshire, educated in Wykeham's school near Winchester, made perpetual fellow of New coll. in 1609, and afterwards taking holy orders, he became rector of Turveston and Akeley in Buckinghamshire. In the beginning of the civil war, he suffered much for his loyalty and a good conscience, suffer'd also by the loss of his goods and imprisonment; and therefore retiring to Oxon, was there actually created D. of D. He hath published, (1) An Adieu to the Duke of Gloucester; or, a Sermon preached in a poor Parish Church (Turveston or Turveston) near Buckingham 23 Sept. 1660; on Eccles. 3. 20. Lond. 1660. qu. (2) The Cripple's Complaint, &c. Sermon on St. Joh. 5. 7. Lond. 1665. qu. He died in 1669, or thereabouts, and was, I suppose, buried at Turveston.

Jun. 22. { GER. LANGBAINE prov. of Qu. coll.
THOMAS BRAVELL of Magd. coll.

23. JOHN CROFT now of Wadham coll.—He was a younger son of sir Hen. Croft of Teddington in Bedfordshire, was first a com. of Linc. coll. afterwards fellow of that of All-souls, M. of A. and beneficed; but suffering for his majesty's cause he retired to Oxon, and was there created D. of D. as 'tis here said. After his majesty's restoration, he was, by the endeavours of William lord Croft his brother, promoted to the deanery of Norwich, in the place of Dr. Joh. Hassall some years before deceased; in which being install'd 7 Aug. 1660, sate there to the time of his death, which happening on the 27th of July 1670, he was buried in the cath. ch. at Norwich. His said brother Will. lord Croft, died either in Aug. or Sept. 1677.

WILL. STUTEVILLE of Ch. Ch. who had lately done his majesty special service in the west, was actually created the same day, June 23.

TRISTRAM SUGGE of Wadh. coll. was also created the same day.—This person, who was born at Ycovill in Somersetshire, had been public metaphysic reader and proctor of the university. Afterwards he was ejected by the visitors in 1648, and suffer'd much in the interrupted times for his loyalty. In 1660 he was restor'd to his fellowship, and dying on the 27th of January in the same year, was buried in the chappel of Wadham coll. He was esteemed by all that knew him a profound philosopher and divine, and very fit to publish what he had written of those subjects; but since his death his papers are gotten into such hands, that it is doubted whether ever they will see light.⁹

Jul. 1. EDWARD BOUGHEN of Ch. Ch.

Aug. 13. JOH. POTTINGER of New coll. the famous master of Wykeham's school near Winchester.—He resigned the said mastership soon after, was succeeded by Mr. Will. Burt, and died in 1659.

This year it was allowed by the members of the ven. convocation, that HEN. TOZER, JOH. PROCTOR, and BALDWIN ACLAND of Exeter coll. ROB. BARKER of New coll. RICH. WASHINGTON of Univ. coll. EDM. DIGGLE of Magdalen, and JOHN GOOD of New coll. might have liberty when they pleased to be created doctors of divinity, but they all refused then, and the next year to accept of that favour.

At the same time also ISAAC BASIRE,¹ and RICH. DUKE-SON of Camb. THOM. BUNBURY of Bal. coll. ROB. SIETHORP of Linc. coll. WILL. HAYWOOD of St. John's coll. &c. who had fled to Oxon, as an asylum [*to avoid the unheard of barbarities and cruelties of the presbyterians*²] and there had several times preached before his majesty and the members of parliament, had each a license given to them under the public seal of the univ. to preach the word of God throughout England.

This year Jun. 24, being Wednesday and Midsummer day, the garrison of Oxford was surrender'd for the use of the parliament; at which time marched out in a body eastward about 3000 soldiers, besides 500 or thereabouts northward, and a little before and after them, five hundred more, mostly horsemen and private persons engaged in the siege. On Monday going before, prince Rupert and prince Maurice his brother, with their attendants, departed; and those that followed them the next day, were about 300 persons, most of them of quality, and their attendants. When the forces belonging to the parliament were enter'd, who were all presbyterians, independents or worse, were among them their chaplains of the same persuasion, who forthwith, upon all occasions, thrust themselves into the pulpits, purposely by their rascally doctrine to obtain either proselytes, or to draw off from their loyal principles and orthodox religion the scholars and inhabitants. Among them were Hugh Peters that diabolical villain and pulpit-buffoon,³ Will. Dell chapl. to sir Tho. Fairfax, John Saltmarsh, Will. Erbury, &c. and what they did there besides, during their stay, is too large a story now to tell you. In Sept. following, were seven presbyterian ministers (who had formerly had their education in this university) appointed by parliament, sent to Oxon, to preach at St. Mary's, and elsewhere, to draw off the scholars from their loyal principles; but Edw. Corbet one of them, being about that time called thence, the six carried on the work, yet found opposition by the independents and other sectaries, of whom Will. Erbury was one, yet all upon any occasion would joyn together to pluck down and persecute the malignants, that is cavaliers and royalists. So that whereas before the surrender, there was no place in England more loyal to their prince, orthodox, and observant of the ceremonies of the church of England, than the scholars, and the generality of the inhabitants of Oxon were; so after the entry of the said parliamenters, there appeared nothing but confusion, darkness, &c. Hell was broke loose upon the poor remnant, and they were over-run by sectaries, blasphemers, hypocrites, excitors to rebellion, censurers, covetous persons, men of self-pride, envy, and what not. So that those of the gown that could not brook such persons, did either leave the university, or abscond in their respective houses, till they could know their doom by the approaching visitation. The soldiery did declare their impudence so much, that they forbore not to preach in some of the pulpits, and to thrust themselves into the public schools, and there, in the places of lecturers, speak to the scholars against human learning, and challenge the most learned of them to prove their calling from Christ, &c. But let the restless presbyterians be thanked for the original of all these evils, and others that followed; who, to fill their coffers, raise their families, please and cherish their private lusts and endearments and nothing else, care not what mischief they do, or what ruin they bring upon this poor nation, so that they might obtain their own unworthy ends.

³ [It was remarkable that Hugh Peters, a sort of an enthusiastical buffoon-preacher, tho' a very vicious man, who had been of great use to Cromwell, and had been outrageous in pressing the king's death, with the cruelty and rudeness of an inquisitor, was the man of all the regicides that was the most sunk in his spirit, and could not in any sort bear his punishment. He had neither the honesty to repent of it, nor the strength of mind to suffer for it, as all the rest of them did; and he was observed all the while to be drinking some cordial liquors to keep him from fainting. MACRO.]

AN. DOM. 1647. 23 CAR. I.

Chancellor.

The same, viz. WILLIAM MARQUESS OF HERTFORD, &c. who continuing in his office till the beginning of February, PHILIP EARL OF PEMBROKE AND MONTGOMERY was about that time restored; and according to an order of the lords in parl. dated 2 March, he was desired to go to Oxford, and re-take possession of his place. According to which order he went in the beginning of the next year, as I shall tell you by and by.

Vicechancellor.

DR. SAM. FELL without any nomination by the chanc. So that being discharged of his office by order from the visitors, 8 Oct. this year, because, as they said, he was neither nominated, or lawfully admitted thereunto, yet notwithstanding he took no notice of that order, but supplied the place still, either in his own person, or by deputies.

Proctors.

Apr. 29. { ROB. WARING of Ch. Ch.
HEN. HUNT of Magd. coll.

Notwithstanding an order issued out from the visitors authorized by parl. for the removal of the sen. proctor, dated 20 January this year, yet he continued therein till new proctors were elected.

May 22. JOHN FINCH of Bal. coll.—This most worthy person, who was younger brother to sir Heneage Finch (afterwards earl of Nottingham) and both the sons of sir Heneage Finch, brother to Thomas earl of Winchelsea, was bred in grammar learning under Mr. Edw. Sylvester, who taught in All-saints parish in Oxon; and when at about 15 years of age he became gent. com. of the said coll. of Baliol. After he had taken one degree here, he applied his mind to the study of physie, but leaving the university when it was turn'd topsy turvy the next year by the visitors, he some time after travelled into Italy, became doctor of his faculty there (at Padua as it seems) and public reader of it in several places. Afterwards he was made consul of the English at Padua, and prefer'd by all the Italians and Greeks (tho' himself much opposed it) to be syndie of that whole university, an honour no English man ever had before. In contemplation and memory of his excellent government, they did set up his statue in marble, and the great duke (invited by the fame of his learning and virtues) did make him the public professor at Pisa; all princes striving who should most honour a person (so vastly above his years) so knowing and meritorious. After his majesty's restoration, he returned to his native country, and giving a visit to Edw. earl of Clarendon lord chancellor, he was by him conducted to his majesty; and being by him presented as a rarity, his majesty no sooner saw, but instantly confer'd upon him the honour of knighthood (Jun. 10. 1661.) as a person who abroad had in a high degree honoured his country. In 1665 he was sent resident for his maj. of Great Britain with the great duke of Tuscany, and upon his arrival at Florence sir Bernard Gascoigne (a known friend to the English nation) did with an undeniable civility press him to take quarter at his own house, till he should be farther provided; which he accordingly accepted, and the duke was pleased to employ the said sir Bernard to his majesty's resident, with such notices and respects as he found then convenient. In the end, all things being agreed upon, as to the manner and dignity of his reception, the said resident made his entry in a very noble coach, being attended with an answerable train, in rich liveries, and a great number of other coaches, beside the whole factory of Leghorn, who very kindly appeared in a handsom equipage to do him all possible honour. Thus attended, he went to the palace, and received audience, first from the great duke, and two days after from the dutchess and prince, acquitting himself with a singular grace throughout the whole ceremony. Afterwards he shewed himself dexterous and happy in his public ministry, as also in his private conversation, whereby he gained to himself the esteem and good will of all men. When he had continued there some years he returned, and was sent ambassador to Constantinople, and continued there, with very great esteem also. After he had quitted that office, he returned to London, and dying early in the morn. of the 18th of Nov. 1682, (being then fellow of the coll. of physicians) he was buried in the chap. of Christ's coll. in Cambridge, to which house he had been a great benefactor. He had a brother named Francis Finch, bred up also under E. Sylvester, was afterwards a gent. com. of Bal. coll. but leaving it without a degree, went to London, studied the law, and became a barrister of one of the Temples, but before he had long practised he died, yet lives still in those several pieces of ingenuity he left behind him, wherein he falls not short of the best of poets: And because 'poeta est finitimus oratori,' he might have proved excellent in that too, having so incomparable a precedent as his brother sir Heneage Finch. Among the several specimens of his poetry which I have seen, is a copy of verses before Will. Cartwright's Poems,

Masters of Arts.

Apr. 2. JOH. LYDALL of Trin. coll.—He was an ingenious man, an excellent philosopher, a great tutor, and might have honoured the world with his learning had his life been longer spared. He died 12 Oct. 1657, aged 32 years or thereabouts, and was buried in the chappel belonging to his coll. He had been ejected his fellowship, but was allowed to take pupils.⁵

Jul. 8. RICH. WATKINS of Ch. Ch.—This person, who was son of Hen. Watkins mention'd among the doct. of div. in the FASTI of the first vol. under the year 1619, was afterwards author of a pamphlet entit. News from the Dead: Or a true and exact Narration of the miraculous Deliverance of Ann Greene, who being executed at Oxford 14 Dec. 1650, afterwards revived, &c. Oxon. 1651. qu. printed twice in that year. To which are added poems written upon that subject by divers Oxford scholars. He was afterwards vicar of Amersden in the dioc. of Oxon, and is now rector of Whichford in Warwickshire, and of Bourton on the Hill in Gloc.

Jul. 13. JOH. HUMPHREY of Pemb. coll.—He is now living a nonconformist.

Dec. 9. JOH. DOLBEN of Ch. Ch.—It doth not appear that he had taken the degree of batch. of arts, and therefore I suppose he did now accumulate. He was afterwards bishop of Rochester and archb. of York.

Jul. 10. SAM. BRUEN M. of A. of the university of St. Andrew in Scotland. He was afterwards put in fellow of Brasen. coll. by the visitors appointed by parliament, and was one of the proctors of the university. There was one Rob. Bruen, chaplain to the most noble William earl of Pembroke, a minister of God's word, and an inhabitant of West-Markham in Nottinghamshire, who hath written, The Pilgrim's Practice, containing many godly Prayers, &c. Lond. 1621. in tw. A Summary of the Bible, &c. Lond. 1622-23. and other things. But whether this Rob. Bruen the writer was any relation to this Sam. or the same with Rob. Bruen an esquire's son, entred into Brasen-n. coll. 1593, I know not. Quære.

Masters of Arts.

June 17. AMOS WALDROND—He was then, as it seems, created, because in a convocation then held, that degree was then granted to him by the members thereof. He had been admitted a student in Trin. coll. in Cambr. 18 Nov. 1637, was elected scholar of that house in Easter term 1641, and admitted batch. of arts in Jan. following. Afterwards he entered into holy orders, had a rectory conferred on him, but being forced thence by the presbyterians, was taken into the protection of Will. marquess of Hertford, and by him made his secretary: which place he now (1647) enjoyed.

It was also then granted by the convocation, that JOHN KING lately a student of Ch. Ch. son of Dr. Hen. King bishop of Chichester, might be created M. of A. in any congregation or convocation; but whether he was so, it appears not.

Jul. 8. THOM. READING of Ch. Ch. lately freed from prison, wherein he had for a long time been detained from the offices, not of a good citizen, but from those of the university, was then actually created.

At the same time the university delegates did grant to THOM. RASTALL batch. of arts of Ch. Ch. (lately an undergraduat of the university of Camb.) that he might have the degr. of M. A. conferr'd on him, in consideration of the several services he had done for his majesty; but whether he was admitted I cannot tell.

On the 2d of Nov. three batch. of arts, who had been soldiers in the garrison of Oxon, were also then created masters, but in the year after were ejected: And on the 24th of Jan. following it was dispensed with by the said delegates, that THO. WOOD batch. of arts of Ch. Ch. of 5 years standing, who was the first young scholar, or undergraduat that voluntarily left the univ. to serve his majesty at the battel of Edghill, might be presented to the degr. of mast. in any congregation; which was accordingly done, but not registered. The next year he being deeply engaged in the cavaleering plot at Oxon, in order for the relief of the distressed royalists besieged in Colchester, he was forced thence to save his neck: Whereupon going into Ireland, he became an officer in the regiment of col. Hen. Ingoldsby (his quondam school-fellow at Thame) against those that were then called rebels; where, at Tredagh, he ended his days of the country disease called the flux, an. 1651.

Batchelors of Physic.

Feb. 1. EDM. GAYTON of St. John's coll.—He was turned out of his place the next year, and soon after compounded for his estate, for the sum of 47*l*.

About the same time it was allowed to three masters to be created batchelors of physic, two of which (of Exeter coll.) were afterwards ejected: Whereupon one of them going to Padua was there made doctor, and incorporated here after his majesty's restoration, and the other actually created, as I shall tell you when I come to the year 1660.

Batchelors of Divinity.

The first of these two, who was son of Franc. Walwyn of Mugwell-street in Lond. was elected from Merch. Tayl. school, scholar of St. John's coll. 1634 or thereabouts, aged 17 years, was afterwards fellow, M. of A. and a noted preacher. In 1648 he was ejected his fellowship, suffered much in the interval, but at length obtaining the vicaridge of East Coker in Somersetshire, publish'd (1) God save the King: or a Sermon of Thanksgiving for his Majesty's happy Return to his Throne; on 1 Sam. 10. 24. Besides these two, were four more created, and three that had liberty to be created when they pleased. Some of those that were created had preached before the king and parl.

Doctor of Law.

Nov. 23. GEORGE WILDE of St. John's coll.—He was the only person that was created this year, and after his majesty's restoration he became bishop of London-Derry in Ireland.

Doctors of Physic.

May 8. Capt. ANTHONY MORGAN sometimes of Magd. coll. was actually created by virtue of the letters sent to the univ. from Fairfax general of the parl. army, which say that he hath faithfully behaved himself in the public service, meaning the service of the parliament.

THOM. WHARTON of Trin. coll. was created the same day by virtue of the letters from the said general, which say that he was sometimes a student in this university, and afterwards improved his time in London in the study of all parts of physic, &c.

In a convocation held 17 June it was granted to JOHN FRENCH M.A. of New inn, now a physician in the parl. army, that he might accumulate the degrees of batch. and doct. of phys. but he did not.—See more in the next year, where you'll find him actually created.

This year flocked to the university several poor scholars, whom some call'd the scum of Cambridge, many poor school-masters, pedagogues from belfries, curates and sometimes vicars, as also parl. soldiers, especially such that had been lately disbanded, to gain preferment by the visitation approaching; for this year the visitors could make nothing of it, as I have elsewhere^a told you. They were commonly called Seekers, were great frequenters of the sermons at St. Mary's, preached by the 6 ministers appointed by parliament, and other presbyterian ministers that preached in other churches in Oxon, and sometimes frequenters of the conventicles of independents and anabaptists. The generality of them had mortified countenances, puling voices, and eyes commonly, when in discourse, lifted up, with hands lying on their breasts. They mostly had short hair, which at this time was commonly called the committee cut, and went in quirpo in a shabbed condition, and looked rather like pren-

In 1656 he was installed one of the proctors, and continued in his house, as I conceive, 'till his majesty's restoration. He hath written and published, De Juventute: Oratio habita in Comitibus Oxoniensibus. Lond. 1664, in 10 sh. in qu. This oration was spoken by him when he was rhetoric reader of the university of Oxon. The second edit. of this came out at Lond. 1689, qu. Which, by an epist. before it, the author dedicates to Westminster school, wherein he was educated in grammar learning, to All-s. coll. wherein he was educated in academicals, to Linc. inn, where he had studied the common law, and to the island of Barbadoes, where he, as a judge, had administred the law.

Feb. 13. WILL. LEY of Ch. Ch. — He occurs not either matriculated of any house, or batch. of arts of this university, and therefore I suppose he was a stranger put in student of Ch. About 20 were incorporated, of which number were these.

June 10. RICH. MADEN of Magd. coll. in Cambridge.—This person, who afterwards took the degree of master, as a member of New inn, I set down here, not that he was afterwards a writer, but to distinguish him from another of both his names who was author of certain sermons of Christ's Love towards Jerusalem. Lond. 1637, qu. and perhaps of other things.

Jul. 4. PETER PETT of Sydney coll.—He was soon after made fellow of All-s. coll. became a great virtuoso, and at length a kn. and a writer, and therefore he is hereafter to be numbred among the writers, with honour.

Oct. 10. JAM. WARD of Harvard coll. at Cambridge in New England.—His testimony dated 3 Dec. 1646 is subscribed by Hen. Dunster president, and Sam. Danforth fellow, of that coll. but whether this J. Ward published any thing afterwards, I know not. After he was incorporated, he was admitted master. See among the created batch. of phys. 1649

Dec. 8. JOH. ROWE of Cambridge in Old England.—Two days after he was admitted master, as I have before told you.

Masters of Arts.

Seven or more masters of the said univ. of Camb. were incorporated, but such obscure persons they were that nothing can be said of them.

Oct. 10. WILL. HAMILTON M. A. of the univ. of Glasgow in Scotland.—This person, who was noted among the presbyterians for a learned man, was put in fellow of All-s. coll. this year by the visitors, but left it in 1651 because he refused the independent oath called the Engagement. Afterwards he took his rambles, settled and had some place bestowed on him, but what I cannot tell. Among several things that he hath written is a pamphlet entit. Some Necessity of Reformation, &c. printed 1667 in reply to a pamphlet written by the learned Dr. John Pearson entit. No Necessity of Reformation, &c. in answer to Reasons shewing the Necessity of Reformation, &c. See in Corn. Burges an. 1665. in Hen. Savage an. 1672. and in Jo. Biddle an. 1662.

There were also 4 English-men who were masters of arts of the university of St. Andrew incorporated, but not one of them was afterwards a writer, bishop, or man of note. Two of them were at present of Mert. coll. who afterwards were preferr'd by the visitors to be fellows of colleges in the places of royalists ejected, viz. one of Wadhaun, and another of Brasen-n. coll.

Doctors of Physic.

Apr. 14. EDM. TRENCH (Anglo-Nordovicensis) doct. of physic of Bourges in France.—He took that degree there in 1638.

JOHN MICKLETHWAIT a Yorksh. man born, who had taken the degree of doct. of phys. at Padua in Italy, 1638, was incorporated also the same day, Apr. 14.—He was now one of the coll. of physicians, was, several years after, president thereof, physician in ord. to king Charles II. from whom he received the honour of knighthood; and dying on Friday 29 July 1683, aged 70 years, was buried in the lower end of the church (on the north side) of St. Botolph without Aldersgate, London.²

GEORGE ROGERS of Linc. coll. doct. of phys. of Padua, was incorporated the same day, Apr. 14.—He is now, as I conceive, or at least was lately, president of the coll. of physicians, hath published certain things, and therefore is to be remembered hereafter.

Oct. 13. ROB. WAYDESDEN doct. of phys. of Cambridge, was then incorporated.

Creations.

There were two or more creations this year in all faculties, which were called the Pembrokean creations, because they were made by the command of Philip earl of Pembroke chancellor of the university, while he continued in Oxon, to break open lodgings and give possession to the new heads of the presbyterian gang. The creations were made on the 12th, 14th and 15th of April, and those that were not then created, are not to be numbred among those of Pembrokean creations.

Batchelors of Arts.

Twenty and three were created, (of which ten were of Magd. hall) yet but two were afterwards writers, as I can yet find, viz.

Apr. 15. { JOH. BARNARD of Linc. coll.
 { THO. NEAST of Magd. hall.

The last was afterwards made fell. of New coll. by the visitors. See more among the masters, an. 1650.

Batchelor of Law.

only person that was created batch. of law. He is mention'd among the writers under the year 1682.

Masters of Arts.

Among 61 masters that were created, are these following.

- Apr. 12. { CHARLES DORMER EARL of CAERNARVAN, grandson, by the mother, to Philip earl of Pembroke.
JAMES HERBERT } sons of the earl of Pembroke.
JOHN HERBERT }
Apr. 12. { SIR WILL. COBBE of Adderbury } in Oxford-
WILL. TIPPING of Draycot esq. } shire.
JOH. CARTWRIGHT of Aynoe in Northamptonshire, sometimes of Brasen-n. coll.
JOH. WILKINSON gent.

These last were visitors of the univ. appointed by the parl.

All these, besides three more, whose Christian names occur not, were presented by sir Nath. Brent to the new vicechanc. Dr. Reynolds, at which time the chancellor of the univ. sate in the supream chair in the convocation house.

Apr. 14. LIEUT. COL. THO. KELSEY, commonly called colonel Kelsey, now deputy-governour of the garrison of Oxon, for the parliament, was then actually created M. of A. —This person, who had been a mean trader in Birchin-Lane in London, (a godly button-maker as I have heard) was a great creature of Ol. Cromwell, who made him a commissioner of the admiralty worth 500*l.* per an. and major gen. for Kent and Surrey, the salary for one of which counties came to 666*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* per an. besides the revenues due to him as being governor of Dover Castle. After his majesty's restoration, when then he was deprived of all his places, he took upon him the trade of brewing in London, lived at least 20 years after, and died but in a mean condition, as I have heard.

FRANCIS ALLEY a captain in Oxford garrison was created the same day. —He afterwards lived at, or near, Abingdon, and died but in a sorry condition. One of both his names, a goldsmith in Fleet-street, London, son of the poor vicar of Gretton in Northamptonshire, was one of the judges of king Charles I. and a constant rumper, but whether of any kin to the captain I cannot tell. Thom. Wait, another judge of the said king, was the son of an ale-house keeper of Market Overton; but he was not created.

LATIMER CROSS lately manciple of Magd. hall, now steward of Magd. coll. —He died 3 Dec. 1657, and was buried in Magd. coll. chappel; whereupon his stewardship was bestowed by the then president on a godly brother called Elisha Coles.

FRANCIS HOWELL of Exet. coll. —He was afterwards one of the proctors of the university, moral philosophy reader, and at length principal of Jesus coll. by the favour of Ol. Cromwell, as being an independent to the purpose. After his maj. restoration, he was turn'd out of his principality; so that living mostly in, and near, London, a nonconformist and conventicler, died at Bednal Green in Middlesex on the 8th or 10th of Mar. 1679. Afterwards his body being conveyed to the phanatical burying-place joyning to the New Artillery-yard near London, was there buried in the presence of a great many dissenters.

SAM. LEE of Magd. hall was created also the same day. —He was afterwards made fellow of Wadh. coll. became a writer and publisher of several books, and is now living in New England.

JOHN MILWARD of New inn was created the same day,

Apr. 14. —This person, who was soon after made fellow of C. C. coll. by the visitors, continued always after a nonconformist, and died so. Under his name is published a sermon entit. How we ought to love our Neighbour as our selves; on Matthew 22. 39. Printed in the Supplement to the Morning Exercise at Cripplegate in London, an. 1674. 76. qu.³

JOHN FLOWER of New inn, was also created the same day. —What preferment he had conferr'd upon him by the visitors I know not: sure I am that he was soon after preacher of God's word at Ilmington in Warwickshire, and afterwards at Staunton in the county of Nottingham, where I find him in 1658, and that he was author of (1) The free and honourable Servant, set forth in his Privileges and Prerogatives, &c. Lond. 1652, oct. (2) Several Quarries concerning the Church of Jesus Ch. upon Earth, briefly explained and resolved, Lond. 1658, oct. What other things he hath published I cannot tell, nor any thing else of him, only that he was son of Will. Flower of Cubley in Derbyshire gent. and that he became a commoner of New inn in Act term 1640, aged 16 years.

JENKIN LLOYD of Jesus coll. was also created the same day. —See more among the created doctors of divinity an. 1661.

Apr. 15. RICH. WERGE of Trin. coll. was actually created in the second Pembrokian creation. —This person, who was a shoemaker's son, was born at Witney in Oxfordshire, became servitor of the said coll. in the beginning of the year 1642, aged 17 years, and this year was made fellow thereof by the visitors, being by them taken to be a godly brother for the cause, as indeed he was. Afterwards he became rector of Nelson or Nailson in Leicestershire, which he exchanged with Mr. Joh. Cave of Coleorton for Gateshead or Gateside near New Castle upon Tyne, he being then a conformist. He hath written and published (1) A Sermon preached in St. Mary's Church at Gateshead in the County Pal. of Durham; on Hos. 5. 12. Lond. 1683. qu. (2) Sermon in St. Mar. at Gateshead, &c. at the Funeral of George Johnson Gent. deceased, 29 May 1683; on Heb. 9. Part of the 27th Ver. printed in qu. whereunto is added an Elegy by a friend. This R. Werge died about Michaelmas 1687, and was buried in the church of St. Mary at Gateshead.

Apr. 15. ROB. GORGES of St. Edm. hall. —He was soon after made fellow of St. Joh. coll. by the visitors, became one of the proctors of the univ. in 1653, afterwards secretary to Hen. Cromwell lord lieutenant of Ireland, doct. of the civil law of Dublin, and an enjoyer of several places of honour and trust, as also of an estate in that kingdom. At length he became secretary to Frederick duke of Schomberg general of his majesty's forces in Ireland, &c. He was born at Chedder in Somersetshire.⁴

AMBROSE UPTON of New inn was created the same day. —He was soon after one of those many, that were this, and the next year, made fellows of All-s. coll. by the visitors. In 1651 he became, by the favour of Ol. Cromwell, canon of Ch. Ch. in Oxon, in the place of Dr. John Mills ejected for refusing the engagement; but being discharged of that place about the 13th of Mar. 1659, to make room for the ⁴ [Rob. Gorges was born of antient and gentile family at Chedder in Somersetshire; and was an agent for the duke of York to manage and be steward of his lands in Ireland, which had been lands belonging to regicides as col. Hardr. Waller, and Joh. Jones, and from 800*l.* per an. which his first agents pretended only to get, he increased them to 8000*l.* per ann. said Mills, then restored by the rump parl. and secluded members added to them, he retired to London, and lived for some time there a nonconformist. Afterwards he went into Ireland, got a place there belonging to the customs, and lived in good fashion for several years. Afterwards returning into England, he concluded his last day at Lond. about 7 or 8 years since, and was buried at Ch. Ch. within Newgate in the said city, as I have been informed by one of his persuasion, (a congregational man) who farther told me that he was of the antient family of the Uptons in Devonshire. "But I have been since inform'd that he was living at, or near, Stony Stratford in 1684."

Jan. 6. GEORGE KELLAM secretary to the committee of lords and com. for affairs of foreign concernment, the navy and customs, was then actually created by virtue of the letters of the chanc. of the university, which say that he is a gent. whose parts and good affections to the cause are very considerable, and found no less useful in the way of his employment, &c.

Batchelors of Physic.

Apr. 14. THOM. SYDENHAM of Magd. hall.—He was soon after put in fellow of All-s. coll. by the visitors.

There was but one more created, who was of Ch. Ch. and ran with all mutations, but good for nothing, and not worth the naming, unless it be for his antient and genteel extraction.

Batchelors of Divinity.

Apr. 12. FRANCIS CHEYNELL of Mert. coll. now one of the visitors appointed by parl. to reform the university, was then actually created batch. of div.—This person was to have been batch. of div. in Dec. 1641, but unjustly (as he said) kept back from his degree because he preached against Arminianism, that is, against the king's declaration, for which his grace was then denied. It was then also (12 Apr. 1648,) desired and granted in convocation that he might be declared batch. of div. he having performed his exercise seven years before, and not lose his seniority, but be seated among the batch. of div. of that year, &c. The next day, when the chancellor and visitors, with a great rabble following them, went from college to college to give the new heads possession, they put this Mr. Cheynell into possession of the president's lodgings in St. Joh. coll. See more in Hist. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon, lib. 1. p. 403. a. b. 404. a.

Apr. 12. JOHN WILKINS M. A. of Magd. hall.—The next day the said visitors gave him possession of the warden's lodgings of Wadh. coll.

HENRY LANGLEY M. A. master of Pembr. coll. and one of the six or seven ministers appointed by parliament to preach the scholars into obedience to them, was created the same day.—On the 26th of Aug. 1647 he was made master of the said coll. by order of parliament, and on the 8th of Oct. following he was established therein by the visitors. In 1648 he became canon of Ch. Ch. in the place of Dr. George Morley, by the same power, and had possession given to him thereof in this month of April. See more of him among the created doctors of div. an. 1649.

HENRY CORNISH M. A. of New inn, another of the ministers.—He was soon after put into possession of one of the canonries of Ch. Ch. See in Hist. & Antiq. Univ. Ox. lib. 2. p. 260. a. See also among the created doct. of div. under the year 1649.

The said four batchelors of div. were presented to the vicech. Dr. Reynolds, by Dr. Joh. Wilkinson principal of Magd. hall, the senior theologist of the university and the design'd and nominated president of Magd. coll.

Apr. 14. { HENRY WILKINSON junior of Magd. hall.
EDW. HINTON of Mert. coll.
ROB. ROGERS of New inn.

May 19. THOM. GILBERT of St. Edm. hall.—This person, who hath written and published several things, and is now living in Oxon a nonconformist, aged 80 years or more, is hereafter to be numbred among the writers.

Aug. 4. THOMAS BORRACE a student in divinity for at least twenty years, was then actually created.—This zealous presbyterian was now (1648) a forward preacher up of the cause in the church of St. Martin, and in that of All-saints within the city of Oxon. His usual form of prayer for the king; before his sermons, was, that if God took any pleasure in him, he would do so and so, &c. When he was created batch. of div. he took the oath of allegiance, but with this salvo.—I take this oath so far forth as it doth not contradict the national covenant.

Feb. 9. GEORGE MARSHALL M. of A. of St. Joh. coll. in Camb. a student in divinity for twenty years at least, chaplain to the garrison of Oxon belonging to the parliament, and the designed and nominated warden of New coll. was then also created.

JOHAN. PROGULBICKI born in the province or dukedom of Samogitie in Poland, was created the same day.—He was now, or at least lately, deacon or catechist of the church of Keidun in the said dukedom, and one of the scholars of the illustrious prince Janusius Radzevill the chief fautor and patron of the reformed church in those parts. This Progulbicki had spent before this time four years in several universities in Germany and Holland.

Mar. 8. ISAAC KNIGHT chaplain to Fairfax the generalissimo of the parliament army.⁵

Doctors of Law.

Apr. 14. SAMUEL ANELEY of Qu. coll.—This person, who wrote himself afterwards, and was called, by the name of Annesley, because it is the same with a noble name,⁶ hath written and published several things, and therefore he is to be remembred hereafter among the Oxford writers. He is now, or at least was lately, living a nonconformist divine, either in, or near, London. See in Hist. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon, lib. 1. p. 404. b.

Jan. 5. JOHN MILLS LL. bac. one of the visitors and canon of Ch. Ch.—He had been lately judge advocate of the parliament army, and was this year put into possession of his canonry, but in 1651 being turned out thence for denying the oath called the engagement, Ambr. Upton succeeded, as I have before told you. On the 13th of March 1659 he was restored to his canonry by the rump parliament, with the secluded members added to them, but soon after, upon his majesty's restoration, he was forced to leave it to make room for Dr. Edw. Pococke. See Hist. & Antiq. Univ. Ox. lib. 2. p. 259. a. 261. a. Soon after, by the favour of Dr. Edward Reynolds, he became chancellor of Norwich, and died in, or near, Doctors Commons in London, about the beginning of the year 1676.

⁵ [Calamy says he was a godly man and of good temper, but wanted academical learning. There was a sir Isaac Knight who had a share with Monke in bringing about the restoration. See Miller's Doncaster. HUNTER.]

Doctors of Physic.

Apr. 12. JOH. PALMER alias VAULX batch. of phys. of Qu. coll. now a recruiter of the long parliament, was actually created doct. in the presence of the chancellor.—The next day he was put into possession of the lodgings belonging to the warden of All-s. coll. by the said chancellor and visitors, Dr. Sheldon the warden being then dismiss'd by them and imprison'd. See Hist. & Antiq. Univ. Ox. lib. 1. p. 402. b. 403. a.

Apr. 14. TOBY GARRBAND alias HERKS, batch. of phys. and principal of Gloc. hall, was also actually created.—In 1660 being turn'd out from his principality, he retired to Abingdon in Berks, practised his faculty there, and dying 7 Apr. 1689, was buried in St. Helen's church in that town.

SAMUEL THOMPSON of Magd. hall.—This person, who was son of Will. Thompson of Westbury in Wilts, minister of God's word, wrote Exercitationes and Meditationes on some Texts of holy Scripture, and most in Scripture Phrase and Expression. Lond. 1676, oct. In the title of this book, he writes himself master of arts and doct. of physic, but whether he was master of arts of this university, it appears not in the public register.

Apr. 14. JOHN FRENCH of New inn.—I have spoken of him at large among the writers.

Apr. 15. PETER DORMER of Magd. hall.—He was the fifth son of Fleetwood Dormer of Grange in Bucks, and a neighbour and relation to the earl of Caernarvon.

Feb. 9. HUMPH. WHITMORE of St. Mary's hall was then created by virtue of the letters sent to the convocation from Fairfax the general, now lord Fairfax, which say that he is a physician of note and eminency in those cities and towns where he hath lived.—And that he hath been a member of both universities, &c.

Mar. 8. ABRAHAM HUARD alias LOMPPE sometime of the university of Caen in Normandy, was then created by virtue of the chancellor's letters, which say that his affections to the cause of the parliament have exposed him to sufferings.—That he is a protestant of France, and his quality and sufferings have been made known to me by persons of honour, gentlemen of quality and physicians of this kingdom, as also by one Mr. Joh. Despaigue one of the French ministers of London, &c.

Doctors of Divinity.

Apr. 12. EDWARD REYNOLDS M. A. dean of Ch. Church by order of parliament, and actually put into possession of it by the breaking open the doors belonging to the dean in the morn. of this day, by the chancellor, visitors and a band of the soldiers of the garrison of Oxon, was declared doct. of div. in a convocation held in the afternoon, by order of parliament.—He was not presented doctor according to the usual manner and custom, only stood near the chancellor's chair while the order of the said parliament was reading: And the reason for this unusual way was, because there was no vicechancellor, to whom he should be presented, and if he had been presented to the chancellor, he could not have returned any Latin, for he understood it not.⁷ After the said order was read, and he seated among the doctors, another was produced, by virtue of which he was to be vicechancellor: which being read, he was admitted by sir Nathan. Brent, as I have before told you, in the beginning of this year, and thereupon he took his place.⁸

Apr. 12. ROB. HARRIS batch. of div. of Magd. hall.—The next day he was put into possession of the president's lodgings of Trin. coll. by the breaking open the doors thereof; a little before which time the old loyal president had withdrawn himself to avoid imprisonment. Afterwards he removed his family to the said lodgings, but before they were settled there three quarters of a year, the new president employed a painter to do some work for him, in the week before that of the act, if one had been solemnized, an. 1649. Which painter pulling down some old boards or shelves, found two bags sealed, and a paper in the mouth of each, which signified that there was an 100*l.* in each bag: And tho' they were covered with dust about half an inch thick, yet Dr. Harris and his wife (solely addicted to money and reformation) presently own'd them, and said confidently that they were theirs; but, oportet mendacem esse memorem: For first he had not been settled in his lodgings scarce 3 quarters of a year, and the bags were so old and overcovered with dust, as if they had lain there 40 years. Secondly, his wife said at first that they were left there by a friend, who desir'd her to lay them up, but she refused to take any charge of them, yet he told her he would leave them, and so hid them in that place where the painter found them. Thirdly, on better consideration, Dr. Harris said that he himself laid them there, and that it was money he designed for his daughters: And tho' no man believed him, yet he aver'd it verbo sacerdotis. This money being most probably left by Dr. Ralph Kettle, sometimes president (who died in 1643) was claimed by his executor, who, or Mr. Fanshaw Kettle for him, went to Dr. Harris, and desired of him to see the bags, for he knew his uncle's seal and hand-writing, but the old gentleman who had the money in possession, would neither shew bags, or seal, or writing; which was a manifest argument that they were none of his. For first, if the bags were of his sealing and subscribing, why did he not shew them to convince people, or what need he to have feared to shew his own hand and seal? Secondly, if they were not of his sealing, why did he swear they were his? All these passages do manifestly shew that the money was not his but another man's, as indeed all people did think so, it being then the common discourse of town and country, and could not be convinc'd to the contrary. Doubtless if it had been his, Will. Durham his kinsman, author of the said Dr. Harris his life, would have made mention of, and vindicated the doctor in it, as in other matters of smaller account he hath done. A little before this discovery, was another made by the new president and fellows of Magd. coll. of 1400*l.* in old gold or spurroyals, by the breaking open a chest in their treasury, which, tho' originally deposited there by the founder, pro litibus & placitis defendendis, (so 'tis said in the statutes of that house) etiam pro possessionibus si opus fuerit amplioribus acquirendis, & pro repentinis (quod absit) incendiis & ruinis maneriorum, &c. yet upon pretence of knowing no such statute, they shared the said sum of money among them, Hen. Wilkinson senior, one of the visitors, and then vicepresident of the coll. being the chief man that promoted that affair.⁹ And in the next week following (in July) Dr. Reynolds the vicechancellor and the two proctors, whose hands also did in a manner itch after money, would needs have broken open Bodley's chest, but being dissuaded by Mr. John Rouse the chief library keeper, who had lately a key thereof, and had told and assur'd them that nothing was therein, they forbore. The next day also came one of the new Savilian professors, scarce warm in his place, I mean him, who before had been a witness¹ against archbishop Laud, in order to bring him to his tryal, and consequently to the block, and the same who was successively a preacher up of treason and rebellion in two churches in London in the time of the presbyterian rebellion: I say that he, with Ralph Button can. of Ch. Ch. his guide, and a poor-spirited person, did go to the same Mr. Rouse for the key of sir Hen. Savile's chest, but after they knew he had it not, and that there was no money in it, they did not break it open, tho' they said they would, and came for that purpose. These things I am the more punctual to relate, that the world might know, that the said persons, who call'd themselves the saints of God, minded more and sought after the bread, livelihood, being, and money of other persons, than reformation, which they, according to ordinance and their own consciences, ought to have done.

Apr. 12. { HUMPH. CHAMBERS of Univ. coll.
..... CALDICOT a minister.

Of the first is large mention made among the writers under the year 1662. The other, whose Christian name I cannot yet recover, was an obscure man, a covenanter, and one that was lately possest of a rich benefice belonging to a loyal person ejected.

[68] EDWARD CORBET master of arts of Mert. coll. was created the same day.—He was born at Pontsbury in Shropshire, of the ancient family of the Corbets in that county, was admitted probationer fellow of the said coll. 1624, took the degrees in arts, became one of the proctors of the university, an. 1638, married Margaret the daughter of sir Nathan. Brent, turn'd with the times, being always puritanically affected, made one of the assembly of divines, and a preacher before the long parliament. "Whereas he had been a suitor "to archbp. Laud for the rectory of Chartham in Kent, upon "the death of Dr. Is. Bargrave, but by him refus'd, because "his maj. had desired him to give it to Mr. Reading; an "ordinance of parl. came out 17 May 1643, to make the "said Mr. Corbet rector of Chartham. See History of the "Troubles and Tryal of Archbp. Laud, cap. 19. p. 207. He "was also witness against archbp. Laud at his tryal, be- "came" one of the preachers in Oxon 1646, to preach the loyal scholars into obedience to the parliament, (but quitted that employment soon after, whereby that duty lay on the shoulders of six only) one of the visitors of the university, (yet seldom or never sat among them) orator and canon of Ch. Ch. in the room of Dr. Hen. Hammond, (which two places he soon after threw up, as being a person of conscience and honesty) and at length rector of Great Haseley in Oxfordshire, in the place as 'tis said, of Dr. Tho. Some, where he continued to the time of his death. He hath written and published God's Providence, Sermon before the House of Commons at their Fast, 28 Dec. 1642, on 1 Cor. 1. 27. Lond. 1647. qu. There goes under the name of Edw. Corbet a little book called The Worldling's Looking-glass: or the Danger of losing his Soul for Gain. Printed 1630. oct. but I cannot tell whether our Edw. life at London on the 5th of January 1657, aged 55 years or thereabouts, and was buried on the 14th day of the same month, near the body of his late beloved wife, in the chancel of Great Haseley before-mention'd: Over whose grave the said Dr. Corbet had before laid a large marble stone.

Apr. 14. { CHRISTOP. ROGERS M. A. principal of New inn,
..... HARDING rector of Brinkworth in Wilts.

The first of these two was about the same time put into actual possession of a canonry of Ch. Ch. by the visitors, (in the place of Dr. Rich. Gardiner ejected) according to an order of parl. bearing date in the beginning of Mar. 1647. This person, when he usually preached at St. Mary's this year, before his majesty was beheaded, he would in his long prayer before sermon desire that God would open the king's eyes to lay to heart all the blood that he had spilt, &c. that he would prosper the parliament and their blessed proceedings, &c. He was a person of most reverend aspect, yet of no parts, only had a plain way of preaching to please women and ignorant people. He was an easy man, and apt to be guided by the persuasions of others, and therefore by Chyrenell and Wilkinson seniors, two violent and impetuous presbyterians, he was put into the roll of visitors, meerly to make a nose of wax of him. The other, Harding was a most violent presbyterian, an indefatigable preacher against the king and his cause, and because he would not conform after his majesty's restoration, tho' courted to it, he was turned out of his rectory.

This year the generality of the heads of houses, professors and lecturers, doctors and batch. of divinity, masters and batchelors of arts, undergraduates, beadles, college-servants; and sometimes bedmakers, and scrapers of trenchers, to the number of several hundreds, were thrown out of their respective places, and soon after banished the university by the visitors, for not submitting to their power from parliament and acknowledging their covenant, &c.

Chancellor.

PHILIP EARL OF PEMB. AND MONTGOMERY, who dying at the Cock-pit near Whitehall, on the 23d of January this year, was buried in the cathedral church at Salisbury among the graves of those of his family on the 8th of Febr. following: From which time till Jan. ensuing, the chancellor's place lay void. Soon after the said earl's death came out against him several satyrical prints, among which were, (1). His last Will and Testament, printed in one sheet in fol. (2) Pembroke's Pass from Oxford to his Grave. 'Tis a poem printed on one side of a sheet of paper, and hath this beginning, 'Hence mountebank of honour, hence away,' &c. At the end is his epitaph. (3) The Life and Death of Philip Herbert, the late infamous Knight of Berkshire, once Earl of Pembroke and Montgom. &c. having by a degenerate Baseness betrayed his Nobility, and entered himself a Commoner amongst the very Scum of the People. Printed in one sheet in qu. by way of interlude, with poetry.

Vice-chancellor.

EDW. REYNOLDS D. D. dean of Ch. Ch. was re-admitted Aug. 30, having been nominated a little before by the chancellor.

Proctors.

Apr. 4. { JOHN MAUDIT of Exet. coll.
HIEROME ZANCHY of All-s. coll.

The last was elected contrary to the Caroline cycle, because it did appoint Queen's coll. to join with the said coll. of Exeter; but so it was that that coll. being not in a capacity of yielding a person zealous and suitable to the times, the members of All-s. therefore did chuse, by recommendations of the committee and visitors, one of their number lately made fellow thereof, but whether incorporated M. of A. as he stood in another university, it appears not in the public register, and therefore what I have to say of him shall be set down here. This Hierome Zanchy, who was born of a genteel family, was bred in Cambridge, but being more given to manly exercises than logic and philosophy, he was observed by his contemporaries to be a boisterous fellow at cudgelling and foot-ball-playing, and indeed more fit in all respects to be a rude soldier than a scholar or man of polite parts. In the beginning of the rebellion, he threw off his gown, and took up arms for the parliament, and soon after became a captain, a presbyterian, an independent, a preacher, and I know not what. When the war was ceased, and the king's cause declined, he obtained a fellowship of All-s. coll. from the committee and visitors, and was the first, or senior, of those many, that were by them put into the said coll. in the places of loyalists ejected by them an. 1648, and 49. But before he had served the least part of his proctorship (about a month only) he returned to his military employment, went in the quality of a commander into Ireland to fight against those that were then called rebels; and doing good service, in short time was made a colonel of a regiment of horse, and as a colonel he had 474*l.* 10*s.* per an. for his salary, besides other advantages. In 1651 and 52, I find him commander in chief of the parliament forces in the county of Tipperary, where, as those of his party said, he did excellent service for the cause, being then a thorough-pac'd anabaptist; and in 1654, he, with Joh. Reynolds commissary general, were elected knights for the counties of Tipperary and Waterford to serve in the parliament that assembled at Dublin² that year. In 1658, being then a knight by the favour of Hen. Cromwell; he was, by the endeavours of col. Charles Fleetwood a pitiful anabaptist and son-in-law to Ol. Cromwell, chosen Burgess for Woodstock in Oxfordshire to serve in Richard's parliament that began at Westminster 27 Jan. that year; at which time living much, as he had done some time before, in the house of the said Fleetwood in Westminster, did often hold forth in conventicles among the anabaptists. It was observed then that he was a dull man, as indeed he was ab origine, for by his rebaptization when he went into Ireland, and his herding among the anabaptists, he did improve it to the purpose, otherwise had he continued among the presbyterians or independents, who were accounted a more ingenious sort of people, he might have improved himself perhaps in something of ingenuity. Under this person's name was published, (1) A Sermon on 1 John. 2. 18. &c. printed in oct. but when I know not, for I have not yet seen it. (2) Speech in Parliament in Dublin, printed in sir Will. Petty's book entit. Reflections upon some Persons and Things in Ireland, &c. p. 70, 71. &c. It is a most rude and nonsensical thing, and only fit to be read to make people laugh at the absurdity of the person. See more in sir Will. Petty among the writers, an. 1687, where you'll find this Zanchy to concern himself much, meerly out of envy, against that curious and polite gentleman. What other things he hath extant I cannot tell, nor any thing else of him, only that he died in Ireland about the latter end of king Charles II. as I have been informed by those that knew him.

Batchelors of Arts.

June 5. { JOH. ROTHERAM of Linc. coll.
CHARLES PEROT of Oriel coll.

Of the first you may see more among the masters 1652, and of the other among the mast. in 1653.

June 11. HENRY HURST of Magd. hall.—He was soon after made prob. fellow of Mert. coll. by the visitors.

27. { CHARLES POTTER of Ch. Ch.
JOH. TICKELL of New inn.

The last, who was afterwards made student of Ch. Ch. by the visitors, is said in the public³ register of convocation to be vir provectoris ætatis & firmatæ eruditionis. This person, who is now, or at least was lately, living, did afterwards publish several things, and therefore he is to be numbred hereafter among the writers of this university.

July 6. WALTER POPE of Wadh. coll.—See among the created doct. of phys. 1661.

Nov. 6. { EDW. BAGSHAW } of Ch. Ch.
THO. COLE

Of the last of these two you may see more among the masters, an. 1651.

Dec. 17. THEOPHILUS GALE of Magd. coll.—He is said in the pub. reg.⁴ of convoe. to be vir provectoris ætatis & uberioris spei juvenis.

Jun. 18. JOH. HOW of Brasen. coll.—He was soon after made fellow of that of Magd. by the visitors, and is now living a nonconformist minister in London, and a preacher in conventicles. He hath written and published several things, and therefore he is to be remembred hereafter among the writers of this university.

Feb. 19. THOMAS DANSON chaplain of C. C. coll.—He was soon after made fellow of that of Magdalen, and is now a nonconformist minister living at Abingdon in Berks, and a preacher in conventicles there. He hath written and published several books, and therefore he is hereafter to be remembred.

Feb. 23. { WILL. CARPENDER } of Ch. Ch.
LEWIS ATTERBURY WILL. CROMPTON

[70]

Of the first of these three you may see more among the masters, an. 1652, and of the second among the doct. that were licensed to proceed, an. 1660. The last (W. Crompton) is now a nonconformist divine, living and holding forth at Columpton in Devonshire, and having published several things, he is hereafter to be remembred among the writers.

THOMAS JONES of Univ. college, was admitted the same day, (Feb. 23.)

Admitted 88, or thereabouts.

Batchelor of Law.

I find but one to be admitted this year, named JOH. GUNTER, sometimes of Queen's coll. in Cambridge, now of that of St. John's in Oxon. He was soon after made fellow of New coll. by the committee of parl. appointed for the reformation of the university and visitors.

Masters of Arts.

April 11. EDW. HICKS of Oriell coll.—Whether he had taken the degree of batch. of arts in this univ. it appears not. See more of him among the created doctors of div. 1660.

28. JOH. BILLINGSLEY of C. C. coll.—This person, who was lately made fellow of the said coll. by the visitors, was afterwards a writer and publisher of several books, and is now, or at least was lately, living a conformist in Derbyshire; and therefore he is to be remembered hereafter among the writers.

June 25. WILL. FINMORE of Ch. Ch.—He was installed archdeacon of Chester on the 6th of March 1666, having been a little more than half a year before made prebendary of the cathedral church there. He died in the beginning of 1686, and was succeeded in his archdeaconry by John Allen M. A. fellow of Trin. coll. in Cambridge, and chaplain to Dr. Pearson B. of Chester, and author of one or more sermons that are extant.

July 14. ROB. WOOD of Mert. coll.—He was afterwards made fellow of that of Linc. by the visitors.

21. SAMUEL LADYMAN of C. C. coll.—He was the son of John Ladyman of Dinton in Bucks, became a poor scholar or servitor of the said coll. in Lent term 1642, aged 17 years, and in 1648 submitting to the authority of the visitors, he was by them made that year fellow thereof, in a Lincolnshire place. Soon after he became a frequent preacher in these parts, and being a noted person among the presbyterians he received a call, and forthwith went into Ireland, and was benefic'd there. He hath published The dangerous Rule, Sermon preached at Clonmel in the Province of Munster in Ireland before the Judges; on 2 Sam. 19. 29. Lond. 1658. in tw. and perhaps other things, which is all I know of him.

Nov. 24. HENRY CHAPMAN of Magd. hall.—This batchelor, who was well advanc'd in years, was admitted mast. by order of the presb. delegates of the university, who were well satisfied with the testimonial letters of John Wallis the mathematic professor, written in his behalf to them, wherein he doth abundantly commend the said Chapman's ingenuity, industry and knowledge in various tongues.

Nov. 27. EDM. DICKENSON } of Mert. coll.

29. EDW. WOOD or a WOOD }

Dec. 13. THOM. CARELES of Ball. coll.—He was the son of Philip Careles of Lothbury near the Royal Exchange in London, became a student of the said coll. in the beginning of the year 1640, aged 15 years, and was afterwards scholar and fellow, and in the last year did submit, as I conceive, to the power of the visitors. In 1651, being then esteemed an ingenious man, as indeed he was, he was made choice of to be terræ filius with Will. Levinz of St. John's coll. to speech it in the act celebrated that year, being the first act that was kept after the presbyterians had taken possession of the university, and soon after, having obtained the name of a florid preacher among the remnant of the royalists in the university by his preaching often in St. Aldate's church, he was preferr'd to be rector of Barnsley, and afterwards to be vicar of Cirencester, in Gloucestershire. He hath published A Sermon preached at the Cath. Ch. in Gloucester on St. George's Day, on which Day his Majesty was solemnly crown'd; on Psal. 21. 3. Lond. 1661. qu. What other things he hath published I know not, nor any thing else of him, only that he dying 7 Octob. 1675, was buried in his church at Cirencester.

Mar. 11. EDM. HALL of Pembr. coll.

14. HENRY HICKMAN of Magd. coll.

The last was originally of Cambridge, whence going to Oxon, when batchelor of arts, he entred himself into Magd. hall, and in 1648 was made fellow of Magd. coll. by the visitors. He was afterwards a noted writer, a person of great repute among those of the presbyterian persuasion, and is now living in Holland, and therefore to be remembered hereafter among Oxford writers.

Admitted 39, or thereabouts.

Batchelor of Physic.

Not one was admitted, only three created, and one incorporated.

The famous mountebank of his time called JOH. PUNTÆUS, an Italian, and a famous physician, who, for many years before this, had exercised his art in several places within this kingdom, had license given to him to practise chirurgery throughout all England, Nov. 16. After his maj. restoration he lived at Salisbury, and died rich and full of years.

Not one batch. of div. or doct. of law was admitted, only created and incorporated, as I shall tell you by and by.

Doctors of Physic.

June 8. FRANCIS BARKSDALE of Magd. coll.—This person, who was lately made fellow of that coll. by the visitors, was then admitted by the favour of Fairfax the gen. and Cromwell the lieut. gen. lately at Oxon, but with this condition that he perform all exercise for the said degree, within a year after his admission.

It was also their pleasure that WILL. HILL sometimes of Mert. coll. might accumulate the degrees of batch. and doct. of physic, but whether he did so, it appears not.

July 14. DANIEL MALDEN M. of A. of Qu. coll. in Cambr. who had studied physic 7 years at least, and had read his solemn lectures in the school of medicine, was then admitted by virtue of the letters of the chancellor of this university, which say that he was recommended to him by the lord general—that he had improved his studies by travelling abroad—that he is affected to the cause, and that he hath engaged himself and shed blood for the parliament, &c.

Oct. 30. GIDEON CHABRÆUS^b a student in phys. (commended to the chief members of the university with great elogies) who had learnedly and laudably performed his exercise for the degree of doct. of physic, was then admitted in the house of convocation—I find one Dr. Shawbry a physician of Cambridge to have been buried in the church of St. Peter in the East in Oxon, 22 Nov. 1643, but what relation there was between him and the former I cannot tell, because their names differ.

Doctors of Divinity.

the reformation of the university,⁶ was then presented and admitted without scios or deponents for his abilities, because there wanted doct. of div. to do that office.—He resigned his principality into the hands of Oliver the protector, an. 1657, lived many years after obscurely (yet rich) in Oxon, and dying in the parish of St. Peter in the East 3 May 1679, was buried in the yard belonging to that church, close to the wall, under the upper window of the body of the ch. He hath written in Lat. An Elegy on George Duke of Albe-marle, Lond. 1670. qu. which is all, as I conceive, that he hath published.

Incorporations.

The incorporations this year were mostly of Cambridge men, who came to Oxford for preferment from the committee and visitors.

Batchelors of Arts.

Apr. 24. JOH. BILLINGSLEY, lately of St. John's coll. in Cambr. and batch. of arts of one year's standing there.—On the 28th of the said month of Apr. he was admitted M. of A. as I have before told you.

May 23. ANT. RADCLIFF batch. of arts of Magd. coll. in Cambr.—He was lately made student of Ch. Ch. by the visitors. See among the doct. of div. under the year 1681.

26. JAM. BEDFORD B. of A. of two years standing of Eman. coll. in Cambr.—Of this person, who was lately made one of the junior fellows of Qu. coll. in this univ. by the visitors, you may see more among the batch. of div. under the year 1657.

Oct. 16. JOH. JOHNSON of two years standing batch. of Eman. coll.—He was lately made fellow of St. John's coll. in this univ. by the visitors, and in the year following of New coll. See more among the masters under the year 1650.

Besides these four were 7 more incorporated, that were about this time prefer'd to fellowships in this university by the committee and visitors.

Masters of Arts.

May 8. THO. LYX or LEIGH M. A. of Cambr.—He was about this time chapl. of Wadh. coll.

Oct. 10. SAMUEL CRADOCK M. A. fellow of Eman. coll.⁷—This person, who did not go to Oxon for preferment, as I conceive, because I find him not fellow of any house there, was afterwards batch. of div. and rector of North Cadbury in Somersetshire by the gift of the master and society of his coll. about 1656. Among several things that he hath written and published are these (1) The Harmony of the four Evangelists, and their Text methodized according to the Order and Series of Times, wherein the entire History of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, is methodically set forth. Lond.

Oct. 23. { JOH. WALLIS geometry } prof. of the univ. of { SETH WARD astronomy } Oxon.

The first of these two was originally of Eman. coll. in Cambridge, and after² fellow of that of Qu. in the same university, then minister of St. Martin's church in Ironmonger-lane, and after³ of that of Gabriel Fen-church, in London, in the time of the presbyterian rebellion, from both which churches had certain loyalists been ejected; and having procured an order from the committee for the reformation of the university of Oxon, dated 14 June 1649, whereby he was established geom. profess. in the place of the most learned and loyal Dr. Peter Turner a little before ejected, (who afterwards died obscurely) did go to Oxon, and there was admitted to his place on the same day he was incorporated M. of A. As for the other, Ward, who was admitted also the same day to his professorship, after incorporation, I have made mention at large among the writers.

Jan. 18. JOSHUA SPRIGGE M. A. of Edinburgh.—He was lately one of those many that was put in fellow of All-s. coll. by the visitors.

Besides these five were six or more of Cambridge incorporated, who all (one excepted) had gotten places in colleges.

Batchelors of Physic.

Only one was incorporated, named JOH. ARNOLD batch. of physic of Leyden, May 24.—This person, who was originally an apothecary's boy, and had with great shift got to be batch. of physic at Leyden, was put in fellow of Mert. coll. by the visitors in Feb. following, an. 1649.

JOH. WORTHINGTON B. D. of Eman. coll. in the same university, was incorporated the same day.—He was afterwards master of Jesus coll. there, in the times of usurpation, being then esteemed by all a presbyterian, doctor of divinity, and rector⁴ of St. Bennet Fink in London, which he kept till the church was burn'd down in the grand conflagration which hapned in Lond. in the beginning of Sept. 1666. He hath written (1) A Form of sound Words: or a Scripture Catechism, shewing what a Christian is to believe and practise in Order to Salvation. Lond. 1673, 74. &c. oct. Doctors of Physic.

July 14. LEWIS DU MOULIN doct. of physic of the university of Leyden (incorporated in the same degree at Cambridge, 10 Oct. 1634,⁶) was incorporated in the same degree at Oxon.—This person, who was a French man born, and the son of the famous Peter du Moulin a French protestant, was lately establish'd Camden's professor of history in this university by the committee of parliament for the reformation thereof. After the restoration of his majesty, he was turned out of his professorship by his majesty's commissioners, for the regulating of the university: whereupon retiring to the city of Westminster, lived there a most violent nonconformist. The books that he hath written are these (1) Epistola ad Renatum Veridacum (i. e. Creations.

The creations this year were made in all faculties, especially in that creation called by some the Fairfaxian creation, that is, that creation which was made when the lord Fairfax generalissimo of the parl. army and his lieut. gen. Cromwell were created doctors of law, and when others afterwards were created by the said general's nomination when he was entertained by the then members of the university.

Batchelors of Arts.

May 19. ROBERT SCROPE, lately made fellow of Linc. coll. by the visitors, was then actually created batch. of arts, being done in the same convocation that Fairfax and Cromwell were created doctors of the civil law, as I shall tell you by and by.—He was a younger son of Adrian Scrope of Wormesley in Oxfordshire esq; sometimes a gent. com. of Hart hall, and afterwards a noted puritan, which made him take up arms for the blessed cause in the beginning of the presbyterian rebellion; in which being first a captain was at length a colonel of a regiment of horse. When K. Ch. I. of ever blessed memory was tried for his life by a pack of hell-hounds, this person “Adrian Scrope” sate and was one of his judges in that dismal tragedy, and afterwards signed the bloody warrant for severing his head from his body. Just after his majesty's restoration sir Rich. Browne (soon after elected lord mayor of Lond.) did accidentally meet him in the speaker's chamber, (to whom, I suppose, he came to surrender himself upon his maj. proclamation) and when the said sir R. Browne was acquainted who he was, he drew up, and said to him, What a sad case have we brought this kingdom unto? Whereupon Scrope answer'd Why? Saith Browne then, Do you not see how it is ruined, now the king is murdered? &c. To which Scrope made answer, I will not make you my confessor, or words to the same effect. All which being witnessed against him at his tryal, as words to justify what he had done, Browne being then lord mayor elect, were the chief cause of his execution, otherwise, as 'twas then thought, he would only have suffered perpetual imprisonment and the loss of his estate, as many others of the same gang did. He suffer'd by hanging, drawing and quartering, with Tho. Scot, Greg. Clement and Joh. Jones, at Charing Cross on the 17th of Oct. 1660: whereupon his quarters were not hanged up as others were, but given to his relations to be buried. His death was then much pitied by many, because he was a comely person, beg'd the prayers of all good people, and that he was of a noble and antient family, being descended from the Scropes barons of Bolton. After his death were printed under his name his Speech and Prayer spoken at the Gallows.

May 31. AUBREY THOMPSON of Qu. coll.—He was then created by the favour of Fairfax and Cromwell lately in Oxon.

Jul. 14. FRANC. BLACKWALL an assistant to, or an officer about, a captain in the parl. army.—He is stiled in the common register 'optimæ indolis & eruditionis adolescens.' In 1657 I find one capt. Blackwall to be treasurer of the army; whether the same I cannot tell.

Mar. 14. EDW. REYNOLDS lately of Mert. now of Magd. coll.—He was about this time made fellow of Magd. coll. by the visitors. See among the doct. of div. an. 1676.

20. BROOK BRIDGES of Gloc. hall, lately a student of Trin. coll. in Camb.—He was son of col. John Bridges governor of Warwick, and was about this time made fellow of New coll. by the visitors.

June 5. UNTON CROKE a captain in the parl. army was then created by virtue of a dispensation from the delegates of the university.—This person, who was son of Unton Croke of Merston near Oxon, counsellor at law (descended from the antient family of the Crokes of Chilton in Bucks,) had been made a captain or at least a lieutenant for his venturous service done in seizing on and carrying away with his party (to Abingdon garrison where he was a soldier) many horses belonging to the royalists of Oxford garrison, while they were grazing in the meadows joyning on the east side to Magd. coll. He was afterwards a major, and in 1658 made high sheriff of Oxfordshire by Richard and his council, and soon after a colonel of a regiment of horse. This is the gentleman, who became infamous to the royalists and all true generous hearts for his falsness in denying and breaking the articles which he had made with the truly loyal col. Joh. Penruddock when he and his party were taken by him and his at South Molton in Devonshire, 15 March 1654, (after they had retreated from Salisbury where they first rose) at which time they endeavour'd, but in vain, to redeem the kingdom from slavery and tyranny. For this service done by Croke, his father was called to the degree of serjeant at law by Oliver, by a writ bearing date 21 of June following, and he himself, if I mistake not, to that of major of a reg. of horse. After his majesty's restoration, when he and his reg. were disbanded, he was shun'd and hated by gentlemen and royalists where he abode, whether in Devonshire, (from whence he married his wife) at Cheddington in Bucks, in Oxford, or at the Wick in the parish of Hedington near Oxon, or elsewhere. "On Dec. 31. 1661, one Unton Croke was "seiz'd on and committed to the Gate-House as being "suspected to be in a plot."—He is now, or at least was lately, living in a gouty condition, at or near London. He has a younger brother named Charles Croke sometimes com. of Ch. Ch. who, after he had taken many rambles, been a soldier and seen the vanities of the world, published Youth's Unconstancy, &c. Lond. 1667, oct.

Dec. 18. ROB. KING lately made fellow of All-s. coll. by the visitors, was created by virtue of an order from the delegates of the university.—This person, who was a younger son of sir Rob. King knt. commissary of the musters in Ireland in the time of the lord lieutenant Hen. Cromwell, was after his majesty's restoration made a baronet, and elected several times a parl. man in that kingdom. He had an elder brother called Henry who was also made fellow of All-s. coll. by the visitors, and another elder than he named John, who was by king Charles II. made baron of Kingston in the same kingdom.

Jan. 18. PETER PETT of All-s. coll. was admitted by virtue of an order from the said delegates.

Besides the three before-mention'd, ROWL. HUNT who had been lately made fellow of the said coll. was created also Vol. IV.

this year, which is all I know of him, only that he was a Salopian born.

Masters of Arts.

Those that were created this year masters of arts, were mostly officers that attended Fairfax the general and Cromwell his lieutenant to Oxon, when they were invited thither by the then members of the university, to see what a godly reformation the committee and visitors had made therein.

May 19. SIR HARDRESS WALLER knt. was the first that was presented by Zanchy the junior proctor: which being done, he was conducted up to Cromwell (just before presented to the degrees of Dr. of the civil law) sitting on the left hand of him that then held the chancellor's chair (Dr. Chr. Rogers deput. vice-chanc.) and with due ceremony was seated on his left side.—This person was son and heir of George Waller of Groombridge in Kent esq; by Mary his wife daugh. of Rich. Hardress esq; relict of sir Will. Ashenden knt. (which George was elder brother to sir Thom. Waller, father of sir Will. Waller, lately one of the parl. generals, mention'd among the writers, an. 1668,) and marrying with the daugh. and co-heir of sir Joh. Dowdall or Dovedall of Limerick in Ireland knt. enjoyed fair inheritances by her, and spent most of his time, there. In the beginning of the grand rebellion he was a royalist in opinion, but with the more gainfuller times he turn'd presbyterian, and at length a strong independent, and thereupon he was made a committee-man, and afterwards a colonel of horse. He had been lately one of the judges of king Charles I. and sate when sentence past upon him for his decollation; for which service he was afterwards made major gen. of the army in Ireland: where continuing till the revolution of affairs brought monarchy again into England, he did, upon the issuing out of the king's proclamation, surrender himself to mercy; whereupon being brought to his tryal, for having a hand in the murther of the said prince, he shewed very great reluctancy for what he had done, and was thereupon conveyed from his prison in the Tower to the isle of Wight, there to continue during his life, an. 1660, aged 56 years. Whether he was afterwards removed thence I cannot tell, nor where he died.

May 19. COLONEL THO. HARRISON was presented next by Zanchy, and conducted by him on the other side.—This person, who was the son of a butcher or grazier of Newcastle under line in Staffordshire, was, after he had been educated in some grammar learning, placed with one Hulke or Hulker an attorney, of Cliffords inn, and when out of his time, became a kind of pettifogger as 'tis said; but finding little profit thence, he betook himself, from the pen, to the sword in the parliament army when they first raised a rebellion against their king; and having a tongue well hung, he did, by his enthusiastical preaching and great pretence to piety, so far insinuate himself with the deluded army, that he pass'd from one command to another till he attained to be a major and a great confidant of Oliver Cromwell, and so consequently his close friend in breaking the presbyterian faction in both houses, in depriving them of their rights, and at length in bringing him to the block. These particulars it doth appear. First, he was the person appointed by Oliver, or at least the adjutators of the army, to go to Hurst castle where the king was prisoner, to the end that he should inform the governour thereof that he deliver his majesty up to a party of horse that should be ready to receive him, in order to his conveyance to Windsor castle, and so to Westminster to be tried. This was by Harrison done about the 15th of

Dec. 1648, for on the 21st following he was conveyed thence towards Windsor. See more in Jam. Harrington among the writers, an. 1677. Secondly, that after his majesty had left Hurst castle and was conveyed from Milford, three miles distant thence, by a party of the rebels horse to Winchester and thence to Alton and so to Alresford, this major Harrison appeared in the head of another party between that place and Farnham to the end that he might bring up the rear. His party was drawn up in good order, by which his majesty was to pass, and the major in the head of them gallantly mounted and armed, with a velvet montier on his head, and a new buff-coat on his back, with a crimson silk scarf about his waist richly fringed. The king as he passed by on horseback with an easy pace, as delighted to see men well hors'd and arm'd, the major gave the king a bow with his head, Alla soldad, which his majesty requited. This was the first time that the king saw the major; at which time Tho. Herbert groom of the bedchamber (from whom I had this story) riding a little behind the king, his majesty call'd him to come near and ask'd him who that captain was, and being by him told that it was major Harrison, the king viewed him more narrowly and fix'd his eyes so steadily upon him, as made the major abashed and fall back to his party, sooner than probably he intended. The king said he looked like a soldier and that his aspect was good, and found him not such a one as was represented; and that, having judgment in faces, if he had observed him so well before, he should not have harbour'd that ill opinion of him, for oft times the spirit and disposition may be discerned in the countenance. That night the king got to Farnham, where he was lodged in a private gentleman's house in the town, (the castle there being then a garrison for the parliament) and a little before supper his majesty standing by the fire in a large wainscoted parlour, and in discourse with the mistress of the house, the king (notwithstanding the room was pretty full of army officers and country people that crowded in to have a sight of him) did at length see the major at the farther end of the parlour talking with another officer: whereupon beckoning to him with his hand to come nearer, he did so accordingly with due reverence: and his majesty taking him by the arm, drew him aside towards the window, where for half an hour or more they did discourse together. Among other things the king minded him of the information that he had received concerning the murder that he intended on him in the isle of Wight; which, if true, rendred him an enemy in the worst sense to his person. The major, in his vindication, assured his majesty that what was reported of him was not true, yet he might report that the law was equally obliging to great and small, and that justice had no respect to persons, or words to that purpose; which his majesty finding affectedly spoken and to no good end, he left off farther communication with him, and went to supper, being all the time very pleasant, which was no small rejoicing to many there, to see him so cheerful in that company and in such a dolorous condition. Thirdly, that when his majesty went thence to Bagshot and there dined in the lord Newburgh's house, the said major ordered centries to be set at every door where he was; and after dinner when he conveyed him to Windsor he appointed several of his officers to ride close to the king, least he should make¹ an escape from them. Fourthly, that after the king had continued at Windsor for some days keeping his last, but very sad, Christmas, he conveyed him in a coach thence to St. James's, in order to his tryal; at which time Harrison was with him in the said coach, with his² head covered, talked with little or no reverence to him: and when the king proposed to him—What do they intend to do with me? whether to murder me or not? the major made answer³—that there was no intention to kill him, we have no such thoughts, yet the lord hath reserved you for a public example of justice, &c. Fifthly, That when the king was to be brought to his tryal, there was a committee sate in the exchequer chamber, at which the major being present, he used these⁴ expressions before them, gentlemen, it will be good for us to blacken him, (meaning his majesty) what we can, pray let us blacken him, or words to that purpose. Sixthly, that he was one of the hellish crew that sate publicly in judgment on his majesty, when he was by them tried for his life in Westminster hall, was there when sentence passed for his decollation, and stood up, as the rest did, as consenting thereunto, and did afterwards set his hand to the bloody warrant for his execution, &c. For these his services he was soon after made a colonel, and at length a major general, and on the 24th of Nov. 1652 he was one of those that were elected to be members of the council of state. While he was major gen. and in favour with Oliver, the principality of Wales was appointed to be under his command, where the then laws appointed were by him put in full force. No orthodox minister could there be suffered, but whom he pleased to allow; and with the assistance of his chaplain Vav. Powell (a giddy-headed person and second brother to Hugh Peters) he endeavoured the modelling of that country, so as that none but their own proselytes should teach and instruct the people, &c. At length he perceiving full well that Cromwell gaped after the government by a single person, he with great scorn and indignation left him, and became the ring-leader of all the schismatics, especially of that dangerous party called the fifth-monarchy men, and great with Joh. Lilbourne as mad as he. Whereupon Cromwell to be quit with him, committed him to safe custody, and put him out of all commission. Afterwards he was set at liberty, but committed again and again upon every suspicious account, and in Feb. 1657 he was re-baptized purposely to gain the anabaptists to his party. At length engaging himself with maj. gen. John Lambert newly escaped from his prison in the Tower, to raise forces against the king, who was then voiced in most parts of the nation to be returning from exile to take possession of his kingdom, he was snapt in the very point of time, wherein he intended to have headed a party, and was conveyed prisoner to the Tower of London for the same. After his majesty's restoration a greater matter being laid to his charge, viz. of having a very deep and signal hand in the murder of his prince, his imprisonment was made more close. At length being conveyed thence to Newgate, and so to Hicks's hall, and afterwards to the Sessions-house in the Old Bayly, was, after a long tryal, condemned to dye for the same 11 Oct. 1660, and thereupon was sent to the said prison of Newgate. On the 13th of the same month, he was conveyed thence on a hurdle, guarded by a troop of horse and some of the trained bands to the rail'd place where Charing Cross stood; within which railles a gibbet was set up on purpose, whereon he was hanged, with his face towards the banquetting house at Whitehall, where the pretious and innocent blood of king Charles I. was spilt by the said Harrison and the rest of the bloody regicides. When he was half hang'd, he was cut down, his bowels burned, his head severed from his body, and his quarters carried back on the same hurdle to Newgate, to be dispos'd at his majesty's pleasure.⁵ On the 16th of the same month his head was set on Westminster-hall, and his quarters exposed to public view on some of the gates of the city of London. Soon after was published under his name, Some occasional Speeches and memorable Passages after his Coming to Newgate; with his Speech upon the Ladder. Printed at London in qu. May 19. COLONEL RICHARD INGOLDSBIE now governour of the garrison of Oxon, was also then presented master by proctor Zanehy, and by him conducted to the other officers just before presented, sitting in the doctor's seats.—This person, who was the second son of sir Rich. Ingoldesbie of Lethenborough in Buckinghamshire knt. by Elizabeth his wife, daughter of sir Oliver Cromwell of Hinchbrook in Huntingdonshire, was born of a good family at Lethenborough, educated in the free school at Thame. (as the rest of his brethren were) founded by Joh. lord Williams, and being a stout young man⁶ when the civil war began, he betook himself, by the persuasions of his puritanical parents, to the parliament cause, was a captain in col. John Hambden's regiment, when he first of all appeared in arms against his majesty, and in short time after he was made, by the endeavours of his kinsman Oliver Cromwell (afterwards protector) a colonel of horse, and at length by his allurements one of the judges of the said king in that bloody court called the high court of justice; where he was present and stood up as consenting when sentence passed for his decollation, and afterwards set his hand to the warrant for his execution.⁷

⁵ [Harrison was the first who suffered. He was a fierce and bloody enthusiast, and it was believed, that while the army was in doubt, whether it was fitter to kill the king privately, or to bring him to an open trial, that he offered, if a private way was settled on, he would be the man who should do it: so he was begun with. He was a man of great heat and resolution, fix'd in his principles, and so persuaded of them, that he had never look'd after any interests of his own, but had opposed Cromwell when he set up for himself. He went thro' all the indignities and severities of his execution, in which the letter of the law, in cases of treason, was punctually observed, with a calmness, or rather a cheerfulness, that astonished the spectators. He spoke very positively, that what they had done was the cause and work of God, which he was confident God would own and raise up again, how much soever it suffered at that time. MACRO.]

⁷ [Tis true Ingoldshy was named amongst those who were appointed to be judges of the king, and it is as true that he was never once present with them, always abhorring the action in his heart, and having no other passion in any part of the quarrel, but his personal kindness to Cromwell. The next day after the sentence, he had an occasion to speak with an officer, who, as he was told, was in the painted chamber; where, when he came thither, he saw Cromwell, and the rest of those who had sat upon the king, and were then, as he found afterwards, assembled to sign the warrant for the king's death. As soon as Cromwell's eyes were upon him, he ran to him, and taking him by the hand, drew him by force to the table, and said, tho' he had escaped him all the while before, he should now sign that paper, as well as they: which he, seeing what it was, refused with great passion, saying he knew nothing of the business; and offer'd to go away. But Cromwell and others held him by violence, and Cromwell, with a loud laughter, taking his hand in his, and putting his pen between his fingers, with his own hand wrote 'Richard Ingoldshy,' he making all the resistance he could; and he said, if his name there was compared with what he had ever writ himself, it could never be look'd upon as his own hand. Ingoldshy, from the deposal of Richard, declared that he would serve the king, and told Mr. Mordaunt that he would perform all services he could, without making any conditions, and would be well content, that his majesty, when he came home, should take his head off, if he thought fit; only he desired the king might know the truth

He was a gentleman of courage and valour, and tho' he could neither pray, preach or dissemble, being rather a boon companion, yet complying very kindly with Oliver's new court, and being in his principles for kingship, he was reckoned fit to be taken out of the house of commons (having before been one of the council of state) and to be made a member of the other house, that is the house of lords by his cousin the protector; who, about that time, committed him to the Tower (but soon released him thence) for beating the honest inn-keeper of Ailesbury in Whitehall. In the beginning of the year 1660, when colonel, commonly called major gen. John Lambert broke loose from his prison in the Tower, (to which he some time before had been committed by the restored members of the long parliament, least he and his party should hinder their intended settlement of the nation) and thereupon had got into the head of a considerable party of desperate phanatieks near to Daventry in Northamptonshire, to hinder, if possible it might be, not only the said settlement but restoration of the king, he the said colonel Ingoldesbiedid, with his own regiment and some other troops, and companies of foot (such as he could confide in) draw towards him, and about the 23d of Apr. making an onset, took Lambert with his own hands, while the other prime officers were taken by others of Ingoldesbie's party, &c. Whereupon for this his good service, his majesty did not only spare his life, (as having been one of his father's judges) but gave order that he should be made knight of the bath at his coronation, which accordingly was done. Afterwards he retired to Lethenborough, lived several years after in a quiet repose, and died in the beginning of Sept. 1685. Before which time his estate at Lethenborough was, as it was then reported, sold to Elianor Gwynn for the use of her natural son (which she had by king Charles II.) called sir Charles Beauleer earl of Burford and afterwards duke of St. Albans. This col. Ingoldesbie was elder brother to Henry Ingoldesbie a colonel also in the parl. army, and to Thomas a captain, &c.

May 19. COLONEL JOHN HEWSON a colonel of foot, was also presented by proctor Zanehy, and by him conducted to his place among the other officers.—He was sometimes an honest shoemaker in Westminster, but getting little by that trade, he, in the beginning of the grand rebellion, went out a capt. upon the account of the blessed cause, was very zealous for it, fought on stoutly, and in time became a colonel. When king Charles I. was by the godly brethren brought to tryal for his life, he sate as one of the judges, consented to the sentence passed upon him, and sealed and subscribed the warrant for his execution. Afterwards for his said service he became governour of Dublin, one of the council of state in July 1653, a member of the Little or Barebones parliament held the same year (and of all the parliaments since, before his majesty's restoration) a knight also of the new stamp, and at length one of Oliver's lords to have a negative voice in the other house. Upon an infallible foresight of the turn of the times, he conveyed himself away into Holland, to save his neck, and soon after died, and was buried at Amsterdam, about 1662, as the vulgar report went at that time.

COLONEL JOHN OKEY was another great officer that was then also presented by proctor Zanehy, May 19, and by him of his case. The king before his return would never send him any assurance of pardon, but Ingoldshy was not to be disheartened at this, but pursued his former resolutions, and first surpriz'd the castle of Windsor (where there was a great magazine of arms and ammunition) and put out that governour whom the rump had put in; and afterwards took Lambert prisoner.]

conducted to the rest.—His parentage was as mean as his calling, having been originally as 'tis supposed a dray-man, afterwards a stoaker in a brew-house at Islington near London, and then a poor chandler near Lyon-key in Thame-street in London. At length changing his apron for a buff-coat, he became, thro' certain military degrees, a colonel of dragoons, and by the artifice of Cromwell, had, unknown to him, his name inserted among the king's judges, and so consequently was by him appointed to sit among that diabolical crew; which if he refused to do, he knew full well it would displease Cromwell much, and in the end contract prejudice against him. This fellow, who was of greater bulk than brains, and of more strength than wit or conscience, left Cromwell when he saw that he aimed at the office of a single person, sided with the anab. and fifth-monarchy-men, and thereupon was committed to custody for a time, and his regiment taken from him and given to a great creature of Oliv. called Charles lord Howard, afterwards earl of Carlisle. At length upon a foresight of the return of monarchy, he fled into Holland, and settling at Delft in a very timorous condition under the name of Frederick Williamson, (because his father's name was William) with Miles Corbet and John Barkstead two other regicides (the last of which went by the name of John Harman) they were all seized upon in the beginning of March 1661, by the forward endeavours of sir George Downing his majesty's envoy or resident at the Hague, by order from the states, they being then in an ale-house. Soon after they were sent to England in the Blackmore frigot, and upon their arrival were committed prisoners to the Tower of London. Afterwards being conveyed to the King's-Bench bar at Westminster hall to know what they could say for themselves why execution should not pass upon them, they were returned to the Tower again; and on the 19th of April 1662 were all conveyed thence, each in a sledge, to Tyburn, and there hang'd, drawn and quarter'd. Afterwards Okey's quarters were, instead of being hang'd on several gates of the city of London, permitted by his majesty's order to be inter'd by his relations, because he had behaved himself dutifully towards him in his last words at the gallows. Soon after were published their Speeches and Prayers, together with several Passages at the Time of their Execution at Tyburn, with some due and sober Animadversions on the said Speeches, Lond. 1662, in 5 sh. in qu. and A Letter from Col. Barkstead, Col. Okey, and Mil. Corbet to their Friends in their congregational Churches in Lond. with the Manner of their Apprehension, Lond. 1662, in 1 sh. in qu. But this last is a feigned thing, and reflects upon sir Geor. Downing as a revolter from their cause, as indeed he was, which afterwards was his advancement. He was then a member of that parl. which began at Westm. the 8th of May 1661, wherein acting much to the great dislike of those that took themselves to be the honest party of the house, had this⁸ character given of him, 'Sir Geor. Downing a poor child, bred upon charity, like Judas betray'd his master: What can his country expect? He drew, and advised, the oath of renouncing the king's family, and took it first himself. For his honesty, fidelity, &c. he was rewarded by his majesty with fourscore thousand pounds at least, and is a commissioner of Customs, the house-bell to call the courtiers to vote at six of the clock at night, an exchequer teller,' &c. May 19. GEOR. SEDASCUE⁹ adjutant general of the parliament army, was also then presented and took his place.—He had been a cornet of horse in the expedition against the rebels in Ireland 1641, 42.

COL. EDWARD GROSVENOUR quartermaster general of the said army, was presented and created M. of A. the same day. —In 1656 he was chose burgess for Westminster, to serve in that parl. which began the 17th of Sept. the same year, he being then a favourite of Oliver, and for the same place also to serve in Richard's parliament, &c. [79]

May 19. OWEN ROE scoutmaster general, was also then created and conducted by proctor Zanchy to the rest of the officers.—He was originally a silk-man, and in the beginning of the rebellion being a violent covenant, and afterwards an independent, was by Oliver's interest made a prime officer (lieu. col. I think) in the militia of London, and became a firebrand in that city, and an enemy to its ancient civil government. In 1648 he was nominated one of the king's judges, sate on the bench when he was several times brought before them, stood up as consenting when sentence was passed for severing his head from his body, and at length set his hand and seal to the warrant for his execution. About that time he was made keeper of the magazines and stores, received 5000*l.* to buy arms, which I think was never after accounted for. In 1659 Jul. 7, he was constituted colonel of the militia of the said city by the rump parliament, and was then in great favour with them; but in the year after when his majesty was restored, and a proclamation thereupon was issued out for all such persons that had sate in judgment on king Charles I. to come in, he surrendered himself; so that after his tryal had passed in the sessions-house in the Old-Baily, he was condemned to perpetual imprisonment, and his estate confiscated. What became of him afterwards I know not, nor any thing else of him, only that much about the time that he was created M. of A. he got his son named Sam. Roe to be made fellow of All-s. coll. by the committee and visitors.

May 19. COLONEL WILLIAM GOUGH or GOFFE was then also presented by Zanchy, and created M. A.—He was the son of Stephen Goffe rector of Stanmore in Sussex, and younger brother to Joh. Goffe mention'd among the writers, an. 1661, and to Steph. Goffe mention'd in the FASTI, an. 1636. While this William was a youth and averse to all kind of learning, he was bound an apprentice to one Vaughan a salter in London, brother to col. Joseph Vaughan a parliamentarian and a zealous presbyterian; whose time being near, or newly out, he betook himself to be a soldier for the righteous cause, instead of setting up his trade, went out a quarter-master of foot, and continued in the wars till he forgot what he had fought for. At length through several military grades he became a colonel, a frequent prayer-maker, preacher and presser for righteousness and freedom, which in outward shew was expressed very zealously, and therefore in high esteem in the parliament army. In 1648 he was one of the judges of king Charles I. sate in judgment when he was brought before the high court of justice, stood up as consenting when sentence passed upon him for his decollation, and afterwards set his hand and seal to the warrant that very antient family by the late Godfrey Bosville of Gunthwaite, esq. (father to colonel Bosville who died in London about two years since) it is said that he was a Bohemian count, who was forced to quit his country, for having fought at the battle of Prague for the elector Palatine. He was a very ingenious man. He was a major in sir Michael Livering's regiment of foot, and afterwards a major of horse in general Fairfax's army under colonel Ireton, commissary-general. His standard which is painted amongst several others in a curious collection of Mr. Hollis, is the sun driving away the clouds and rain, and the motto 'Post Nubila Phœbus.' HUNTER.]

for his execution. Afterwards, having like his general (Cromwell) an evil tincture of that spirit that loved and sought after the favour and praise of man, more than that of God, as by woful experience in both of them it did afterwards appear, he could not further believe, or persevere upon that account, but by degrees fell off from the anti-monarchical principles of the chief part of the army, and was the man with col. Will. White, who brought musquetiers, and turned out the anabaptistical members that were left behind of the Little or Barebone's parliament, out of the house, an. 1654. Complying thus kindly with the design and interest of the said general, he was by him, when made protector, constituted major general of Hampshire, Sussex and Berks, a place of great profit, and afterwards was of one, if not of two parliaments, did advance his interest greatly, and was in so great esteem and favour in Oliver's court, that he was judged the only fit man to have maj. gen. John Lambert's place and command, as maj. general of the army of foot, and by some to have the protectorship settled on him in future time. He being thus made so considerable a person, was taken out of the house to be a lord, and to have a negative voice in the other house, and the rather for this reason, that he never in all his life (as he used to say) fought against any such thing as a single person, or a negative voice, but only to pull down Charles and set up Oliver, &c. in which he obtained his end. In 1660, a little before the restoration of king Charles II. he betook himself to his heels to save his neck, without any regard had to his majesty's proclamation, wandred about, fearing every one that he met should slay him, and was living at Lausanna in 1664 with Edm. Ludlow, Edward Whaley,¹ and other regicides, when John Lisle, another of that number, was there by certain generous royalists dispatch'd. He afterwards lived several years in vagabondship, but when he died, or where his carcass was lodged, is as yet unknown to me.²

May 19. MAJOR JOHN BLACKMORE.—He was a burgess for Tiverton to serve in that parliament call'd by Oliver, which began at Westminster 3 Sept. 1654. "He was high-sheriff of Devonshire 1657."

MAJOR BROWNE was actually created the same day. —This is all that appears of him in the register; otherwise had his Christian name been set down, I might have been more large upon him.

The aforesaid eleven officers, great favourites of Cromwell, were presented in masters gowns on one and the same day by Zanchy before-mention'd, in a convocation held by a presbyterian deputy vicechancellor, presbyterian heads, and mostly presbyterian masters, and all actually created masters of arts and seated in the doctors seats.

FRANCIS BULLER, gent. batch. of arts of Cambr. was also then actually created master, but presented by an ordinary master.—He was the same person, as I conceive, who was chose a knight for the county of Cornwall to serve in Richard's parliament that began at Westm. 27 Jan. 1658.

May 21. JOHN RUSHWORTH of Queen's coll. secretary to Tho. Lord Fairfax, was then created M. A. and admitted to suffragate in the house of convoc. and congreg.

May 21. { EDWARD THELWALL a captain of foot.
HUGH COURTNEY an officer of note.

Mar. 14. . . . HUMPHREYS gent. of kin to the earl of Lincoln, and son of a colonel, &c.

In the conclusion of the aforesaid creation, May 19, were the names of certain other officers read, to be created masters of arts when they were pleased to come to Oxon to be entertained. Their names were written in a paper subscribed by Fairfax and Cromwell, but whether the contents of that paper were registred, or that the said officers were created, it appears not. Two of them, who are noted to posterity for their great rudeness and impudence towards sacred majesty, I shall here set down, but the others not, because of little or no name. The first of these two that I shall speak of, is,

GEORGE JOYCE an officer of note, a captain as it seems.—It must be now observed, that when the commissioners appointed by parliament to treat with the king for peace, did go to him at Newcastle upon Tyne, to which place the Scots had conveyed him when he committed his person to their protection near Newark upon Trent, it was the pleasure of the parl. that he and the commissioners should be conveyed thence to his palace at Holdenby in Northamptonshire, there to continue during the treaty, because it was a more convenient place for his majesty, and much more near to London than the former place. On the 3d of Feb. therefore, an. 1646, he was conveyed thence by certain forces appointed by parliament, and on the 16th of the said month he arrived at Holdenby with the commissioners, viz. Philip earl of Pembroke, Basil earl of Denbigh, Edward lord Mountague of Boughton, with double their number of some eminent members of the house of commons, namely sir Jam. Harrington, sir John Holland, and sir John Coke baronets, sir Walter Earle knt. Joh. Crew, esq; and serj. maj. gen. Rich. Browne. Being all settled there, the treaty went on, with fair hopes of a conclusion, but by the diabolical machinations of O. Cromwell and his confederates the adjutators, it was after this manner dissolved, and the king by force taken thence. On the 3d of June 1647, his maj. being in the afternoon at bowls in the Green at Althorp near Holdenby, belonging to the lord Spencer earl of Sunderland, it was whisper'd among the commissioners then there with him, that a party of horse obscurely headed were marching towards Holdenby, and for no good it was presumed, in regard, that neither the commissioners nor colonel Rich. Greaves (a most confiding presbyterian) who kept the guard at Holdenby, and was an officer in the army, nor the commissioners servants had the least notice of it from any officer, or other correspondent in the army, other than that the general had removed his head-quarter from St. Edmund's Bury to Newmarket, when the army entréd into an engagement not to suffer themselves to be disbanded, such a motion having been made by the commons in parliament. Whereupon his majesty, so soon as he was acquainted with it, immediately left the green, and returned to Holdenby, where the commissioners, after consultation had with col. Greaves, resolved to stand upon their guard; and accordingly they forthwith doubled their guards for the defence of his majesty's person; and serj. maj. gen. Browne, calling all the soldiers together, acquainted them with the occasion, who promised to stand by him, and not to suffer any attempt on the king's person, or affront on the commissioners, as I have been informed by one then present on the place, whom I shall anon mention: But the difference is great 'twixt saying and doing, as soon appear'd; for about midnight came that party of horse, which in good order drew up before the house or palace at Holdenby, and at all avenues placed guards. This done, the officer that commanded the party alighted and demanded entrance: Whereupon Greaves and Browne asked him his name and business; he answer'd his name was Joyce, a cornet in col. Edw. Whalley's regiment, and his business was to speak with the king. From whom,' said they? 'From my self,' said Joyce, at which they laughed; and thereupon Joyce said, 'twas no laughing matter.' They advised him to draw off his men, and in the morning he should speak with the commissioners: 'I came not hither, (said he) to be advised by you, nor have I any business with the commissioners, my errand is to the king, and speak with him I must and will presently,' &c. They then bad the soldiers within stand to their arms, and be ready to fire when order'd: But during this short treaty between the cornet and Greaves and Browne, the soldiers on each side had conference together, and so soon as they understood that they were fellow-soldiers of one and the same army, they quickly forgot what they had promised; for they opened the gates and doors, shook one another by the hand, and bad them welcome, so little regard had they to their promises, either in reference to the king's safety, or the commissioners that attended him. Entrance being made, strict search was made after col. Greaves, who (tho' faultless, yet was it suggested that he would privately have conveyed away the king to London) got happily out of their reach. Sentinels were ordered by Joyce to be set at the commissioners chambers doors, that he might with less noise carry on his design, and find way to the back-stairs where the grooms of his majesty's bedchamber attended. Cornet Joyce being come unto the door, he in rude manner knock'd: Those within asked 'who it was that in such an uncivil manner and unseasonable time came to disquiet the king's rest?' The cornet answer'd, 'My name is Joyce, an officer of the army, and sorry I am that I should disquiet the king, but I cannot help it, for speak with him I must, and that presently,' &c. This strange confidence of his, and the posture he was in, having a cock'd pistol in his hand, amazed the four grooms of the bedchamber, Jam. Maxwell, Patr. Maule, Jam. Harrington, and Thom. Herbert, (from the last of which I had this story in writing) whose duty it was and care to preserve his majesty's person, and were resolv'd to sacrifice their lives rather than give him admittance. They therefore in the first place ask'd Joyce, 'If he had the commissioners approbation for his intrusion?' he said 'no, for I have ordered a guard to be set at their doors, and have orders from those that feared them not.' They then persuaded him to lay aside his arms and to forbear giving disturbance, the king being then asleep, assuring him in the morning he should have his majesty's answer to his errand. The cornet refused to part with either sword or pistol, and yet insisted to have the chamber door open'd. But the grooms of the bedchamber keeping firm to their resolution that he should not enter, the noise was so loud, which in this contest could not be avoided, that it awaken'd his majesty, who thereupon rung his silver bell: Upon which Maxwell went into the bedchamber to know the king's pleasure, the other three grooms in the mean time securing the door. The king being acquainted with the business, and uncivil carriage of the cornet, he sent word 'he would not rise nor speak with him until morning:' Which being told the cornet, he huff'd, and seeing his design could not be effected in the night, he retired, so as for a few hours there was silence. Morning being come, the king arose a little sooner than ordinary, and having performed his morning devotions, he sent for Joyce, who, with no less confidence than if he had been a supreme officer, approached the king, and acquainted him with the commands he had concerning his removal. The king desired that the commissioners might be sent for, and his orders communicated to them, the cornet made answer that they were to return back to the parliament; 'By whose appointment,' said the king? to which the cornet made no answer. The king then said, 'Let them have their liberty, and give me a sight of your instructions.' 'That,' said cornet Joyce, 'you shall see presently:' And forthwith drawing up the greatest and best part of his party into the inner court, as near as he could unto the king, said 'These, sir, are my instructions.' The king took a view of them, and finding them proper men, well mounted and armed, smilingly told the cornet, 'His instructions were in fair character, and legible without spelling.' The cornet then pressed the king to go along with him, no prejudice being intended, but rather satisfaction: The king told him, 'he would not stir unless the commissioners went along with him.' The cornet reply'd, that 'for his part he was indifferent.' However the commissioners in this interim, had, by an express, acquainted the parl. with this violence, and so soon as they perceived his majesty was inclinable to go with Joyce, and that it was the king's pleasure they should follow him they knew not whither, they immediately made themselves ready: And after that they had put several questions to the cornet, whose answers were insignificant, and saw full well that reason was of no force to dissuade, nor menaces to affright, they were willing to attend the king at all adventures. This audacious attempt exceedingly troubled the commissioners, and the more, for that they knew not how to help it, as appeared by their countenances, for indeed it sadned the hearts of many. The king was the merriest in the company, having, it seems, some confidence in the army, especially from some of the greatest there, as was imagined. The king being in his coach, call'd the earls of Pembroke and Denbigh, as also the lord Mountague into it. The other commissioners, members of the house of commons, being well mounted, followed, leaving Holdenby languishing; for that beautiful and stately structure was in two years after pulled down among other royal houses, whereby the splendor of the kingdom was not a little eclips'd, as it since appeared. His majesty following his guide (the confident cornet) he went that night to Hinchbrook, where he lodged in the fair mansion-house of col. Edw. Mountague, (made earl of Sandwich after the restoration of king Charles II.) whose lady was daughter to Joh. Crew esq; then one of the commissioners, and afterwards created a baron by king Charles II. in which house his majesty was treated with honour and welcome, as were also the commissioners. From Hinchbrook the king went next night to Childerley, a house of sir John Cutts, not far from Cambridge, to which, during his majesty's three days stay, many doctors, graduates, and scholars of that university repaired. To most of whom the king was pleased to give his hand to kiss, for which honour they returned their gratulatory and humble thanks with a Vivat Rex. Thither also came Fairfax the general of the parl. army, lieut. gen. Cromwell, commissary gen. Hen. Ireton, maj. gen. Philip Skippon, lieut. gen. of the ordnance Tho. Hammond, col. John Lambert, col. Edw. Whalley, col. Rich. Deane, col. Charles Rich, and several other field and commission officers; some of which, as soon as they came into the presence, kiss'd his majesty's hand, after the general, who had began the way. These things being done, the king took the general aside in the first place, and discours'd with him, the general (unask'd) disavowed his majesty's seizure by Joyce at Holdenby, as done without his order and approbation, (but probably by some other powerful officer in the army, seeing that Joyce was neither at a council of war, or otherwise, called into question for it) and by his letter declared no less to the parliament: Whereupon, as 'tis farther reported, the king made answer, that 'unless he would hang up Joyce he would not believe him,' &c. From thence he went to Newmarket, where he made a considerable stay, and thence to Royston, where continuing two or three days, a certain envoy from some German prince (whose dead father had been a companion to the knights of the most noble order of the Garter) made an address to his majesty, with a letter, and a return of the George and Garter (richly set with diamonds) according to the usual custom, and to receive his majesty's direction with whom to be deposited. A military officer, Whalley before-mention'd (afterwards one of the king's judges) being in the room, was so malepert as to interpose, and would be privy to what the envoy had to communicate to the king, who by his frown expressing his displeasure at so great rudeness towards him and incivility to a stranger, Mr. Babington the king's barber instructed the officer better by a removal, which the king was pleased with, and the officer had a reproof from the general for his disrespect to his majesty. Afterwards his majesty by easy journies went to Hampton-Court, where he continued in great splendor near a quarter of a year, in which time there were great hopes of an accommodation and conclusion of a peace between him and his parliament; but being frighted thence by the endeavours of the adjutators of the army at Putney, he retired obscurely to the isle of Wight, and how he was violently taken thence, and hurried to Hurst-Castle, you shall hear more anon. As for Joyce before-mention'd, a pragmatistical and busy person, who had been a godly taylor in London, and persuaded and egg'd on by a godly minister of that city to take up arms for the righteous cause, had soon after the said audacious act was by him performed, his arrears paid, and was made at least a captain, and at length a colonel: But after Oliver had advanc'd himself to the protectorate, and thereupon had cashier'd and imprison'd divers prime officers, who worse than malign'd him for so doing, an. 1654, this col. Joyce became a malecontent at the change, and signified so much to Oliver's face, whom he upbraided with his own service, and his faithfulness, but escaped any other censure than bidding him be gone, Cromwell well knowing him to be one of those mad-men that would do any thing they were bid.

The next that I am to mention who had the degr. of M. of A. conferr'd on him if he would please to accept of it, was

LIEUT. COLON. RALPH COBBET an officer in col. Faithful Fortescue's regiment.—The reader may be pleased now to observe, that the treaty for peace at Newport in the isle of Wight, between the commissioners appointed by parliament and his majesty, being in a manner concluded, insomuch that it was voted by the members thereof, that his majesty's answers and concessions, were a ground sufficient and satisfactory to both houses of parliament to proceed upon, in order to a settlement of a peace of the kingdom; the adjutators of the army did thereupon conclude, that if a peace was settled, the said army should be disbanded, and become useless, and therefore they framing cases, and a remonstrance setting forth their grievances, and that the principal actors of the king's party in the late war should be proceeded against according to justice, his majesty not being excepted, they ordered among themselves that the said treaty should be broken off, and the king's person secured for their own end thus. In the latter end of Nov. 1648, a considerable party of horse and foot belonging to the army landed in the isle of Wight, under the command of the said lieut. col. Cobbet, and coming unexpectedly to Newport, the lieut. col. did in the first place make enquiry for the quarters of the governour of that isle called col. Rob. Hammond, (for there, at Newport, he continued while his majesty was present, albeit he was under no restraint) to the end that he might secure him, and put his lieut. col. Is. Ewre in his place of trust and government. The reason for this intended seizure was not then known, for col. Hammond had all along managed his trust with sufficient circumspection and asperity: so, as it continued him in the applause of most men in power, both in the two houses of parl. and the army; insomuch, as 'twas believed this alteration proceeded principally from the apprehension either the adjutators, or some that influenc'd them, had; and were not a little jealous that he was at length too much a courtier, which they by no means approved of; and from that supposition they thought it the safest way to remove him: yet he being premonish'd, evaded Cobbet, and at his coming to Westminster had a fair reception by the members of parliament. In this conjecture his opposits in the army were mistaken, for albeit by his constant attendance, most times walking and discoursing with the king whensoever he walk'd for refreshment about the out-works of Carisbrook castle, before he went to Newport to treat with the commissioners, (there being none in the garrison so fit, and forward as Hammond) it gave him opportunity to ingratiate himself into his majesty's favour, yet it made the army officers jealous, he being solely intrusted with the person of the king: and the truth is he did never forfeit the king's good opinion of him, only when he peep'd into his scrutore, for no good end as 'twas supposed; which, (as I have been told by one then present) with some aggravations from other hands, made the king to design an escape: For soon after, he made way for his descent out of his chamber, as he farther told me, and horses were provided and placed near the works, and a vessel ready for his embarking, but by a corrupted corporal of the garrison it took no effect, &c. Now to return; lieut. col. Cobbet failing of his first enterprise, he made a higher flight, for in the morning of the 30th of Nov. 1648, (being St. Andrew's day) he, just at break of day, did with other officers in his company come to the door of the king's dressing-room, with Anth. Mildmay the king's carver, (brother to sir Henry a parliamentarian) and making a great knocking there, the king sent James duke of Richmond, then in attendance as gentleman of the bedchamber, to know what it meant, and he enquiring who was there, was answer'd by Mildmay, that there were some gentlemen from the army that were desirous to speak with the king. The duke returned, and gave an account to the king, but the knocking increasing, the king commanded the duke to let them into his dressing-room. No sooner was that done, but Cobbet in the head of them went into his chamber, and made an abrupt and unexpected address to the king, letting him know that he had orders to remove him forthwith from Newport. The king beheld him with astonishment, and interrogated him 'whether his orders were to remove him to his prison at Carisbrook?' The lieut. col. said 'No:' 'Whither then?' said the king: 'Out of the isle of Wight,' replied the lieut. col. but the place he was to remove him to, he was not to communicate. 'Under favour (said the king) let me see your orders,' as to which the lieut. col. desired to be excused, 'This business (said he) is of no ordinary concernment, I am not to satisfy any man's enquiry until a fitter season.' Now was verified his majesty's maxim, that 'such as will assume the boldness to adventure upon a king, must not be thought over modest, or timorous to carry on his design.' His majesty being thus denied a sight and answer, demanded 'if his orders and instructions were from the parliament, or general of the army?' the lieut. colonel's answer was, 'He had them from neither;'

said the king thereupon 'It may be so, seeing you are afraid to shew them.' But that he had orders or secret instructions for this bold act, is not to be doubted; for tho' there was but one general, yet things were at that time so much out of frame, both in the commons' house and army, that there were many commanders. The duke of Richmond, Mountague earl of Lindsey, Tho. earl of Southampton gent. of the bedchamber, and other nobility, several venerable persons his chaplains, and many of the king's household servants at that time attending, were in a manner confounded at this surprise, and unexpected accident; yea, not a little affrighted with ideas and apprehensions of danger to his majesty's person; and the more, for that Cobbet refused to satisfy any, to what place he would go, or what he intended to do with the king, other than that 'no harm or violence should be offer'd to him.' The lieut. col. (Cobbet) did press the king to take coach with what convenient speed he could: The coach accordingly was made ready, and brought to the door where the king lodged. Never at one time was beheld more grief in men's faces, or greater fears in their hearts, the king being at such a time and in such a manner hurried away they knew not whither. But no remedy appearing, the noble-men, venerable persons, and other his majesty's servants approached to kiss the king's hand, and to pour forth their supplications to almighty God to safeguard and comfort his majesty in that disconsolate condition. His majesty, who at other times was cheerful, did, at this parting from his friends, shew sorrow in his heart, by the sadness of his countenance, (a real sympathy) and wrote unto the lords in parl. acquainting them with this fresh violence, and complaining of the army's severity to his person. The king being now ready to take coach, he asked Cobbet whether he was to have any servants with him? To which he made answer, Only such as were most useful. The king then nominated James Harrington, and Tho. Herbert to attend him in his bedchamber, and scarce a dozen more for other service: And at that time his majesty taking notice that Herbert had for three days absented himself, Harrington told his majesty that he was sick of an ague. His majesty then desir'd the duke of Richmond to send one of his servants to see in what condition he then was, and, if any thing well, to come along with him. The gent. that the duke sent found him sweating, but as soon as he receiv'd the message, he arose, and came speedily to his maj. who presently took coach, and commanded Harrington, Herbert, and Mildmay his carver to come into his coach; and lieut. col. Cobbet offering to enter the coach uninvited, his majesty by opposing with his foot, made him sensible of his rudeness, so as with shame he mounted his horse, and followed the coach with his party or guard, the coachman driving as he directed, and captain Merriman (a name ill suiting with the occasion) with another party went foremost. The king in this passage shew'd no discomposure at all (tho' at parting he did) and would be asking the gentlemen in the coach with him, Whither they thought he was travelling? they made some simple replies, such that served to make his majesty smile at their innocent conjectures: Otherwise he would comfort himself with what he had granted at the late treaty with the commissioners, whom he highly praised for their ingenuity and fair deportment at Newport. The coach by the lieut. colonel's direction went westward towards Worsley's tower in Freshwater Isle, and a little beyond Yarmouth haven. About that place his majesty rested, until the vessel was ready to take him aboard with those few his attendants. The king after an hour's stay, went aboard, a sorrowful spectacle and great example of fortune's inconstancy. The wind and tyde favoured him and his company, and in less than three hours time they crost that narrow sea, and landed at Hurst castle, (or block-house rather) erected by order of king Henry VIII. upon a spot of earth thrust by nature a good way into the sea, and joyned to the firm land by a narrow neck of sand, which is constantly covered over with loose stones and pebbles. Upon both sides of this passage the sea beats, so as at spring tides and in stormy weather it is formidable and hazardous. The castle has very thick stone walls, and the platforms are regular, and both have culverins and sakers mounted. A dismal receptacle it was for so great a monarch, as this king was; the greater part of whose life and reign had been prosperous and full of earthly glory: nevertheless it was some satisfaction to his majesty that his two houses of parliament abhor'd this force upon his person, having voted that the seizing of the king's person and carrying him prisoner to Hurst castle was without the privy and consent of either house of parliament, &c. The captain of this wretched place, was not unsuitable to it. At the king's going on shoar in the evening of the said 30th of Nov. he stood ready to receive him with small observance. His look was stern, his hair and large beard were black and bushy. He held a partizan in his hand, and Switz-like had a great basket-hilt sword by his side. Hardly could one see a man of more grim aspect, and no less robust and rude was his behaviour. Some of his majesty's servants were not a little fearful of him, and really thought that he was design'd for mischief, especially when he vapoured as being elevated with his command, and puffed up by having so royal a prisoner; so as probably he conceived he was nothing inferior to the governour of the castle at Millan. But being complained of to lieut. col. Cobbet his superior officer, he appeared a bubble; for being pretty sharply admonished, he quickly became mild and calm, whereby 'twas visible that his humour (or tumour rather) was adulatory, acted to curry favour; wherein also he was much mistaken: for to give the lieut. colonel his due, he was, after his majesty came under his custody, very civil to him both in language and behaviour, and courteous to those that attended him, on all occasions: also that his disposition was not rugged towards such as in loyalty and love came to see, and to pray for, him, as sundry persons out of Hampshire and the neighbouring counties did. His majesty (as it may be well granted) was very slenderly accommodated at this place, for the room he usually eat in was neither large or lightsome, insomuch that at noon day in that winter season, candles were set up to give light; and at night he had his wax lamp set (as formerly) in a silver bason, which illuminated the bedchamber, and Tho. Herbert then attending, being the sole person at that time left as groom thereof (for Harrington was soon after dismiss'd, as I have elsewhere told you) he could not otherwise but call to mind a relation well worth the observance, which is this, as by letters, with several other stories relating to the king's last two years of his life, he very kindly imparted to me. When Mountague earl of Lindsey, one of the gentlemen of his majesty's bedchamber, did lye one night on a pallet by the king's bed-side, a little before he left Oxon, in a disguise, to surrender his person up to the protection of the Scots then laying siege to Newark upon Trent, was placed at the end of his majesty's bed (as was usually every night) a lamp or round cake of wax in a bason set on a stool. The earl awaked in the night and observed the room to be perfectly dark, and thereupon raising himself up, he looked towards the lamp and concluded that it might be extinguished by water got into the bason by some creek: but he not hearing the king stir, forbore rising, or to call upon those in the next chamber to bring in another light. About half an hour after he fell asleep again and awaked not 'till morning, but when he did awake, he discerned the lamp bright burning, which so astonish'd him, that taking the boldness to call to the king (whom he heard by his stirring to be awake) he told him what he had observed: whereupon the king replied, that he himself also awaking in the night, took notice that all was dark, and to be fully satisfied he put by the curtain to look on the lamp, but concluded the earl had risen, and set it upon the bason again. The earl assured his majesty he did not. The king then said he did consider it was a prognostic of God's future favour and mercy towards him and his, that, tho' he was at that time eclipsed, yet either he or they may shine out bright again, &c. But to return, in this sad condition was the king at Hurst, the place and military persons duly considered: he was sequestered in a manner from the comfort that earth and air affordeth and the society of men. The earth confin'd him to that promontory or gravel walk overspread with loose stones a good depth; on which when he walked, as usually he did, it was very uneasy and offensive to his feet, but endure it he did and with his most admirable accustom'd patience and serenity of spirit, and more alacrity, than they that followed him. The air was equally obnoxious, by reason of the marish grounds that were thereabouts, and the unwholesome vapours arising from the sargosses and weeds which the salt water constantly at tides and storms cast upon the shoar, and by the fogs that those marine places are most subject to, so that the dwellers thereabouts find by experience that the air is insalubrious and disposing to diseases, especially aguish distempers. Notwithstanding all these things the king was content in this most disconsolate and relegated place to walk two miles at least in length, containing but a few paces in breadth, either in the company of the governour of the said castle, or in that of capt. Reynolds an officer therein; beside Harrington (while he was there) and Herbert, who according to their duties did always attend him. That which made some amendment was a fair and uninterrupted prospect a good way into the sea, a view into the isle of Wight one way, and main land the other, with the sight of ships of all sizes, daily under sail, with which his majesty was much delighted. In this castle his majesty continued from the evening of the 30th of Nov. till the 21st of Dec. following, an. 1648, and what hapned in that interval I have partly told you in Jam. Harrington among the writers under the year 1677. About the 15th of the said month of Dec. major Harrison came late at night with orders for the removal of his majesty thence, lodged there two nights, and went away without seeing the king, or speaking with any of his attendants. Two days after lieut. col. Cobbet before-mention'd came and acquainted his majesty with the orders he had received for his remove thence to Windsor castle forthwith. The king told him he was more kind at that time, than he was at Newport, when he would not gratify him or any other with the knowledge of the place he was to go to. Windsor was the place he ever delighted in, and 'twould make amends for what at Hurst he had suffered. All things in short time being made ready, he bad solitary Hurst adieu; and having pass'd the narrow passage before-mention'd, which reaches well nigh from Hurst to Milford three long miles, there appeared a party of horse belonging to the army, who had then their winter quarter at Lindhurst, and were ordered to convey the king to Winchester; but going first to Ringwood, then through the New Forest to Rumsey, went thence to the said city. At his entrance therein the mayor and aldermen of the city, did, notwithstanding the times, receive the king with dutiful respect, and the clergy did the like. During his short stay there, the gentry and others of inferior rank flock'd thither in great numbers to welcome his majesty, and out of zeal to pray for his enlargement and happiness; with which the king was much satisfied, and was pleased to give his hand to many of them to kiss. Thence his majesty rode to Alton, and so to Alresford, while the inhabitants round about made haste to see his majesty pass by, and to pour forth their prayers for his preservation. From thence he went to Farnham, 'twixt which two towns major Harrison met him with a party of horse to convey him to Windsor. See more before in Thomas Harrison among these creations.

Batchelors of Physic.

May 19. THOMAS TRAPHAM chirurgeon to the general of the parliament army was then actually created batch. of physic, while the said general, Cromwell and the aforesaid officers were seated in their gowns in the doctor's seats.— This person, who was son of John Trapham of Maidstone in Kent, and had been licensed by the university to practise chirurgery, an. 1633, did practise it in these parts for some time before the grand rebellion broke forth. Afterwards he turned tail for profit sake, practised in the parliament army, and became a bitter enemy to his majesty king Charles the first; to whose body after his decollation in the latter end of Jan. 1648 he put his hand to open and embalm, and when that was done, he sewed his head to his body; and that being done also, he said to the company then present, that 'he had sewed on the head of a goose.' Afterwards he was chirurgeon to Oliver Cromwell at the fight at Worcester against king Charles II. was a great man among his party and got what he pleased. After his majesty's return,³ he retired to the fanatical town of Abingdon in Berks, practised there among the brethren, and dying an absolute bigot for the cause, in the latter end of Dec. 1683, was buried on the 29th of the same month in the presence of a great number of dissenters in the church yard of St. Helen's there, close under one of the windows of that church. One of both his names, and his son, as it seems, I shall elsewhere mention.

Nov. 14. JAMES WARD was actually created by the favour of Fairfax the general.—This person, who was lately made fellow of Magd. coll. by the visitors, I have mention'd among the incorporations, an. 1648.

Jan. 14. EDM. SCROPE eldest son of col. Adrian Scrope mention'd among the creations of batch. of arts this year, was created by order of the delegates of this university.— This ingenious and most comely gentleman, who had, by the endeavours of his father, been made fellow of All-s. coll. by the favour of the committee and visitors, was afterwards keeper of the privy seal in the kingdom of Scotland. He died much lamented by those that knew him in 1658, or thereabouts, and was buried with solemnity by two or more officers of arms at Ch. Ch. alias the Grey-fryars within Newgate in London.

Batchelors of Divinity.

May 19. MATTHEW BARTEN sometime M. of A. of New inn, now a sturdy, zealous and daily preacher up of the blessed cause in the parl. army, was actually created B. of D. while the general, lieut. general, and officers were sitting in their respective stalls.

It was the pleasure then of Fairfax and Cromwell that

GEORGE SIKES; JAM. BARON, JOH. DALE and JOSH. CROSS, all zealous and doughty brethren for the said cause, might be created B. of D. when they pleased.

[85] JUNE 8. GEORGE SIKES was created in a convocation then held.—This person, who was son of George Sikes of Lutterworth in Leicestershire, was originally of St. Joh. coll. (a servitor I think) and as a member of it he took the degrees in arts. Afterwards siding with the faction, he became a presbyterian, a covenanter, an independent, was made fellow of Magd. coll. by the com. and visitors, (where he had his share of the old gold or spurroyals belonging to that house, went away with, and never restored, them again as others did) and took the engagement, became a great admirer and follower of sir Hen. Vane junior, and therefore esteemed by the generality an anabaptist, fifth-monarchy man, and a hodgepodge of religions. He hath written The Life and Death of Sir Hen. Vane Knight; or, a short Narrative of the main Passages of his earthly Pilgrimage. Printed 1662 in qu. 'Tis a most canting and enthusiastical piece, and the effects rather of a craz'd than settled brain: and instead of giving the reader an account of the birth, extract, breeding, actions, &c. of that knight, usually called sir Humorous Vanity, he puts the reader off with his (such as 'tis) divinity: what else he hath written I know not, nor any thing besides of the person, only that he was a great encourager of Henry Stubbe in his proceedings.

JAMES BARON lately made divinity reader of Magd. coll. by the com. and visitors, was created the same day.—He was son of George Baron of Plymouth in Devonshire, had been puritanically educated in Exeter coll. and closing with the dominant party in the time of the rebellion, got besides his reader's place, to be minister of one of the Hendreths in Berks, and by the name of Mr. James Baron of Hendreth, he was appointed one of the assistants to the commissioners of that county for the ejection of such whom the saints called scandalous, ignorant and insufficient ministers and schoolmasters, that is, orthodox and loyal clergy. After his majesty's restoration he retired to London and lived a non-conformist mostly at, or near, Bunhill. He hath published under the name of Jacobus Baronius, a little thing printed on one side of a sheet, entit. Questiones Theologicae in Usum Coll. Magd. Oxon. Oxon. 1657: and with Thankful Owen did gather and publish the works of Thom. Goodwin in two vol. in fol. and set before them a canting preface. He died in the beginning of the year 1683, and was buried, as I have been informed, near the graves of Goodwin and Owen in the phanatical burial place near Bunhill-fields, and the New Artillery-yard.

JOHN DALE of Magdalen college, was created the same day, June 8.

As for JOSHUA CROSS he was not created batch. of div. but doct. of the civ. law, as I shall anon tell you.

FEB. 16. SIM. FORD of Ch. Ch. was created by dispensation of the delegates.—On the 12th of Jan. going before, the said delegates decreed that the said Mr. Ford, sometimes of Magd. hall, who had been expelled the university with great injury, (as they said) should be restored with all academical honour imaginable, and that his grace be proposed for batch. of div. &c. He proceeded D. of D. in 1665.

MAR. 14. WILL. DURHAM sometimes of New inn, now chaplain to W. Lenthall master of the rolls, was created in convocation by dispensation of the delegates.

Doctors of Law.

MAY 19. THOMAS LORD FAIRFAX baron of Cameron in Scotland, generalissimo of all the parliament forces in England, and constable of the Tower of London, was created doctor of the civil law, being then in Oxford and entertained by the members thereof, as Cromwell and divers prime officers were.—The ceremony of the creation was thus: After he had been adorned with a scarlet gown in the Apoditerium or vestry belonging to the convocation, but without hood or cap, the new beadles, who had not yet got their silver staves from those that were lately ejected, conducted him with Cromwell towards the upper end of the convocation house, the members thereof then standing up bare; whereupon Hierom Zanchy one of the proctors rising from his seat, which pro tempore was supplied by a master, and going to, and standing on, his left side took him by the right hand and presented him in a most humble posture to the vice-chanc. and proctors standing, with a short flattering Lat. speech, such as 'twas: Which being done, and he who then held the chancellor's chair (Dr. Chr. Rogers⁴) admitting him with another flattering speech, by his authority, or rather observance, Zanchy and the beadles conducted him up to the next place on the right hand of the chancellor's chair.

This person, who made a great noise in his time, not only in England, but throughout a great part of the world, was son⁵ and heir of Ferdinando lord Fairfax a busy and forward man in Yorkshire in raising men and maintaining the parliament cause against his majesty, by the lady Mary his wife daughter of Edmund lord Sheffield earl of Mulgrave; which Ferdinando dying 13th March 1647, aged 64 years, was buried in the church of Bolton Percy in Yorkshire. As for his son Thomas, whom we are farther to mention, he was born at Denton in the parish of Otley in the same county, in Jan. 1611 (9 Jac. 1.) and was baptized at Denton on the 25th of the said month. After he had spent some time in St. Joh. coll. in Cambridge,⁶ (to which afterwards, in his latter days, he was a benefactor⁷) he went beyond the seas, and spent the rest of his youth in martial discipline under the command of Horatio lord Vere; among whose forces he trailed a pike in the low countries, was at the considerable action of the taking of Busse in Flanders, but had no command while he was there. Afterwards he retired to his father's house, and took to wife Anne the daughter and co-heir of the said lord Vere, by whom he had issue Mary, born 3 July 1636, and Elizabeth. The first of which was married to George Villiers duke of Buckingham, 19 Nov. 1657. In the beginning of the rebellion in 1642, when his majesty was forced to raise a guard at York for the defence of his person, this sir Thomas Fairfax who was entrusted by his country to prefer a petition to his majesty, the scope whereof was to beseech him to hearken to his parliament and not raise forces, he did accordingly deliver it, but his majesty refusing [87] it, as a parliamentary^a writer tells us, he press'd it with that instance and intention, following the king so close therewith in the field call'd Heyworth-moor in the presence of near a hundred thousand people of the county (the like appearance was ever hardly seen in Yorkshire) that he at last did tender the same upon the pommel of his saddle. But finding no propitiatory, as the said author tells us, and seeing a war could not be avoided, he early paid the vows of his martial education; and as soon as the unhappy troubles brake forth, he took a commission under his father Ferdinando before-mention'd, whose timely appearance and performances for the rebels in the north, deserves a story of it self. He had not served the parliament in lower commands long, but that the great masters at Westminster did vote him their general, 31 Dec. 1644, at which time they cashier'd Robert earl of Essex of that high command, with whom they had sworn, 12 July 1642, to live and dye. This making of a new general was done when the parliament order'd their army to be new modell'd: so that victory in a manner being prepared to his hand, he vigorously proceeded, and what he did in a short time for the blessed cause, which is too much here to be set down, let the author^b of England's Recovery, &c. tell you; who, tho' in the latter end of that book, p. 321, he doth highly characterize him, especially for his religion but little for policy, yet a severe presbyterian^c will tell you that 'he was a gentleman of an irrational and brutish valour, fitter to follow another man's counsel than his own, and obnoxious to Cromwell and the independent faction, (upon whose bottom he stood for his preferment) it having been no dishonour to him to become the property of another man's faction,' &c. adding^d these matters, 'But what will not a fool in authority do when he is possess'd by knaves? Miserable man! His foolery did so long wait upon Cromwell's and Ireton's knavery, that it was not safe for him then to see his folly and throw by his cap with a bell and his bible.' Elsewhere^e he speaks of 'his ill breeding and churlishness,' of^f 'his being a cypher, or prepositor in the free-school called the army, while Cromwell was head-master, and Ireton usher,' &c. that^g 'he was a stalking horse, a brute,' &c. and indeed his majesty king Charles I. doth once, at least, in his works stile him 'the brutish general,' as being a person not fit to hearken to reason. When the war was terminated, and no enemy either in field or garrison left, he went to London in Nov. 1646, where he was in a most high manner joyed and caressed by the citizens of London and parliament for the great service he had done for the commonwealth, and nothing was thought too good or great for him. After his majesty was taken away from Holdenby and conveyed to Childerley, Newmarket, &c. he expressed himself civil to him, as he did afterwards at Hampton-court; but then having no pious frauds in him, or dissimulation for a good end, he did not, or could not endeavour, as being no politician, to countermand the diabolical designs of Cromwell, and the hellish crew. He did not endeavour to repell or hinder the Remonstrance of the Army, the purging of the house of commons of its chief members, the Agreement of the People, &c. but was lull'd on in a kind of stupidity. 'Tis true, that before the king was beheaded (in order to whose tryal he was nominated the chief judge but did not sit) he did use his power and interest to have the execution deferr'd for some days, forbearing his coming among the officers, and did fully resolve with his own regiment to prevent the execution, or have it defer'd till he could make a party in the army to second his design: but behold his policy! all the morning of that day on which the king was beheaded, and the time when he was beheaded, he was with certain officers of the army at prayer or in discourse, or both, in maj. Tho. Harrison's apartment in Whitehall, (being a room at the hither end of that gallery looking towards the privy-garden) and knew nothing of it;^h as it doth appear by this passage. When his majesty was beheaded on a scaffold joyning to the banquetting-house at Whitehall, and his corps thereupon immediately coffin'd and cover'd with a black velvet pall, bishop Juxon who attended him on the scaffold, and Thomas Herbert the only groom of his bedchamber that was then left, did go with the said corps to the back-stairs to have it embalm'd, and Mr. Herbert, after the body had been deposited, meeting with Fairfax the general, Fairfax asked him 'how the king did?' whereupon Herbert looking very strangely upon him, told him that 'the king was beheaded,' at which he seem'd much surpriz'd. Afterwards Herbert walking farther in the gallery with the said bishop, they were met by another great commander named Oliver Cromwell, who knew what had lately past, for he told them unask'd, that 'they should have orders for the king's burial speedily,' as I have been informed by the letters of the said Thomas Herbert. In little more than a fortnight after, viz. Feb. 14. an. 1648, general Fairfax was elected one of the council of state, consisting of 30 persons, soon after, when king Charles II. ship'd himself near the Hague in Holland to go to Scotland there to be invested in his right, he laid down his commission as general, being influenc'd thereunto by certain presbyterian ministers, because he would not engage against him;ⁱ whereupon Cromwell was made general in his place, and how he afterwards acted against that king, especially when he went into England to obtain his right, all histories will tell you. Afterwards the lord Fairfax retired to his seat in Yorkshire, lived there mostly during the reign of Oliver, was ready to rise with the people of his county, to assist sir George Booth in Cheshire, if any ways successful, and soon after did not only appear in the head of a great party, when the forces belonging to col. Joh. Lambert began to desert him, when they were about to fight gen. Monk, at what time he was coming into Engl. from Scot. to restore the rump, but declared with his party in Dec. 1659 against illegal taxes and free-quarter, as also for the freedom of a parliament, as it was in the year 1648. On the 2d of Jan. 1659, the rump parliament then sitting, he was by them appointed one of the council of state, and in Apr. following being elected the first knight for the county of York to serve in that parliament which began at Westminster on the 25th of the said month, he was by the members thereof appointed one of those 12 commoners, to go with those persons appointed by the house of lords to attend on his majesty in Holland, for the greater solemnity and lustre of his court there. On the 16th of May following they were there with his majesty at the Hague, where Fairfax drew upon him the curiosity and eyes of all men,^j as known to them by name to have been captain general of the parliament army. And when the first ceremony was past, he desired, as 'tis said, to see the king in private, and to ask him pardon for the past offences, which accordingly he did with all submission. After the said parliament was dissolv'd, he retired to his seat, lived retiredly, and dying there, was buried in an isle joyning on the south side to the chancel of Bilborough or Bilburgh near York. Over his grave was soon after put this epitaph: Here lye the bodies of the right honourable Thomas Lord Fairfax of Denton, Baron of Camerone, who died Nov. the 12th An. 1671, in the sixtieth Year of his Age. And of Anne his Wife, Daughter and Co-heir of Horatio Lord Vere Baron of Tilbury. He had Issue Mary Dutchess of Buckingham, and Elizabeth. Under this lord Fairfax his name were published while he bore arms for the parliament, especially when general, Many Letters, (of which most were to the speaker of the house of commons) some Relations concerning Skirmishes, Battles, taking of Castles, Towns, &c. As also Remonstrances, Declarations, Speeches, Messages, &c. He was a great lover of learning, religious in the way he professed, and when Oxford garrison was surrendered for the use of the parliament, he took great care for the preservation of the public library, which in several respects did suffer while the garrison was possess'd by the royal party: and what he did for it at the time of his death I have elsewhere told you.⁹

⁹ [See Short Memorials of Thomas Lord Fairfax, written by Himself; published in 12mo 1699, with an epistle dedicatory to the right honourable Thomas lord Fairfax, by his uncle Dr. Brian Fairfax, who in some MSS. notes, at the end, under his own hand gives the account of his birth and breeding, as entered in the margin page 765, and thus continued:—He himself gave an account of all his actions in letters to his father immediately after they were performed, which are preserved in the library at Denton; but there is not the same reason for printing them, that there was for publishing his Memoirs, which was done to prevent fals copies.—While Monk and Lambert lay on each side the Tweed, gen. Monk writ a letter to my lord Fairfax to assist him against Lambert, which my lord resolved to do. He sent his cousin Mr. Brian Fairfax to Monk, with this message; that he was resolved to appear in the field on the 1 of Jan. and would declare against Lambert, who was against all government but that of an army, and oppressed the country by raising taxes and by free quarter, but desired him to consider the danger he should be exposed to, having Lambert's army between them.

Mr. Brian Fairfax came to gen. Monk at Coldstream at midnight, and found him not gone to bed. He told him from whence he came, and the answer to his letter, and that my lord desired him to watch the motions of Lambert, to which he suddenly answered, He would watch him as a cat watches a mouse; with this answer Mr. Fairfax returned, and was in danger of his life on the borders of Scotland, among the moss troopers. He arrived at Appleton the last day of December, and the next morning my lord left his house, and with fewer than he expected, resolved to keep his day. At Arthington several gentlemen with their servants met him, but those he trusted to were Smythson, Bethel, Cholmeley, Alvred, who promis'd to meet him on Marston-moor, and they did not fail.

The night after my lord left his house, an officer of Lambert's army knocked at the gate at Arthington, and desiring to be brought to my lord; he delivered this message, My lord, I come from the Irish brigade, 1200 hors in rear of Lambert's army, who offer their service to your lordship, and desire to receive your commands. My lord desired they would meet him on Marston-moor, where he had appointed his friends, and there they all joyned. The day after, several regiments of Lambert's army came to us, declaring they would be commanded by none but their old general; but he bid them obey general Monk. In a day or two after, Lambert quitted his army, and went into the south.

General Monk visited my lord, as he went by York; they were shut up together in his closet, where my lord was freer in telling him his mind concerning a free parliament, and settling on the old foundations of government, than the general was with him. And he gave more occasion of being suspected before he got to London. This made my lord Fairfax and the rest of the gentlemen meet at York, where they agreed to write to him, declaring they would pay no taxes till the secluded members were restored, or a new parliament called. They desired my lord to write a particular letter to him, which he did, and sent it to the same person that went to Culdstream, who brought an answer, but in dubious expressions.

After the king's restauration, he made his last retreat into his own country,

May 19. OLIVER CROMWELL lieutenant general of the parliament army was then also created doct. of the civ. law. —He was conducted with Fairfax by the beadles towards the upper end of the convocation, the members thereof then standing bare, and was presented by Zanchy with a flattering speech in a most humble posture; which being done he that then held the chancellor's chair, who all the time stood up bare, admitted him with another flattering speech, by his authority or rather observance. Which being done Zanchy and the beadles conducted him to his place next on the left hand to the chancellor's chair.

This person, also who had a greater name in his time than Fairfax had, not only in England but throughout the whole world, (which he obtained more by policy, dissimulation under the cloak of religion, whether in prayer, preaching, discourse and action, rather than valour) must according to method have something said of him, which shall, with as much brevity as may, be done, because all histories ring of his fame as well as infamy.¹ Born therefore he was in the to a few friends and many books, which he could read in all modern languages. He loved pious and learned men of all persuasions. He was much afflicted with the gout and stone, but bore the pains with the same courage and patience he had shewn in the wars.

For his person he had a very strong and active body, disposed to all manly exercises, especially horsemanship, which he learnt of his grandfather. He had a soldier-like countenance, of a black complexion, long black hair, and a great cut on his left cheek, which he got at Marston-moor. In his face and behaviour he had a noble mixture of courage and modesty, a slowness of speech, till he was a little warmed. A late noble historian charges him with this defect, but he did not well know him.

When he waited on the king in his coming from Holmby and kiss'd his hand, which Cromwell and Ireton did not, his speech was short, but a sincere offer of his service, which his majesty rejected with as few words. Sir, I have as good an interest in your army as you have. This answer troubled my lord; and he used to say, it afflicted him more than all the blood he had lost, or colds he had got in all the war, to see the king trust those who meant to deceive him.

He had been long afflicted with the gout and stone, but it pleased God he dyed in no extremity of either, but a few day's sickness of a fever. The day of his death, he called for his Bible and read the 42 psalm, 'As the hart panteth,' &c. He complained his eyes were dim, and recommending his soul to God, died in peace Novemb. 11, 1671, ætat. 60. He was buried at Bilbrough the center of Yorkshire, and needs no other epitaph than that writ by the D. of Buckingham, which shews that he knew him and loved him.

¹ [If all the hypocrisy and dissimulation of the rump parliament could be crowded into one man, it might be found this one Oliver; so unacquainted with truth, that, unless to his owne creatures, he was only to be understood in reverse. Never were three jaded nations so tamely ridden by so meane a beggar. It's true that sometimes this nation hath changed their kings to preserve its liberties and constitutions, but then it exalted one of the royal blood (which is more than can be said of the Caroline and Capetian lines of France) to preserve them: whereas this fellow, uncalled by the nation, but by an army raised by his master (the parliament) twice depus'd by him, overthrowes the lawes, liberties and constitutions of the nation, to make way for his usurpation and tyranny. The first manifesto which he published after the dissolution of the rump, was under the title of 'I Oliver, general of parish of St. John in the antient borough of Huntingdon on the 24th of Apr. 1599 (41 of Elizab.) and was christned³ in that church on the 29th of the same month, where sir Oliver Cromwell his uncle gave him his name.⁴ His father, who lived in the same town, was Rob. Cromwell, second son of sir Hen. Cromwell of Hinchbrook in Huntingdonshire knt.⁵ (who died in 1603). His mother was Elizabeth sister⁶ to sir Thomas, son⁷ of sir Richard Steward knts, whence 'twas that when Oliver gaped after the protectorship, it was given out by those of his party, that he was descended of the royal blood,⁸ and had right to the crown of England. His said mother Elizabeth lived to see her son lord protector, and dying in Whitehall 18 Nov. 1634, was buried in king Hen. 7. chappel at Westminster, where her body continuing till after his majesty's restoration, was removed from that place, on the 12th of Sept. 1661, and buried with other Cromwellian bodies in a pit dug in St. Margaret's church-yard adjoining, where it now resteth. Oliver her son was educated in grammar learning in the free-school at Huntingdon under one Dr. Thomas Beard a minister in that town, and in academical in Sidney college in Cambridge,⁹ but his father dying while he was there, he was taken home and sent to Lincoln's inn to study the common law, but making nothing of it, he was sent for home by his mother, became a debauchee, and a boisterous and rude fellow. At length being reformed, and pretending to saintship, he married Elizabeth daughter of sir James Bouchier of Essex, became heir to his uncle, his mother's brother, spent the estate which was considerable, took a farm at St. Ives, thrived not, and therefore had intentions to go to New England, a receptacle for puritans and nonconformists; but that project taking not, he removed to the isle of Ely, where he more frequently and publicly own'd himself a preacher.¹ In 1640 he, by the endeavours of one Rich. Tynis, (afterwards alderman of Cambridge) who had several times heard him preach at Ely, was first made free of the corporation of Cambridge, then a Burgess thereof to sit in that unhappy parliament, which began at Westminster 3 Nov. 1640. Soon after, when the rebellion began, towards which he gave a considerable helping hand, he had a commission given to him to be a captain of horse, which he soon raised in his native country, and doing great service in those parts, he soon after was made a colonel, and at length lieutenant general to Edward earl of Manchester, who had the separate command in a distinct supremacy of the associated counties. Afterwards doing great service at Marston-moor near York, after sir Tho. Fairfax and the Scots had been totally routed there, Cromwell and his party of curassiers being then in the left wing, his atchievement was industriously cried up at Westminster, and all the grandees of scriptural ovation were fitted and accommodated thereunto. Within 4 months after, we find him in the second battel at Newbury in Berks, where the fates favoured him again, tho' not with a compleat victory, yet on that side where he fought, with a part of one; and so much as endangered the person of the king, if the noble and stout earl of Cleveland had not hazardingly interposed, and bore off the pursuit. Soon after the army being new modell'd, Essex the general was laid aside as unfortunate, and sir Thomas Fairfax being put into his place, Cromwell was made lieutenant general of the same army; from which time he continued, as Fairfax did, victorious, and upon all occasions did lull, and bewitch, with the syrene charms of his zealous insinuations, the said Fairfax to carry on his pernicious designs. Afterwards we find him the chief person, under the cloak of great dissimulation, of hurrying the king from place to place, of defaming him among the people, and bringing him to judgment: which done he sate with the rest of the judges on him, stood up when sentence was passed, and set his hand and seal to the warrant for his execution. Soon after, being made one of the council of state, he was ordained commander in chief or lord governour of Ireland, in June 1649, conquer'd there, returned and was made general of the parliament army upon Fairfax's laying down his commission. Afterwards he went into Scotland, did some feats there against king Charles II. but that king giving him the go-by, he followed him into England, encountered him at Worcester, conquer'd his party, and put him to flight. Thence he went to London, and was highly caressed by the citizens and parliament, and soon after dissolving the parliament, he called another, but that being not suitable to his designs, he dissolv'd that, and took upon him the protectorship; which he enjoyed during his life time. Under his name were published Many Letters written to the speaker of the house of commons, to the house of commons, sir Thomas Fairfax, committees, &c. containing relations of skirmishes, victories, taking of castles, towns, &c. as also some Speeches and Declarations, &c. By his wife Elizabeth before-mentioned, he had sons and daughters,² as (1) Rich. Cromwell, who being young when the war began did not bear arms, but several years after they were concluded he was made colonel and privy-counsellor in order to have the protectorship confer'd on him. (2) Henry Cromwell, afterwards commander of the general's life-guard, and at length on the 25th of Nov. 1657, was constituted lord lieutenant of Ireland, upon the recalling of Charles Fleetwood. He married the daughter of sir Francis Russell of Cambridgeshire knt. and bart. first a royalist afterwards a parliament colonel of foot under the earl of Manchester, and chamberlain of Chester. (3) Bridget the wife of Hen. Ireton, of whom I have made mention among the writers, an. 1651. After his death she was married to Charles Fleetwood before-mention'd, a gent. of Bucks, and a recruiter of the long parliament, afterwards a colonel in their service, a strong anabaptist, lord deputy of Ireland, one of Oliver's lords, and all the forces of England, Scotland and Ireland, by the advice of my army, &c. I confess I was stunn'd at the arrogance of it; yet in this tune he whistled to 144 of his owne gang and nomination (which was twelve-fold more than the tribes of Israel) to be the representatives of the nation, and upon these he tells them, he devolves the supream power of the nation, yet allows them but six times to sit. This was the 4 of July 1653. This thing calls itself a parliament too, and because Praise-God Barebone, a leather-seller, was a famous member in it, 'twas called Barebone's parl. which chose Rouse to be their speaker. Coke, Detection of the Court and State of England, vol. 2, lib. 3, cap. 2, p. 29.

He by manifold perjuries, deepest dissimulation and hypocrisie waded thro' a sea of blood in England, Scotland and Ireland, and then deposed them (the Rump parliament) who raised him; for which he murdered thousands, but for attempting to do which he had, &c. Ibid. p. 36. lieutenant general of the army, and major general of several counties in the time of Cromwell's protectorship. (4) Elizabeth the wife of John Cleypole a gentleman of Northamptonshire, made by Oliver master of the horse, one of his house of lords, and a knight and baronet 16th of July 1657, he being then clerk of the hammer. The said Elizabeth died 7 Aug.³ 1656, and was buried in Henry the seventh's chapel at Westminster, in a vault made on purpose. (5) Mary, the second wife of Thomas Hellasys viscount Fauconberg or Fauconbridge, married to him with a great deal of state at Hampton-Court on the 18th of Nov. 1637; much about which time he was made one of Oliver's lords. Several years after his majesty's restoration he was made captain of the guard of pensioners. (6) Frances the youngest daughter was married to Mr. Rob. Rich the only son of Robert lord Rich, son of Robert earl of Warwick, on the 11th of Nov. 1657, and about the same time was made one of Oliver's lords or of the other house. This Mr. R. Rich died on the 16th of Feb. 1637, his father on the 29th of May 1639, and his grandfather on the 18th of Apr. 1638. Oliver Cromwell had also four sisters; one of which was married to John Desborow a yeoman and a great lubberly clown, who by Oliver's interest became a colonel, and if not of the long, yet of the little, parliament, which he helped to break. About that time he became one of the generals at sea, helped to set up his brother-in-law protector, for which he was made one of his council, major general of divers counties in the west, one of the lords of the Cinque-ports, and of the other house, &c. Another sister was married to Roger Whetstone an officer in the parliament army, but he dying before Oliver came to his greatness, she was remarried to Joh. Jones a pretended gent. of Wales, a recruiter of the long parliament and a colonel, afterwards one of the king's judges, governor of the Isle of Angleson, one of the commissioners of parliament for the government of Ireland (in which office he acted tyrannically) and one of the other house, that is, house of lords belonging to Cromwell, &c. He was hang'd, drawn and quarter'd at Charing-cross for having had a hand in the murder of his prince, on the 17th of Oct. 1660. A third sister was married to Valentine Walton of Stoughton in Huntingdonsh. afterwards a col. in the parl. army, and one of the judges of king Charles I. After her death he married the dau. of one Pham of Brill in Bucks (widow of Austen of the same place) but upon the foresight of the return of monarchy he fled from justice to save his neck, settled either in Flanders or the Low Countries, and lived unknown for some time in the condition of a gardiner with a certain gentleman. At length being sick, and foreseeing he should die, discovered himself to have been a man of fashion, and desired that after his death his near relations in England might be acquainted with it. His said second wife retired after his m^{ty}. restoration to Oxon, and living in an obscure condition in Cut-street, died meely on the 14th of Nov. 1662, and was buried in St. Mary's church. A fourth sister named Robina was married to Peter French D. D. and after his death to Dr. John Wilkins as I have told you elsewhere, whereby she hung upon, and was maintained by the revenues of, the church to her last. Oliver Cromwell had several uncles, whose descendants taking not part with him, only one or two, they were not prefer'd by him. He had also five unts, the eldest of which named Joane was married to Francis Barrington, whose son Robert was countenanced by Oliver. The second named Elizabeth, was wife of John Hamden of Hamden in Bucks, father of John Hamden one of the 5 members of parliament excepted against by king Charles I. and a colonel for the parliament in the beginning of the rebellion; which John lost his life in their service in June 1643. By this match Oliver Cromwell came to be related to the Ingoldesbys and Goodwins of Bucks. The third, named Frances, was the second wife of Rich. Whalley of Kilton in Nottinghamshire, father to Edward Whalley a colonel in the parliament army, one of the king's judges, commissary general in Scotland, one of Oliver's lords, and a major general. He fled from justice upon the approach of the return of king Charles II. and lived and died in a strange land.

But now after these large digressions, let's return to the rest of the creations this year.

Feb. 16. JOAHUA CROSS⁴ lately of Line. coll. and sen. proctor, now fellow of that of Magd. and natural philosophy reader of the university by the authority of the committee and visitors, was then actually created doctor of the civil law by the favour of Fairfax and Cromwell lately in Oxon.—Soon after he left his fellowship, because he took to him a wife, but keeping his reader's place till his majesty's return, was then discharged of it by the commissioners appointed by his majesty for the regulation of the university.⁵ He died in his house near Magd. coll. 9 May 1676, aged 62 years, and was buried in the north aisle joyning to the chancel of the church of St. Peter in the East, within the city of Oxon.⁶

In a meeting of the delegates of the university the same day, just before the convocation began, wherein Cross was created, it was consulted among them, that some academical honour should be confer'd on THOMAS ZANCHY the proctor, then a colonel in Ireland for the service of the parliament. At length it was concluded that he should be adorned with the degree of doctor of the civil law in the beginning of the next year, but whether it was done, or that he was diplomated, it appears not.

Doctors of Physic.

JUNE 13. THOMAS SELATER M.A. of Trin. coll. in Cambr. bridge, was created by virtue of the commendatory letters of the chancellor of the university, which say, that he was put upon this recommendation by sir Thom. Widdrington, &c. This Thomas Selater was Burgess for the university of Cambridge to serve in Richard's parliament, an. 1638.

Feb. 16. JOHN WILKINSON sometime of Magd. hall, now one of the visitors of the university of Oxon, was created by virtue of a dispensation from the delegates.—He was nephew to Dr. John Wilkinson president of Magd. coll. and brother to Dr. Henry Wilkinson prime. of Magd. hall, lived afterwards at Doncaster in Yorkshire, where he practised among the godly party, and dying in 1635, was buried at Arksey near to that place. I have made mention of two of both his names that were writers, in these FARRI, among the D. of D. an. 1613, but this John the physician was no writer.

MAR. 7. WILL. PERRY, about this time fellow of Brasen. coll. was created by virtue of a dispensation from the delegates of the university, who had received sufficient testimony of his rare qualities and gifts from lieut. col. Ketsey the deputy governor of Oxford garrison.

Doctors of Divinity.

Jul. 24. DANIEL GREENWOOD batch. of div. sometime fellow of Brasen. coll. lately made principal of the said coll. by the committee and visitors, was then actually created doct. of div. — He was a severe and good governor as well in his vicechancellorship as principally, continued in his coll. till the king's return, and then being discharg'd by the king's commissioners to make room for Dr. Thom. Yate, he and his wife retired to Studely near Oxford, and continued there in a private condition till her death. Afterwards he lived in the house of his nephew Mr. Dan. Greenwood rector of Steeple-Anton near Deddington in Oxfordshire, where dying 29 January 1673, was buried in the chancel of the church there; and soon after had a mon. put over his grave.

July 24. {FRANC. CHEYNELL presid. of St. Joh. coll.
{HEN. WILKINSON senior, can. of Ch. Ch.
Dec. 18. JOHN WILKINS warden of Wadh. coll.

HENRY LANGLEY master of Pemb. coll. was created the same day. — This person, who was originally fellow of the same coll. was made master thereof by order of parliament, 26 Aug. 1647, and established therein by the visitors on the 8th of Octob. following, he being then one of the six ministers appointed by parliament, to preach at St. Mary's and elsewhere in Oxon, to draw off the scholars from their orthodox principles. In the beginning of the year following he was made canon of Ch. Ch. in the place of Dr. G. Morley ejected by the visitors; but being forced to leave his two places after his majesty's restoration, he retired to Tufney near Bezilla-Lee and Abingdon in Berks, where he instructed the sons of dissenting brethren in academical learning, as 'twas usually reported, and oftentimes preached in conventicles at Abingdon, of which place his father Thomas Langley had been a shoemaker. He died about the 10th of Sept. 1679, and was buried in St. Helen's church in Abingdon. One of both his names, minister of Treswell in Nottinghamshire, hath written and published The Chariot and Horsemen of Israel: An Analysis of the Lord's Prayer, or a Discourse of Prayer, &c. Lond. 1616. oct. "An Exposé on the Church Catechism," and other things, but whether he was ever of Oxon, I cannot tell.

About the same time when the two last persons were created, it was granted to HENRY CORNISH batch. of div. and canon of Ch. Ch. that he, if he please, might be actually created doct. of div. but he refused it and was not. This person, who was son of Will. Cornish of Ditchet in Somersetshire, was originally a poor scholar of New Inn, and an assistant to the butler there to put on (or enter) battles in the buttery book; and as he had been puritanically educated at home, so more under Dr. Rogers principal of the same inn. Afterwards he took the degr. in arts, and became a pulling preacher, left Oxon when it was garrison'd for his majesty, preached among the golly party, and was appointed by the parliament with Langley before-mention'd, Corbet, Cheynell, &c. to preach the scholars into obedience to the then powers: For which his service he was made canon of Ch. Ch. in the place of Dr. Rob. Sanderson ejected. After his majesty's restoration he was removed, and preached in these parts as a nonconformist till the five-mile act was made, and then retiring to Stanton Harcourt in Oxfordshire, where he was patronized by sir Philip Harcourt a favourer of such like persons, (as having been educated in their principles by one of the parl. generals named sir Will. Waller, who had married his mother) he lived and carried on the trade there for many years, and took all occasions to preach elsewhere, when the indulgences for tender consciences were granted, and did sometimes (after king Will. 3. came to the crown) preach in an antiquated dancing-school just without the north gate of Oxon, to which place many people did usually resort. Afterwards this meeting was translated to a house in St. Ebba's parish, where it now (1691) continueth, and is chiefly carried on by a certain person who has received some education in Cambridge, &c. In the year 1690, Mr. Cornish left Stanton Harcourt, and translated himself to a market-town in Oxfordshire called Blater, where he now holds forth. So that he who had been a licensed preacher by the blessed parliament, as it was by the brethren so called, and had been canon of Ch. Ch. and much respected by those of his persuasion while he lived in Oxon, for a godly man, doth now in his old age, being about 80 years old, preach in a barn in the said town of Blater for profit sake to silly women, and other obstinate people, such is the poor spirit of the person.

Feb. 16. EDWARD HINTON was then actually created doctor of the said faculty by the favour of the delegates of the university. — This person, who was son of a father of both his names of Marlborough in Wilts. minister of God's word, was elected prob. fellow of Mert. coll. 1629, (having been before post-master of that house) took his master's degree, became vicar of Malden in Surrey by the presentation of his coll. an. 1639, ran with the presbyterians in the beginning of the rebellion, and was a preacher up of sedition and discontent among them. After the war was ceased, he became rector of Islip in the county of Oxon, in the place, as I suppose, of a byast ejected, which by conformity after his majesty's restoration, and the death of the former incumbent, he kept to the day of his death. He hath published, The Vanity of Self-haunters, Sermon at the Funeral of Joh. Hammet Gent. late of Malden in Surrey, on Paul. 52. 1. Oxon. 1651. qu. He died 22 July 1676, and was buried in the chancel of the church at Islip: Whereupon Rob. South D. D. and prob. of Westminster, succeeded him in that rectory.

In the month of January this year, the delegates of the university gave leave to four persons thereof that they might supplicate the ven. congr. or convoc. for the degr. of doctor of div. viz. (1). THO. GOODWIN the new president of Magd. coll. but he being not yet settled, did not, nor more among the created doctors of div. 1653. (2) GEORGE MANASTON the new warden of New coll. who refused it. (3) ROW. PACHENY canon of Ch. Ch. but he being soon after turned out for denying the engagement, did not then take that degree. (4) RALPH BUTTON M. of A. orator of the univ. and canon of Ch. Ch. who being newly married, or upon the point of marriage, refused to be at the charge, and so continued in the degree of master all his life time. — This person, who was the son of Robert Button of Bishopston in Wiltshire, was originally of Exeter coll. where, being put under the tuition of a puritanical tutor, he made so great a progress in philosophical and other literature, that when he was bachelor of arts, he was recommended by Dr. Prideaux his rector to sir Nath. Brent warden of Merton coll. to stand for a fellowship there: Whereupon an election being appointed in 1633, very many stood, and twelve were chosen probationer fellows, whereof the said Ralph Button being one, Prideaux said after his joking way, that 'all the election besides him was not worth a button.' Afterwards he became a noted tutor in the house, and several of his pupils became some of them famous, and some infamous. When the rebellion began, he left Oxon, being puritannically affected, and especially because he would not bear arms for his majesty while Oxford was a garrison, or be any way contributory thereunto. When the war was ceased he returned, took pupils again, became one of the proctors (tho' out of course)⁸ in 1648, as I have before told you; and while he bore that office was, upon the refusal of Dr. E. Corbet, made canon of Ch. Ch. and orator of the university, in the place of the learned and religious Dr. H. Hammond. After his majesty's restoration he was discharg'd of his canonry and oratorship, and when he was in removing his goods from his lodgings in the cloister at Ch. Ch. to make room for Mr. Joh. Fell, he would usually say, when he heard the two little bells ring to canonical prayers, There now go the mass-bells, and let those that affected that way go to the church, for be sure I shall not, or words to that effect. Afterwards retiring with his family to London, he settled at Islington near to that city, where he preached in conventicles and taught youths to the time of his death; which hapning in the latter end of Octob. 1680, was buried in the church there, with his son, who died at, or near, the same time of a consumption.

† He died Sunday, Dec. 18, 1698. Ep. Kennet wrote and printed some Remarks upon his Life, Death, and Burial. Lond. 1699. 4to. Burrows. He died in the 80th year of his age, and was buried the 22d of that month in the church of Becket near Oxon. His funeral sermon was preached by John Ollyffe, rector of Deddington, Berks. upon which were some published, Some Remarks on the Life, Death and Burial of Mr. Henry Cornish, B. D. &c. Then came out the Sermon, with a preface, to testify some misrepresentation, &c. Both printed at Lond. 1699, 4to. WATKIN.]

AN. DOM. 1650. 2 CAR. II.

Chancellor.

The place of chancellor being void by the death of Philip earl of Pembroke, the visitors assumed the power thereof into their hands till the first of January this year: On which day a convocation being assembled, the then members of the university did unanimously chuse (leave being first granted by the committee to make choice of a fit person) OLIVER CROMWELL generalissimo of the parliament forces now on foot in England. Which office, (after he had been acquainted what the convocation had done by certain doctors and masters sent to him, then at Edinburgh in Scotland) he kindly accepted, and forthwith promised to be a friend to the university, by his canting letter sent thereunto dated at that place on the 4th of Feb. following, part of which runs thus, — 'But if these prevail not, (meaning some exceptions for the refusal of the office) and that I must continue this honour, until I can personally serve you, you shall not want my prayers, that that seed and stock of piety and learning (so marvelously springing up among you) may be useful to that great and glorious kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ; of the approach of which so plentiful an effusion of the spirit upon those hopeful plants is one of the best presages. And in all other things I shall by the divine assistance improve my poor abilities and interests in manifesting my self to the university, and your selves,' &c. Which letter being read in convocation, the members thereof made the house resound with their cheerful acclamations.

⁸ [But the parliament interposing in that affair seems to have been occasioned by what hapned the year before, when the proctors refusing to obey the directions of the visitors were ordered into custody. MACRO.]

Vice-Chancellor.

DANIEL GREENWOOD D. D. principal of Brasen. coll. 12 Oct. having been on the 12th of Sept. going before nominated and designed to that office by the committee for the reformation of the university, the chancellorship being then void.

Proctors.

Apr. 24. { THANKFUL OWEN of Linc. coll.
 { PHILIP STEPHENS of New coll.

These proctors were elected contrary to the Caroline cycle, which appointed Trin. and Wadh. colleges to elect this year. So that the cycle being interrupted (for those colleges did not chuse till the year following) it continued so till 1662, as I shall tell you when I come to that year.

Batchelors of Arts.

May 23. HAMLET PULESTON of Jes. coll.

Nov. 17. WILL. MASTERS of Mert. coll.

Dec. 16. ROB. LOVEL of Ch. Ch. — He was afterwards an excellent botanist, wrote Enchiridion Botanicum, &c. and other things, and therefore he is hereafter to be numbred among the writers, being, as I conceive, now living.

Feb. 7. { THOM. ASHTON } of Brasen coll.

Of the first of these two, you may see more among the masters 1653.

18. WILL. COLE of Mert. coll.

Mar. 11. JOH. HALL of Pemb. coll.

The last of these two was afterwards bishop of Bristol.

18. CHRISTOPHER WREN of Wadh. coll. — He was afterwards fellow of All-s. coll. and an eminent mathematician.⁹ Admitted 96.

This year THOM. CLIFFORD of Exeter coll. did supplicate for the degree of batch. of arts; but whether he was admitted it appears not. — This person,¹⁰ who was son of Hugh Clifford of Ugbrook in the parish of Chudleigh in Devonsh. col. of a regiment of foot in the first expedition against the Scots, by Mary his wife, daughter of George Chudleigh of Ashton in the said county baronet, was born there (at Ugbrook) on the first of Aug. 1630, became commoner of Exeter coll. 25 May 1647, and afterwards went to one of the inns of court, or to travel, or both, being then accounted by his contemporaries a young man of a very unsettled head, or of a roving, shatter'd brain. In the beginning of Apr. 1660, he was elected one of the burgesses for Totness in his own country, to serve in that parl. which began at Westm. on the 25th of the same month; and after his majesty's restoration, he was chose burgess again for the same place to serve in that parl. which began 8 May 1661; wherein shewing himself a frequent and forward speaker, especially in behalf of the king's prerogative, he was taken notice of by the great men at court, and thereupon taken into favour, and had the honour of knighthood confer'd upon him. Afterwards he attended James duke of York at sea, an. 1665, in the battel fought against the Dutch in the beginning of June, continued at sea also the same year when the fleet was commanded by Edward earl of Sandwich, and was in person at the expedition at Bergen in Norway: which attempt upon the Dutch in that port was made on the 2d of Aug. the same year. He was also in that year sent envoy to the two northern kings of Sweden and Denmark, with full power to conclude new treaties and alliances with them. In 1666 he attended his highness Pr. Rupert, and the duke of Albemarle, at sea against the Dutch, and was in that fight which continued on the 1st, 2d, 3d, and 4th days of June, being with the same generals also upon the 25th of July following in another great fight with the Dutch. On the 8th of Nov. following, his maj. gave him the white-staff of comptroller of his household, in the place of sir Hugh Pollard kt. and bt. who died the day before, and on the 5th of Decemb. following that, he was sworn of his maj. privy council, for his singular zeal, wherein he had, on all occasions, merited in his maj. service, and more eminently in the honourable dangers in the then late war against the Dutch and French, where he had been all along a constant actor, and, as 'twas observed, had made it his choice to take his share in the warmest part of those services. On the 12th of June 1668, died Charles visc. Fitzharding treasurer of his majesty's household; whereupon sir Tho. Clifford changed his white-staff, and was by his majesty advanced to that place the day following; and Francis lord Newport succeeded Clifford as comptroller: Much about which time his maj. by patent made him one of the lords commissioners of his treasury. In 1671 his maj. gave him a lease of 60 years of the pastures of Creslow in Bucks, and in the same year he finished a new chapel at Ugbrook, which was consecrated, and dedicated to St. Cyprian, by Anthony bishop of Exeter. Upon the death of sir Joh. Trevor, and in the absence of Henry earl of Arlington, he executed the office of secretary of state in the year 1672, until the return of the said earl from his embassy in Holland, and Mr. Hen. Coventry from his embassy into Sweden. On the 22d Apr. 1672, his maj. by patent created him baron Clifford of Chudleigh in Devonsh. and in Jun^y following he gave him and his heirs males the manors of Cannington and Rodway Fitzpayne in Somersetshire. ~~At~~ the 28th of Nov. the same year, his maj. valuing his many eminent services, and his great abilities and experience in the affairs of his treasury, he was pleased to advance him to the place of lord high treasurer of England, which had remained void since the death of Tho. late earl of Southampton: At which time his maj. confer'd the place of treasurer of the household on the lord Newport before-mention'd, and the place of comptroller on Will. lord Maynard. On the 29th of Mar. 1673, an act of parl. passed for the entailing of Ugbrook, and the rectory of Chudleigh on his lordship and the heirs of his body, and on the 19th of June following he resigning into his majesty's hands his staff, as lord treasurer, (because he, as 'twas said, refused the test) it was thereupon given by his maj. to sir Tho. Osborne knt. and bart. In the beginning of the winter following the lord Clifford died,¹ and was, as I suppose, buried at Chudleigh.²

12. JOHN WATERHOUSE, who had been a student for 18 years in Trin. coll. in Cambr. was then created doctor of phys. by virtue of the letters of Ol. Cromwell gen. of the parl. army and chanc. of this univ. which partly run thus—'Mr. Waterhouse went over into Ireland as physician to the army there, of whose diligence, fidelity and abilities I had much experience while I was there.—He constantly attended the army, and had to my knowledge done very much good to the officers and soldiers by his skill and industry.' Whether this Joh. Waterhouse hath published any thing I know not, sure I am that Edw. Waterhouse esq; of the same family⁹ hath; in order to which he had spent some time as a sojourner in Oxon, for the sake of the public library, in the time of Oliver. He hath written, A Discourse and Defence of Arms and Armory, shewing the Natures and Rises of Arms and Honour in England, from the Camp, the Court, the City, &c. Lond. 1660. oct. and wholly composed (as sir Will. Dugdale hath informed me) a book entit. The Sphere of Gentry: deduced from the Principles of Nature. An historical and genealogical Work of Arms and Blazon, in 4 Books. Lond. 1661. fol. published under the name of a busy and pragmatistical person called Sylvanus Morgan an arms-painter living sometimes near the Old Exchange in London. 'Tis a rapsodical, indigested and whimsical work, and not in the least to be taken into the hands of any sober scholar, unless it be to make him either laugh or wonder at the simplicity of some people. This Edw. Waterhouse esq; one of the Royal Society and a cock-brain'd man (who hath published other things¹ as the Bodleian catalogue will tell you) did afterwards, by the persuasion of the archb. of Canterbury, take holy orders on him, and became a fantastical preacher. He died near London an. 1671.

Masters of Arts.

May 29. DANIEL GREENWOOD of Brasen. coll.—This person, who was son of Joh. Greenwood, was born at Sowerby in the vicaridge of Halifax in Yorksh. became scholar of Christ's coll. in Cambr. an. 1645, or thereabouts, where spending as much time as made him capable for the degree of batch. of arts, went to Oxon, and by the endeavours of his uncle Dr. Dan. Greenwood principal of Brasen. coll. was made fellow of that house in 1648, in which year several of the ancient fellows thereof were ejected for their loyalty. In 1653 he became rector of Steeple Aston near Deddington in Oxfordshire, by the presentation thereunto of the princ. and fellows of his coll. and wrote and published (1) Sermon at Steeple-Aston in Oxfordshire, at the Funeral of Mr. Franc. Croke of that Place, 2 Aug. 1672; on Isa. 57. 1. 2. Oxon. 1680. qu. (2) *Serm. at the Funeral of Alex. Croke of Studley in Oxfordsh. May 29. RICH. ADAMS of Brasen. coll.²—He was a minister's son of Worrall in Chesh. and originally of Cambridge, where he was examined and admitted in arts, 26 Mar. 1644. Afterwards he went to Oxon, when the garrison thereof was surrendered to the parliament, was admitted a student of Brasen. coll. 24 Mar. 1646, aged 20 years, and soon after made fellow thereof. In 1655 he left his fellowship, being about that time beneficed at St. Mildred's Breadstreet in London, and in 1662 he was removed for nonconformity,³ from which time to this he hath continued a nonconformist preacher, and now liveth, if I mistake not, in Southwark. Under his name hath been published several sermons, as (1) The Duties of Parents and Children; on Col. 3, 20, 21.—'Tis in the Supplement to the Morning Exercise at Cripplegate. Lond. 1674. and 76. qu. (2) Of Hell; on Mat. 24. 41.—'Tis in The Morning Exercise methodized, &c. preached at St. Giles's in the Fields in May 1659. Lond. 1676. qu. Charnock's book entit. A Treatise of divine Providence, &c. Before which they put an epist. to the reader giving a short (but imperfect) account of the said Charnock's life. See among the writers in Steph. Charnock, an. 1680.

Jun. 18. { EDW. BAGSHAW of Ch. Ch.
HEN. FEDES of Linc. coll.

Of the first of these two is large mention made among the writers: The other was originally of Cambridge, where he performed his exercise for batch. of arts. Afterwards going to Oxon, he entred himself into Magd. hall, where continuing till the ejection of the loyal fellows of Linc. coll. was made by the visitors in 1648, he was by them put in fellow there, where he behaved himself very factious and turbulent. On the 1st of May 1660 he resign'd his fellowship, otherwise had he tarried there a little longer, he had been expell'd. About which time, by money and friends, he obtained one or two rich parsonages, and in 1662 became canon residentiary of Chichester, and afterwards doctor of div. at Cambridge. This is the person, who shewed himself a zealous brother for the interest and party of James duke of Monmouth, for whose title to the crown speaking certain matters at Chichester, he was on the 10th of Feb. 1685 tryed upon an information of high misdemeanour; of which being found guilty, he was thereupon committed to the King's Bench prison.

July 8. { DAN. CAPELL of Magd. coll.
THO. COLE of Ch. Ch.

The first of these two is mention'd among the writers; the other, who was the son of Will. Cole of London gent. was educated in Westm. school, and thence elected student of Ch. Ch. In 1656 he became principal of St. Mary's hall, but being ejected thence by the king's commissioners in 1660, he lived afterwards a nonconformist, kept a boarding-school, and taught youths of the presb. and indep. persuasion, at, or near, Nettlebed in Oxfordshire. Under his name hath been publish'd (1) How we may steer an even Course between Presumption and Despair; on Luke 3. 5, 6. printed in the Supplement to the Morning Exercise at Cripplegate. Jul. 10. JOSIAH BANGER of Magd. coll.—This person, who was son of Bern. Banger M. A. and rector of Yerlington in Somersetshire, became fellow of Trin. coll. this year. He hath written An Alarm to secure Sinners: or, God discovered to be as well a burning as shining Light. Lond. 1676. oct. This is the same, I suppose, which was several years before printed under the title of A serious Item to secure Sinners. Apr. 9. WILL. STEPHENS a parliament man, and one of the judges of the admiralty, was openly declared in convocation doctor of the civil law by a diploma then dated, by virtue of a statute tit. x. §. 4. 'quo magnates vel nobiles honoris causâ gradus academicos intra universitatem dignentur,' as it is said in the publ. reg. of this time. He died in 1658, being then an inhabitant of the isle of Wight.

Jul. 3. EDW. WISE of Exeter coll. esq; who had spent some terms in Cambr. was actually created batch. of arts.—On the 24th of July 1652, it was granted by the delegates of the univ. that he the said Edw. Wise (ex nobili stemmate ortus, as they say) might be admitted to the degree of mast. of arts in congregation; but whether he was really admitted it appears not.

Sept. 9. SIR THOM. HONYWOOD of Essex knt. was actually created doct. of the civ. law.—This person, who was brother-in-law to sir Hen. Vane, (the same who was beheaded in 1662) was a committee-man in the time of the long parliament that began 3 Nov. 1640, was also a military man, appear'd as such against the royalists in Colchester, and led as a colonel, a regiment of Essex men to fight at Worcester against king Charles II. an. 1651. To which place coming in good time, he endeavoured to shew his valour against kingship, and the house of Stuarts. In 1654, he was one of the knights to serve for Essex in that parliament began at Westm. the 3d of Sept. the same year, and a knight again for the same county in that parl. which began at the same place 17 Sept. 1656; both which parliaments were called by Oliver lord protector: And being a man soft in spirit, and too easy, like a nose of wax, to be turn'd on that side where the greatest strength then was, was taken into Oliver's court, and by him made one of the other house, that is the house of lords. One sir Rob. Honeywood, his near relation, was made one of the council of state about the 16th of May 1659, but had no degree confer'd on him in this university as I can yet find.

THOM. COOKE a colonel of the county of Essex, was created doct. of the civ. law the same day *. One col. Cooke served the parl. while the war lasted between it and the king. Afterwards he went into Ireland to fight against the rebels, was made governour of Wexford there, and in Apr. 1652, he was slain in a skirmish with the rebels near that place.—This person I take to be the same with Tho. Cooke before-mention'd.

* I take this person to be the same with Thom. Coke of Felmersh in Essex who was chosen one of the knights for the said county to serve in that parliament that began at Westm. 1654. First edit.

Sept. 9. { JOACHIM MATTHEWS } created doct. of the civ.
 { CHRISTOP. EARLE }

The first of these three was afterwards a commissioner of the county of Essex for the ejecting of such whom the godly party then (1654) called scandalous and ignorant ministers and schoolmasters, and the same year was chosen burgess for Malden (of which he was recorder) in the same county to serve in parliament, being then a justice of peace, and an inhabitant of Havering. In 1656, and 59, he was elected burgess again for the same place to serve in the two parliaments called in those years by Oliver and Richard, being then a leading and forward man for the cause then drove on and professed. He was father to Philip Matthews of Great Gobions within the liberty of Havering in Essex, created baronet the 13th of June 1662. The second, Herlakinden, was a commissioner or committee-man for the said county of Essex, a godly brother, and a leading man in the times of usurpation, as Earle was.

This person was usually called Dean Harry, as I have told you among the writers, under the year 1690.

Incorporations.

Apr. 8. { SAMUEL COLLINS } doct. of phys. of Padua.

{ GEORGE MEDE }

These two had been travellers together, and took their degree of doct. of phys. in the said univ. of Padua, in Aug. 1651. See in the year 1659.

JUNE 24. HENR. SALTONSTAL a knight's son, fellow of New coll. by the favour of the visitors, and doct. of phys. of Padua, was then incorporated. —The said degree he took at Padua in Oct. 1649.

29. THO. JAMES or JEANES B. of A. of Cambr. now of Magd. coll. in this univ. was then incorporated. —He was admitted mast. of that faculty 6 Jul. this year. See among the doct. of phys. an. 1659.

AUG. 9. THOM. HORTON D. of D. of Cambr.³ and master of Queen's coll. therein, was then incorporated in convocation. —This person, who was son of Laur. Horton citizen of London, was born in that city, bred in Emanuel coll. of which he became fellow, and a noted tutor to young presbyterian scholars, among whom John Wallis was one. In 1637 he was constituted one of the public preachers of the university of Cambr. and in 1638, or thereabouts, he became minister of St. Mary Cole-church in the city of his nativity. Afterwards he was preacher to the society of Greys inn, reader of divinity in Gresham coll.⁴ a holder-forth sometimes

³ [He was D. D. at Cambr. 1649, being then master of Queen's. BAKER.]

⁴ [Though the will of sir Thomas Gresham obliged the Gresham professors to quit their fellowships when they married, yet Horton, by Thurloe's interest, got a dispensation from Cromwell and his council to continue in his, which he did till the restoration; but then he was ejected both from that, and from his headship of Queen's college: but Horton had interest enough to obtain from the king a dispensation to hold his professorship, but this he did only till the Savoy conference in 1661, and then the dispensation was revoked, and Mr. Gifford (who had formerly been chosen) was made professor in Horton's room. That year Horton was in the number of those divines who were silenced by the Bartholomew act, but he conformed afterwards, and was made vicar of Great St. Helens in Bishopsgate-street, London, and held it to his death. At the Savoy conference he was nominated as an assistant on the side of the presbyterians, but he never came among them. MACAO.]

before the long parliament, vicar of Great St. Helen's in London,⁵ and one of the triers or commissioners appointed for the approbation of public preachers, an. 1653. He was esteemed by those of the presbyterian persuasion a sound and solid divine, a good textuary, and well skill'd in the original languages. Under his name hath been published,⁶

(3) One hundred select Sermons upon several Texts: fifty upon the Old Test. and fifty on the New. Lond. 1679, fol. He also, with William Dillingham D. D. and master of Emanuel coll. did publish A Chain of Principles: or an orderly Concatenation of Theological Aphorisms and Exercitations, wherein the chief Heads of Christian Religion are asserted and improved, Lond. 1660, written by John Arrowsmith D. D. master of St. John's and Trin. coll. successively, and the king's professor of div. in the university of Cambridge: published since his death according to his own manuscript. This Dr. Horton died in 1673,⁷ and was, I presume, buried in the church of Helen before-mention'd, leaving then behind him a relict called Dorothy, who administered 28 Aug. the same year.

Nov. 19. STEPH. CHARNOCK M. A. of Eman. coll. in Cambr.⁸ now fellow of New coll. by the favour of the visitors.

Dec. 6. THO. CROYDON doct. of phys. of Padua.⁹—The same degree he took at Pad. 30 Oct. 1648.

Jan. 14. WILL. HARRINGTON doctor of the civil law of Cambridge.

16. WILL. SQUIRE lately batchelor of arts of Trinity hall in Cambridge.

27. GABRIEL DE BEAUVOIR of the isle of Guernsey, doctor of physic of Padua.—This person, who was the son of Char. de Beauvoir, took the said degree at Pad. in the latter end of Oct. 1648.

Creations.

June 17. JONATHAN MAUD a student in physic 17 years, was then actually created doctor of that faculty by virtue first of an order from the committee, and secondly by virtue of the letters of the chancellor of the university dated 29 May 1650 (rather 51) which say that 'his conversation is pious and sober, and that he hath been a constant friend to the parliament,' &c.

24. SAMPSON EYTON of University coll. (lately made fellow thereof by the visitors) who had spent 8 years in study in Harwarden coll. at Cambridge in New England, was then actually created M. of A. by virtue of the delegates order.

Dec. 22. JOHN BONCLE commonly called BUNKLEY, was actually created M. of A. by virtue of the chancellor's letter (Oliver Cromwell) which speak very honourably in his behalf, as that 'his eminent learning and worth is such that I account that I may very freely commend him unto you.—He is known to learned men.—He is like to adorn that degree (viz. master of arts.)—A considerable ornament to the university,' &c. The same day he was elected superior beadle of divinity (in the place of John Blagrove deceased) by virtue of the letters from the said chancellor also. But Boncle being soon after made master of the Charter-house school near London in the place of Sampson Wilson removed to a living in Peterborough,¹ he resigned his beadleship in the year following. Afterwards he became master of Eaton school and fellow of the coll. there: whence being remov'd after the restoration of king Charles II. he became master of the school in Mercers chappel in London, where he was living in 1673.

In the latter end of July this year, RALPH AUSTEN deputy registry to the visitors, for Will. Woodhouse, and registry afterwards in his own right, was entred a student into the public library, to the end that he might find materials for the composition of a book which he was then meditating. The book afterward he finished and entit. it A Treatise of Fruit-trees, shewing the Manner of Grafting, Planting, Pruning, and Ordering of them in all Respects, according to new and easy Rules of Experience, &c. Oxon, 1657, sec. edit. qu. Ded. to Sam. Hartlib esq; This book was much commended for a good and rational piece by the honourable Mr. Rob. Boyle, who, if I mistake not, did make use of it in a book or books which he afterwards published: and it is very probable that the said book might have been printed more than twice had not he, the author, added to, and bound with it, another treatise as big as the former entit. The spiritual Use of an Orchard, or Garden of Fruit-Trees, &c. Which being all divinity and nothing therein of the practice part of gardening, many therefore did refuse to buy it. He hath also written A Dialogue, or familiar Discourse and Conference between the Husbandman and Fruit-Trees, in his Nurseries, Orchards and Gardens: wherein are discovered many useful and profitable Observations and Experiments in Nature in the Ordering of Fruit-Trees for temporal Profit, &c. printed 1676, 79. in oct.² much of the former book, is, I presume, involv'd in this. This Mr. Austen, who was either a presbyterian or independent I know not whether, was a very useful man in his generation, and spent all his time in Oxon to his death, in planting gardens there and near it, in grafting, inoculating, raising fruit-trees, &c. He was born in Staffordshire, and dying in his house in the parish of St. Peter in the Baylie in Oxon, was buried in the church belonging thereunto, in the isle joyning on the south side of the chancel, on the 26th of Oct. 1676, after he had been a practiser in gardening and planting fruit-trees 50 years.

CHARLES PERROT OF PERROT of Oriel coll.—This person was born at Radley near Abingdon in Berks, had spent some time in travel to learn the modern languages, returned a well bred gentleman, wrote two or more political pamphlets in defence of the prerogative, without his name set to them, and therefore he would not publicly acknowledge, or communicate the titles of, them to me. See in March. Nedham among the writers, an. 1678. This Mr. Perrot, who was fellow of Oriel coll. died on the 23d of Apr. 1677, aged 45 or thereabouts; his father being then living: whereupon his body was buried near to that of his grandfather Rob. Perrot gentleman, and by that of his mother Elizabeth, daughter of sir Will. Stonehouse of Radley before-mentioned, in the chancel of the church of North-Lee near to Witney in Oxfordshire.⁴

Oct. 11. THOM. ASHTON of Brasen-n. coll.—This forward and conceited scholar, who was son of a father of both his names, was born at Cuerdley in Lancashire, admitted servitor of the said coll. 13 June 1647, aged 16 years, took a degree in arts and then was made fellow thereof. After he had proceeded in that faculty he became straightway a malepert preacher in and near Oxon: and at length having a turn to preach at St. Mary's on Tuesday, a lecture day, 25 July 1654, he did then deliver a very offensive sermon preached on Job. 37. 22. With God is terrible Majesty. In which sermon speaking of the attributes of God, particularly of that in the text, he took a hint from the word terribilis, (which might, as he said, signify with some terra bilis) to say that God was a Melancholy God, &c. and in the conclusion to maintain that 'those that had no teeth to gnash, should gnash their gums,' &c. For which sermon he being call'd into question, was in a fair way of expulsion, but by the intercession of friends, the business was compromised: yet two years after he was forced to leave his fellowship

⁴ [See an account of Perrot in the notes to the Life of Wood in the first vol. of these Ann. and Fasti, page xxxiv. To which I am enabled by the kind and ready communication of the provost of Oriel, Dr. Copleston, to add the following particulars. Charles Perrot was entered a commoner of Oriel in 1645; B.A. in 1649; elected fellow in 1652, or rather nominated by the visitors (in whom the power of such appointment was then lodged) at the unanimous request of the college. M.A. 1653. Feb. 12, 1654-5, had leave to travel for two years; was dean of the college 1659, and was licensed to study civil law in 1661. upon some quarrel between him and Dr. Greenwood principal of his house. Afterwards he was intrusted with a commission from Oliver to be chaplain to the English forces in Jersey, an. 1656, where continuing for some time in preaching, suffered soon after in his relations, reputation, salary, &c. by a new governour placed there, who forced him, as it seems, thence. He hath published (1) Blood-thirsty Cyrus unsatisfied with Blood. Or the boundless Cruelty of an Anabaptist's Tyranny, manifested in a Letter of Colonel John Mason Governour of Jersey, 3 Nov. 1659, wherein he exhibits seven false, ridiculous and scandalous Articles against Quarter-Master Will. The first of these four was afterwards fellow of the coll. of phys. and physician in ord. to king Charles 2.

15. MARTIN LUELLEYN of Ch. Ch.

Dec. 14. ROB. FIELDING of Bal. coll.—He was afterwards honorary fellow of the coll. of phys.

✠ Not one doctor of divinity was admitted, or licensed this year.

Incorporations.

May 14. { THO. WOLFUS
JOHN CLERK } doct. of phys. of Padua.

21. THOMAS PEPYS

The first was afterwards fellow of the coll. of physicians, and the second is the same, I suppose, with him who published Disputatio medica de Illo vero. I find one John Clark to have been doct. of the laws of Doctors Commons in Lond.

who died in the latter end of the year 1672, but whether ever of Oxon, I cannot yet tell.⁵ See another Joh. Clerk among the created doctors of phys. 1660. As for the third I know nothing of him.⁶

June 13. WALT. MILLS doct. of phys. of Leyden.—He was afterwards one of the coll. of physicians.

WILL. WHITAKER doct. of the same faculty of Francker in West Freisen.⁷—He was afterwards, as I conceive, one of the coll. of physicians, and lived several years in good repute for his learning in the parish of St. Andrew in Holborn near London, but died in the parish of St. Clement Danes within the liberty of Westminster in the month of Dec. or beginning of Jan. 1670. He hath written The Tree of Life, or Blood of the Grape, &c. pr. in oct. and perhaps other things. Qu. I have made mention of a learned divine of both his names in the FASTI of the first volume, and another (a nonconformist) in this, in THO. JACOMBE under the year 1687.

July 12. JOHN SHERMAN M. of A. of Cambridge.⁸—He was afterwards archd. of Salisbury. See in Josh. Childrey among the writers an. 1670.

ROB. DIXON M. A. of the same university, was incorporated on the said day.—I take this person to be the same Rob. Dixon who was afterwards doct. of div. and prebendary of Rochester, author of (1) The Degrees of Consanguinity and Affinity described and delineated, Lond. 1675, oct. (2) The Nature of the two Testaments, or the Disposition of the Will and Estate of God to Mankind, &c. In two Volumes: the first of the Will of God, the second of the Estate of God, Lond. 1676, 77. fol. and of other things, as 'tis probable.

ISAAC BARROW M. A. of Trin. coll. in the same university,⁹ was incorporated on the said day.—In the next year he took a long journey into several foreign countries, and returned a compleat master of divers languages. In 1660 he was chose Greek professor of Cambr. and two years after, on the death of Laur. Rooke, geometry lecturer in Gresham coll. In 1672 he was elected master of Trin. coll. being then in great esteem for his learning and accomplishments: and dying on the fourth day of May 1677, aged 47 years, was buried in the south cross isle of St. Peter's, commonly called the abbey, church in the city of Westminster. His works were afterwards collected and published by Dr. Joh. Tillotson, an. 1683; before the first of which is a full account of the life of the said Isaac Barrow, to which I refer the reader.

These three last, Sherman, Dixon and Barrow were of the number of 25 Cambridge masters of arts that were incorporated just after the act this year.

He was afterwards doct. of that faculty, chaplain to his majesty Charles II. and well beneficed if not dignified. He hath written and published (1) The Christian's Map of the World: drawn at the Solemn Funerals of Henry Chitting Esq; Chester-Herald at Arms, inter'd 11 Jan. 1637, Lond. 1637, oct. 'Tis a sermon preached at the said Chitting's funeral 11 Jan. 1636, on Heb. 13. ver. 14. In other editions this title is contracted. (3) Devotions on the 5th of Nov. 30th of Jan. and 29th of May, &c. Lond. 1666, oct. These were afterwards added to some of the editions of Scintilla Altaris, and consist of prose, poems, sculptures, &c. He hath other things extant, as 'tis probable, but such I have not yet seen. This person, who was living at Tottenham High-cross near Lond. in 1675 (where I presume he was beneficed) had a son of both his names, batchelor of the laws and fellow of St. Joh. coll. in Oxon; who dying on the last day of Nov. 1675, was buried in the chappel there, and soon after had a comely mon. set over his grave by his father.

HENRY MAISTERSON D. D.^a and fellow of St. Joh. coll. in Camb. was then (Jul. 12.) incorporated.—He was afterwards beneficed at Nantwich in Cheshire, and died in 1671.

These two last were also incorporated just after the celebration of the act.

JOH. WIDCHENNIUS }

These three who were actually M. of A. were retainers to the ambassador of Christina queen of Sweedland to the commonwealth of England.

Dec. 23. JOHN OWEN M. A. dean of Ch. Ch. and vice-chancellor of the university, was then (he being at Lond.) diplomated doct. of div.—He is said in his diploma to be in palestra theologia exercitatissimus, in concionando assiduus & potens, in disputando strenuus & acutus, &c. His dipl. was dated the 22d, and read and sealed in convocation on the 23d of Dec. this year.

THOM. GOODWIN president of Magd. coll. and batch. of div. of several years standing, was then also, Dec. 23, diplomated D. of D.—This person, who is said in the common register to be 'in scriptis in re theologicâ quamplurimis orbi notus,' was born in the county of Norfolk, educated for a time in Christ's coll. in Cambridge, then in Katharine hall, of which he was fellow.⁴ Afterwards disliking conformity, he removed (as others did) beyond the seas into Holland to avoid the censures of episcopal consistories; where remaining till the beginning of the long parliament, he returned, and became one of the assembly of divines at Westminster:⁴ but disliking their proceedings, he left them and about the same time had preferment confer'd upon him. At length upon the increasing of the independents, he, being one himself, struck in with Oliver Cromwell, became his favorite, and by his power president of Magd. coll. about the beginning of Jan. 1649, purposely to promote the independent cause in this university, which he afterwards did to the purpose by his constant preaching at St. Mary's, by his sometimes preaching in his coll. chappel, and by his setting up and continuing a weekly meeting in his lodgings in the said coll. where all those that were to enter into that fraternity were openly to make a confession of their sins, &c. In 1653 he was one of the prime men appointed by ordinance to be a trier or commissioner for the approbation of public preachers, and the year following he was appointed one of the assistants to the commissioners of Oxfordshire, for the ejection of such, whom the saints of that time called scandalous, ignorant and insufficient ministers and schoolmasters, that is, loyal and orthodox divines; whom, especially such that had rich benefices or well endowed schools, he sure they ejected, and either took their benefices themselves or confer'd them on their confiding brethren or those of their church. In the beginning of the year 1660 he was removed from his presidency to make room for Dr. Joh. Oliver; whereupon retiring to London, lived mostly in the parish of Great St. Bartholomew, where dying 23 Feb. 1679, aged 80 years, was buried in a little vault towards the east end of the new burial place for dissenters, joyning on the north side of the new artillery-yard or garden by Bunhill fields near London. Over the vault was soon after erected an altar-monument, with a large inscription thereon engraven,⁵ made by the common epitaph-maker for dissenters called Tho. Gilbert batch. of div. now a nonconformist living in Oxon. After his death, his works consisting of Expositions, Sermons, Theological Discourses, &c. were gathered together and published in two volumes in fol.⁶ (with his picture before them much resembling the author while living) by Thankful Owen and Jam. Baron.—Lond. 1681: before which is a canting preface written by the said two persons, wherein many things are said of the author and his learning. See in Phil. After his majesty's restoration he re-assumed his former fac. of divinity, became one of the royal society, president of his coll. one of his majesty's chaplains, and on the 28th of June 1670 was installed dean of Wells, upon the promotion of Dr. Rob. Creighton to the see of Bath and Wells. In Apr. 1691² he was nominated by their majesties bishop of Bristol, with liberty to keep his deanery in commendam, but he refused it, because he was minded to carry on his benefaction to his coll. being then about to re-edify the chappel thereof, and to do good thereunto and his church of Wells. He is accounted a most celebrated Latin poet, as it appears by those many copies of verses of his that are extant, some of which are made public in a book lately printed at the theatre in Oxon, entit. Musarum Anglicanarum Analecta, &c. printed in oct. He is a learned, pious and meek divine, but hath published nothing.

SETH WARD of Wadh. coll. Savilian professor of astron. was admitted in the same convocation.

May 31. JOHN WALLIS of Ex. coll.⁴ Savilian professor of geometry.⁵—About this time arose a controversy between Dr. Wallis, and Dr. Ward before-mention'd concerning seniority in doctorship.⁶ Wallis aver'd that he was incorporated M. of A. of this university before Ward and therefore 'twas his, but it appearing that Ward stood first in the proctor's book at Cambridge (for they proceeded in arts both in one year) the vice-chancellor Dr. Owen decided the matter on Ward's behalf: whereupon Wallis went out grand compounder, and so got seniority not only of Ward but of the rest that proceeded in divinity this year. Dr. Wallis was afterwards, against oath and statute, elected Custos Archivorum in the place of Dr. Langbaine, at which time stood for that office one every way capable of it, viz. Dr. Rich. Zouche; which being a most unjust act, as being carried on and done by the godly brethren, therefore did Hen. Oct. 11. JOSEPH GLANVILLE }

The first of these two, who did not compleat his degree by determination, was born of an antient and genteel family at St. Ives near to the land's end in Cornwall, bred in the said coll. in the condition of a sojourner under the tuition of Francis Howell, and after he had left the university, took orders according to the presbyterian way, and was a constant preacher at the place of his nativity for two years. In Oct. 1659 he removed to the vicaridge of Milar and Mabe in Cornwall, where continuing till 1662, was silenc'd because he would not conform according to the act of uniformity then published. Afterwards preaching in private and in conventicles, he was several times brought into trouble and imprison'd. At length giving way to fate at Penryn on the 18th of Jan. 1670, was published the next year a little book entit. The Life and Death of Thomas Tregosse late Minister of the Gospel at Milar and Mabe in Cornwall, with his Character. Lond. in oct. and at the end are The Letters of Thomas Tregosse: all written according to the presbyterian mode.

22. { FRANC. CROSS } of Wadh. coll.
 { GILB. IRONSIDE }

Franc. Cross who was of Stock-Gomer in Somerseshire and had been fellow of Wadh. coll. went after his majesty's restoration to Leyden in Holland, where he had the degree of doct. of physick confer'd on him; and afterwards retiring to the city of Bristol, practised there with good success among the precise party. He hath written and published, Disputatio medica inauguralis de Febre intermittente, hab. in alm. Lugd. Bat. Academiâ pro Grad. Doct. in Med. &c. 19 May 1664, Oxon, 1668, oct. He died in the parish of St. Walburgh in the said city of Bristol in the year 1675, and was, I presume, buried in the church belonging to that parish.

Jun. 28. THOM. LAWRENCE of St. Alb. hall.—This person, who was an apothecary's son of London, became a student in Mert. coll. in the beginning of the year 1649, and did for some time participate of the exhibition of Joh. Willyot there. But being forced to leave that house for some extravagancies by him committed, he retired to the said hall of St. Alban; where he continued two or three years after he had completed the degree of master, and studied physick. Afterwards he practised that faculty in Norfolk, and was of some eminence there, especially upon his writing and publishing—Mercurius Centralis: Or, a Discourse of subterranean Cockle, Muscle and Oyster-shells, found in the digging of a Well at Sir Will. Doyly's in Norfolk, many foot under Ground, and at considerable Distance from the Sea; sent in a Letter to Tho. Browne Doctor of Physick, Lond. 1664, in 5 sh. in oct. He died in Norfolk some years after.

and was made fellow thereof on the 2d of June 1652. After he had taken the degree of master, he became a frequent preacher in these parts, was removed from his fellowship in 1662 for nonconformity, went to London, and carried on his nonconformity, by preaching in conventicles. He hath written, The main Principles of Christian Religion, in 107 short Articles or Aphorisms, generally received, as being prov'd from Scripture; now further cleared and confirmed by the consonant Doctrine recorded in the Articles and Homilies of the Church of England, under four Heads, viz. of things to be, 1. Believed, &c. Lond. 1675, and 77. oct. much about which time the author died.

Jul. 4. ROB. HARRISON of Ch. Ch.—This person, who was born at Doncaster in Yorkshire, and uterine brother to Dr. Hen. Wilkinson princ. of Magd. hall, was made student of Ch. Ch. by the visitors in 1648, and being afterwards beneficed, publish'd two sermons, viz. On Am. 5. 23, 24. and another On Prov. 13, 34. &c.

GEORGE BORASTON of Wadh. coll. was admitted the same day.—He hath published The royal Law, or the golden Rule of Justice and Charity: Sermon at the Anniversary Meeting of the Gentlemen, Inhabitants of London, and others, born within the County of Worcester; at St. Laurence Ch. 29 Nov. 1683; on Matth. 7. 12. Lond. 1684. qu. and perhaps other things. His father was minister of Beaudley in the same county, at which place the author of the said sermon was born; and some years after he had left the university, he was presented to the rectory of Hever in Kent by Dr. Gunning, while he was bishop of Chichester.

Jul. 6. HEN. HALLYWELL of Brasen coll.—I set him down here not that he was a writer, but to distinguish him from another of both his names who was one, master of arts and sometime fellow of Chr. coll. in Cambr. and afterwards minister of Iffeld in Sussex:⁴ who, among several things that he hath published, hath written (1) An Account of Familism, as it is revived and propagated by the Quakers, &c. Lond. 1673. oct. Answer'd by Will. Penn a quaker sometime gent. com. of Ch. Ch. (2) A Vindication of the Account of Familism, from the impertinent Cavils of Will. Penn. Lond. in oct. (3) The sacred Method of saving humane Souls by Jesus Christ. Lond. 1677. oct. (4) Melampronoea: or, a Discourse of the Policy and Kingdom of Darkness. Together, with a Solution of the chiefest Objections brought against the Being of Witches. Lond. 1682. oct. Incorporations.

Jul. 11. JASPER NEEDHAM M. of A. of Peter house in Cambr.⁶—This person, who was at this time, and the year, before a student in this univ. for the sake of the public library, was afterwards doct. of physic, one of the coll. of phys. and eminent for the practice of it in London. He paid his last debt to nature on the 31st of Octob. 1679, aged 57 years: Whereupon his body was buried in the middle of the church of St. Bride, alias Bridget, near Fleetstreet in the said city. There is a monument, not over his grave, but on the south-wall at the upper end of the south-alley or isle joyning to the said church. One of his surname and family, called Walter Needham doct. of phys. honorary fellow of the said coll. of physicians, and physician to Sutton's-hospital called the Charter-house near Lond. did spend also some time in Oxon for the sake of the public library; but whether ever incorporated it appears not. He hath written Disquisitio Anatomica de Formato Fœtu. Lond. 1667. oct. with sculptures. He died on the 16th of Apr. 1691, and was buried obscurely in the church of St. Giles in the Fields near Lond. having for several years before not lived in Sutton's-hospital for the relief of the poor pensioners as he ought, according to the founder's will, to have done, but in Great Queen-street within the liberty of Westm. where he died as honest a man as Dr. Tho. Cox, and Dr. D. Whistler did elsewhere, and yet (as both the others) had great practice. Executions were out against him to seize both body and goods, &c.

July 11. ROB. SAWYER M. A. of Magd. coll. in Cambr.⁷—He was a younger son⁸ of sir Edm. Sawyer, living sometime near Windsor in Berks, and was now, or soon after, a barrister of the Inner-Temple, (of which he at length became treasurer) grew eminent for his practice in Lond. and in Oxford circuit which he frequented several years. Afterwards he was a recruiter for Great Wycomb in Bucks, to serve in that parl. which began at Westm. 8 May 1661, was knighted, and on the 14th of Feb. 1680 was sworn attorney gen. in the place of sir Creswell Levinz or Levens, made one of the judges of the Common Pleas, in the room of sir Will. Ellis deceased. In the beginning of Dec. 1657 he was removed from that honourable place of attorney by king James II. and sir Tho. Powis was put in his room, and in his of solicitor gen. Will. Williams esq; on whom his maj. at that time confer'd the honour of knighthood. Under the name of this person (sir R. Sawyer) and under those of Mr. Heneage Finch, sir Geo. Treby, and Mr. Hen. Polexfen, are extant Pleadings and Arguments with other Proceedings in the Court of King's Bench upon the Quo Warranto touching the Charter of the City of London, with the Judgment entered thereupon, &c. Lond. 1690. fol. In the year following, he built and finished the church of High-Cleere in Hampshire, where he hath a plentiful estate.⁹

July 11. HEN. PAMAN M. A. and fellow of St. Joh. coll.¹ in the said univ. of Cambr. was then also incorporated.—See more among the incorporations an. 1669.

THOM. VINER M. A. of Katharine hall in the same univ.¹ was incorporated on the same day.—This person, who was brother to sir Rob. Viner of Lond. goldsmith, was afterwards rector of Bradwell in Essex,³ batch, and doct. of div. preb. of Gloc. in the place of Dr. Tho. Warmstry deceased, an. 1665, canon of Windsor in the room of Dr. Joh. Heaver sometime of Clare-hall in Cambr. deceased, in Jul. 1670, and at length dean of Gloucester on the death of Dr. Will. Brough, an. 1671. He died on the eleventh of Apr. 1673, aged 44 years, and was buried in our Lady's chap. at the east end of the choir of the cath. ch. at Gloucester, where there is a monument, with an inscription thereon, over his grave. In his deanery succeeded Dr. Rob. Frampton, and in his canonry of Windsor Dr. Isaac Vossius, &c.

The said 4 Cambr. men who were incorporated, were of the number of 26 masters of arts of the said univ. that were incorporated after the solemnity of the act.

Octob. 31. ABEL COLLIER doct. of phys. of Padua.—He had that degree confer'd on him at Padua in Jan. 1654.⁴

Dec. 13. LODOVIC. DE LAMBERMONT of Sedan, a young man of great hopes and learning, son of Joh. Lambermont of the same place, and doctor of phys. of the univ. of Valence, was then incorporated doctor of that faculty.—His diploma for the taking of that degree at Valence, bears date 8 Mar. 1651. Under the name of Lambermontius, is extant Anthologia Græc. Lat. Lond. 1654. oct. Whether published by the said Lod. Lambermont I know not. Qu.

Jan. 18. GEORGE BEARE doct. of phys. of Padua.—The said degree was confer'd upon him at Pad. in Octob. 1652. He was originally of Exeter coll.

studied in Oxon, for the sake of the publ. library: some of which being poor, had commons daily allowed to them in Ch. Ch. hall, by the favour of Dr. Joh. Owen the dean, and the then canons of that house.

July 18. It was then granted by the delegates of the university, and afterwards by the convocation, that SAM. SMITH late fellow of St. Joh. coll. who was admitted to the degree of batch. of arts 12 years before this time (since which he was a constant preacher, partly in Essex, but mostly in London) might be actually created M. of A. in any convoc. or congreg.—This person is now, or at least was lately, ordinary of the prison in Lond. called Newgate, and hath published several things.

Nov. 23. SAM. BIRCH of St. Mary's hall, who had been several years a captain in the parl. army, was actually created M. of A. being then between 30 and 40 years of age.—He was about this time made one of the chaplains of C. C. coll. and afterwards being averse to conformity, he taught a private school at Shilton in Berks, near Burford in Oxfordshire, where he had constantly under his tuition the sons of divers persons of quality, and those too who were good loyalists. He died at that place 22 Jan. 1679, leaving behind the character of a good man among the precise people, but otherwise among the neighbouring royalists, who esteem'd him an instiller of evil principles into youth.

Feb. 12. GUSTAVUS QUECKFELDT a noble Sweed of high birth, and eminent for his learning, lately commended to the favour of the university by an Englishman called sir George Fleetwood a baron of Sweden, was actually created doct. of the civ. law.

BENEDICT QUECKFELDT brother to Gustavus, commended also by the said sir Geo. Fleetwood, was at the same time created doct. of the civ. law.

These two persons, with JOH. STUART another Sweed, were then sojourners and students in this university, as they had been about a year before, purposely to have the benefit of the publ. library. The said two brothers, are now, or at least were lately, men of great name and place in Sweden. The last, or the younger, who in his printed book, or books, writes himself Benedictus Gustavus Queckfeldt Sudremanius Suecus, that is, I suppose, of the province of Sodermanland in Sweden, did some exercise for the said degree which he printed with this title. Disputatio juridica inauguralis de Obligationibus ex Contractibus, qui Re, Verbis, Literis, & Consensu perficiuntur, in illustriss. Anglorum Universitate quæ Oxoniæ est, &c. præ Gradu Doctoratus ejusque Privilegiis in Jure, &c. . . . Dec. 1655 modestè exhibita, Oxon. 1656. in 3 sh. in qu.

This year JACOBUS OUZELIUS, who intitles himself Jurisconsultus Dantiscanus, was a sojourner in Oxon, purposely to obtain the benefit of the public library. He hath written De Numismatibus, and is the same, as I conceive, who hath published Animadversiones in Minutii Felicis Octavium.

"Jul. 5. Martin Bagdanus Drisna, Brandenburg. ex acad. Hafniensi, was admitted to the public library.—Scripsit "Tractatum de recidivâ Morborum an. 1659. v. Bartholinus "De Danis p. 99. So Ge. Matth. Konigius in Bib. Vet. & Nov. edit. 1678."

Mar. 27. JAMES WINDET doct. of phys. of Leyden.—The said degree was confer'd on him at Leyd. in July 1655. This person, who was "originally of Queen's coll. in this univ." afterwards of the coll. of physicians at Lond. was a good Latin poet, a most excellent linguist, a great rabbi, a curious critic, and rather shap'd for divinity than the faculty he profess'd. He hath extant under his name (1) Ad Majestatem Caroli II. Sylva duæ. printed in qu. to Cambr. and taking the degree of master there, return'd to his coll. in Oxon.

Oct. 10. PET. DU MOULIN D. of D. of Leyden in Holland, (afterwards confirmed or incorporated at Cambr.⁴) was then incorporated in this univ. in the same degree.—He was the son of Pet. Du Moulin the famous Protestant writer of France, came into England in his elder years; but whether he had preferment before the grand or presbyterian rebellion broke forth I know not. After Ireland was reduced by the parl. forces, he lived there, sometime at Lisimore, Yoghall, and Dublin, under the patronage of Richard earl of Cork. Afterwards going into England, he settled in Oxon (where he was tutor or governour to Charles visc. Dungarvan and Mr. Rich. Boyle his brother, canon commoners of Ch. Ch.) lived there two or more years, and preached constantly for a considerable time in the church of St. Peter in the East. After the restoration of king Charles II. he became chaplain in ordinary to him, and prebendary of Canterb. where he spent the remaining part of his days.⁵ He hath written, (1) Regii Sanguinis Clamor ad Cælum. Hag. Com. 1652. qu. See more in the FASTI first vol. col. 484. (2) Treatise of Peace and Contentment of Mind. Lond. 1657, &c. in a thick oct. The third edition of this book, which came out in 1678, was revised and much amended by the author. (3) A Week of Soliloquies and Prayers, with a Preparation to the holy Communion. Printed there the same year, and again in 1678.79. in tw. In which edition are added other devotions, in two parts. (4) Vindication of the Sincerity of the Protestant Religion in the Point of Obedience to Sovereigns, &c. in answer to a Jesuitical Libel entit. Philanax Anglicus. Lond. 1667. qu. and 1679, which is the 4th edit. (5) Poematum Libellus tres. Cambr. 1670. oct. In the third book, p. 128. is an Epicedium on Dr. Will. Juxon Archb. of Cant. In another edition of these poems in 1671, was added Mantissa aliquot Poematum. (6) Παρέργων Incrementum Psal. XCII. ver. 14. Lond. 1671. oct. (7) Serm. at the Funeral of Dr. Thomas Turner Dean of Canterb. 17 Oct. 1672. on Phil. 1. 21. Lond. 1672. qu. (8) *Addition to a Book written by his Father entit. (11) Ten Sermons preached on several Occasions. Lond. 1684. oct. Among which are those, I presume, before-mention'd. He hath written, as I conceive, other things, but such I have not yet seen; and also translated from French into English, (1) Faith in the Just, victorious over the World; Serm. preach'd at the Savoy in the Fr. Church 10 Oct. 1669. Lond. 1670. qu. Which serm. was preached by Dr. Franc. Durant de Brevall⁶ (heretofore preacher to Hen. Maria the queen mother) installed preb. of Westminster in May 1671. (2) The Ruin of Papacy: or, a clear Display of the Simony of the Romish Clergy. With a circulatory Letter to the Fathers of those Virgins that desert their Families to turn Nuns. Lond. 1679. oct. &c. “ (3) A short View of the chief Points in Controversy, between the reformed Churches and the Church of Rome, in two Letters to the Duke of Bouillon upon his turning Papist. Lond. 1680. oct.⁷ written by his father Pet. Du Moulin prof. of div. in the university of “Sedan.” This Dr. Du Moulin, who was an honest and zealous Calvinist, died in the 81th year of his age, and was buried in the cath. ch. at Canterbury 10 Oct. 1684. The last words which he utter'd on his death-bed were, ‘Since Calvinism is cried down, actum est de religione Christi apud Anglos,’ &c. In his prebendship succeeded the learned and pious Will. Beveridge a native of Leicestershire, D. of D. of Cambr.⁸ and archdeacon of Chelchester, installed therein 5 Nov. 1684.

Feb. 16. JOSEPH TEATE mast. of arts of Dublin.—He was originally batch. of arts of St. John's coll. in this univ. Whence going into Ireland, he took the degree of master at Dublin 17 Aug. 1655. I find A Sermon preached at the Cathedral Church of St. Canier Kilkenny, 27 Feb. 1669. Lond. 1670. qu. preach'd by Joseph Teate dean thereof; which Joseph is to be understood to be the same with the former.⁹

Feb. 19. JOH. PACKER doct. of phys. of Padua.—He was afterwards one of the college of phys. at Lond.

Mar. 10. The most famous and learned THEOPHILUS DE GARENCIERES of Paris, made doct. of phys. at Caen in Normandy 20 years before this time, was then (Mar. 10.) incorporated here in the same degree, not only upon sight of his testimonial letters (which abundantly speak of his worth) subscribed by the king of France his ambassador in Engl. (to whom he was domestic physician) but upon sufficient knowledge had of his great merits, his late relinquishing the Rom. church, and zeal for that of the reformed.—This person, who was one of the coll. of phys. at Lond. hath written (1) Angliæ Flagellum, seu Tabes Anglica. Lond. 1647. in twenty fours. (2) The admirable Virtues and wonderful Effects of the true and genuine Tincture of Coral in Physic, ground by Reason, established by Experience, and confirmed by Authentical Authors in all Ages. Lond. 1676. in oct. and other things as I conceive, but such I have not yet seen. He also translated into English The true Prophecies or Prognostications of Mich. Nostradamus, Physician to K. Hen. II, Francis II, and Charles IX, Kings of France, &c. Lond. 1672. fol. He died poor, and in an obscure condition in Covent-Garden within the liberty of Westm. occasion'd by the unworthy dealings of a certain knight,¹ which in a manner broke his heart; but the particular time when I cannot tell.

19. WALT. JAMES doct. of phys. of Padua.—The said degree he took at Padua in Octob. 1655.

Creations.

Apr. 10. PETER VASSON was created batch. of phys. by virtue of the chancellor's (O. Cromwell) letters, dat. 25 Mar. this year, which say, that he the said chanc. ‘had received very good satisfaction from several hands touching Mr. Vasson, as to his suffering for his religion in his own nation,

May 6. THOM. TISZÆBETSI or TIZABETSI a Transylvanian (Hungario Transylvanus) was created M. of A.

Dec. 29. FAUSTUS MORSTEYN a nobleman of the Greater Poland, was created M. of A. by virtue of a dispens. from the delegates.—He was a student or sojourner in the univ. several years purposely to obtain learning from the publ. libr.

Jan. 29. ABRAH. CONYARD of Roan in Normandy, who had studied divinity several years in academics in France and Switzerland, was created batch. of div. by the decree of the members of convocation, who were well satisfied with his letters testimonial under the hands of the pastors of the reformed church of Roan, written in his behalf.

[114] In the beginning of this year studied in Ox. in the condition of a sojourner HENRY OLDENBURG,⁴ who wrote himself sometimes GRUBENDOLE, and in the month of June he was entred a student by the name and title of Henricus Oldenburg, Bremensis, nobilis Saxo; at which time he was tutor to a young Irish nobleman called Henry ô Bryen, then a student also there. He had been consul for his countrymen in the dutchy of Brema in Lower Saxony to reside in Lond. in the time of the long parl. and Oliver, and acted for his countrymen in that office for some years. At length being quitted of that employment, he continued in Engl. was tutor to lord O Bryen before-mention'd, and afterwards to Will. lord Cavendish, and at length upon the foundation of the Royal Society, fellow and secretary thereof. He hath written, Philosophical Transactions, commencing from 6 March 1664, and carried on to numb. 136, dated 25 June 1677; all in qu. By which work he rendred himself a great benefactor to mankind, by his affectionate care and indefatigable diligence and endeavours, in the maintaining philosophical intelligence, and promoting the designs and interests of profitable and general philosophy: and translated into English. of Henry earl of Thomond, and was afterwards one of his majesty's privy-council in Irel. He died in Aug. 1678, to the very great grief of his relations: Whereupon his widow Katharine, baroness Clifton, sister and heiress to Charles sometime duke of Richmond,⁵ was married to sir Joseph Williamson, one of the principal secretaries of state, in Decemb. following. By which match, tho' he lost his place of secretary, by the endeavours of Tho. earl of Danby, who intended her for one of his sons, yet he obtained large possessions in Kent and elsewhere, and the hereditary high-stewardship of Gravesend in the said county.

So that he and George Philips,² another of the same gang (afterwards proctor of the univ.) being juniors, and wanting good chambers, they did on the 21st of May 1649 make a motion to the society of that house that forasmuch as the younger fell. had bad chambers, they would allow that the outward chappel (which they said was useless) might be converted into chambers for them to lodge in, &c. Which motion being looked upon by the sen. there (men of the old stamp) as a horrid and villainous thing, they did not dare to express it so, for fear of danger that might ensue, but passed it over as a slight matter. Afterwards this Mr. Bedford, who was a forward and conceited person, and presum'd to take his degree of batch. of div. before those who were much his seniors in the house, became pastor of Blunsham and Erith in Huntingdonshire before this year, and wrote and published *The Perusal of an old Statute concerning Death and Judgment, Sermon at the Funeral of Mrs. Francis Bedford (Dau. of Sam. MAY 14. JOHN COLLINS M. A. of Camb.⁵—Whether he be the same John Collins who was doct. of div. and author of Several Discourses concerning the actual Providence of God; divided into three Parts, &c. Lond. 1678, 79, qu. and of other things as 'tis probable, I cannot yet tell. He is not to be taken to be the same with John Collinges batch. of div. and sometimes minister of St. Stephen's parish in Norwich, a frequent writer before this time, because their names differ. See the titles of some of his works in Bodley's Catalogue and elsewhere in others. Now I am got into the name of Collins I cannot but let the reader know something of John Collins the accomptant, who, having been a person of extraordinary worth,⁶ considering his education, you may be pleased therefore to know that he was born at Wood-Eaton near to, and in the county of, Oxon, on Saturday 5 March 1624. His father was a nonconformist divine, and tho' not suffer'd to preach in churches, yet in prisons to malefactors, which, with the correcting of the press, obtain'd him a subsistence. At 16 years of age John Collins was put an apprentice to a bookseller (one Tho. Allam) living without the Turl-gate of Oxon, but troubles soon after following, he left that trade, and was employed in clerkship under, and received some mathematical knowledge from, Mr. Joh. Marr one of the clerks of the kitchen to prince Charles, afterwards king Charles II. I mean the same Mr. Marr who was eminent for his mathematical knowledge, and noted for those his excellent dyals, wherewith the gardens of his majesty king Charles I. were adorned. But the intestine wars and troubles increasing, Collins lost that employment and went seven years to sea, most part of it in an English merchant-man, that became a man of war in the Venetian service against the Turks: in which, having leisure, he applied part of his studies to mathematics, and merchant-accompts, and upon his return he fell to the practice thereof, and afterwards profess'd writing, merchant-accompts, and some parts of mathematics: and having drawn up some books of accompts, and divers loose questions, for the instruction of his scholars in the year 1652, he committed them to the press, under the title of An Introduction to Merchants Accompts. They were reprinted in 1665 without alteration, and in 1666 the fire consumed the greatest part of the impression. At length it was reprinted with the addition of two more Accompts than

His works, besides those before-mention'd, are among others (1) The Sector on a Quadrant: or, a Treatise containing the Description and Use of four several Quadrants, &c. Lond. 1658, qu; in which there are very curious prints of two great quadrants, and of two small quadrants, with particular projections on them serving for the latitude of London. What other things Mr. Collins hath written I know not; and therefore I shall only say, that if we did not further enlarge by telling the world how much it is obliged for his pains in exciting the learned to publish their works, and in acting the part of an ingenious obstetrix at the press, in correcting and in drawing of schemes, we should be much injurious to his memory. After the act at Oxon was finished, 1682, he rode thence to Malmsbury in Wilts, in order to view the ground to be cut for a river between Isis and Avon: which journey being performed between twelve at noon and eleven at night in a hot day, he did, at his arrival in his inn, drink more than he should at that time (being very hot and his blood not settled) of red-streak cyder; which giving him an astma, and that a consumption, he died thereof in his lodging on Garlick-hill in London, on Saturday 10 Nov. 1683; whereupon his body was buried on Tuesday following in the church of St. James Garlick-hith in the south isle just behind the pulpit.

⁵ [It was his usual way while he was drawing up his Synopsis and Annotations, to rise very early in the morning, about three or four o'clock, and take a raw egg about eight or nine, and another about twelve, and then to continue his studies till the afternoon was pretty far advanced; at which time he laid study aside, went abroad, and spent the evening at the house of some friend or other. At such times he would be exceedingly, but innocently, merry, very much diverting both himself and his company. After supper, when it grew towards time to go home, he would say 'Now let us call for a reckoning;' and then would begin some very grave and serious discourse, and when he found the company was composed and serious, would bid them good night and go home. When Dr. Oates's depositions, &c. were printed, Poole found his own name in the list of those persons who were to be cut off upon the account (as was supposed) of what he had written against the papists in his Nullity. To this he gave not the least credit, till one night having been at alderman Ashhursts, when he went home, he took one to bear him company; and when they came together to the narrow passage that goes from Clerkenwell to St. John's court, there were two men standing at the entrance, and when Poole came along, one of them cried out to the other, 'Here he is!' whereupon the other said, 'Let him alone, for there is somebody with him.' As soon as they were passed, Poole asked his friend, whether he heard what those men said. He answered that he did. Well, says Poole, I had been murdered to-night, had not you been with me. This made him give heed to what he disregarded before, and raised in him such an apprehension of his danger, as caused him to retire to Holland, where he ended his days; but whether or no by a natural death is doubted.]

About that time he was commonly called 'The most noble lord Richard,' and rife discourses there were of Richard the fourth, but they proved no more than the story of queen Dick. On the 4th of Sept. 1658, he was proclaimed lord protector (his father dying the day before) at the usual places in London where kings use to be, and soon after had addresses flew to him at Whitehall from all parts of the three nations, to salute and magnify his assumption to the sovereignty, wherein he was celebrated for the excellency of his wisdom and nobleness of mind, for the lovely composition of his body, &c. as if he had been another Titus, Deliciæ Gentis & Domini Britannici, &c. In the latter end of Apr. 1659 he was, as a pitiful thing, laid aside and deposed: whereupon withdrawing to Hursley in Hampshire, absconded there for a time. He had before taken to wife Dorothy daughter and coheir of Rich. The other daughter and coheir named Anne was married to John Dunch of Pusey in Berks, son of Sam. ⁹ [He died at Cheshunt in Hertfordshire, where he had long resided in privacy, under the name of Richard Clark, July 13, 1712.]

in Cambridge, of which he was elected scholar, an. 1636;² where by the progress and continuance of his wit, it appeared that two things were joyn'd in it, which seldom meet together, viz. that it was ripe and lasting. In the beginning of 1643, he being then M. of A. was among many others ejected his coll. and university: whereupon retiring to Oxon, he settled in St. Joh. coll. and under the name of a scholar of Oxon he published the same year a poem entit. A Satyre: The Puritan and the Papist. In that house he prosecuted his academical studies with the like success as before, and was not wanting in his duty in the war it self, whereby he became acquainted with the great men of the court and the gown. After he had left Oxon (which was a little before the surrender thereof for the use of the parliament) he went to Paris, where falling into the acquaintance of Dr. Stephen Goffe a brother of the Oratory,³ he was by him prefer'd and placed in the family of the noble and munificent Henry lord Jermyn, afterwards earl of St. Alban's: who having a great and singular respect for him, he was by his most generous endeavours designed to be master of the Savoy hospital; which, tho' granted to his high merit by both the Charles's, 1. and 2. yet by certain persons, enemies to the muses, he lost that place. He was absent from his native country about 10 years, which were for the most part spent either in bearing a part in the distresses of the regal family, or in labouring in the affairs thereof. In the year 1656 he returned into England, and was for a time brought into trouble, but afterwards complying with some of the men then in power, (which was much taken notice of by the royal party) he obtained an order to be created doctor of physic: which being done to his mind (whereby he gained the ill-will of some of his friends) he went into France again, (having made a copy of verses on Oliver's death) where continuing towards the time of the blessed restoration of king Charles II. he returned; but then not finding that preferment confer'd on him which he expected, while others for their money carried away most places, he retired discontented into Surrey, where he spent the remaining part of his days in a private and studious condition, mostly at Chertsy, where he had a lease of a farm held of the queen, procured for him by George duke of Bucks, from the earl of St. Alban's before-mention'd. The writings of this most eminent poet are these (1) Poetical Blossoms. Lond. 1633, qu. which contain Antonius and Melida, and The tragical History of Piramus and Thisbe. The first is ded. to Dr. Williams bishop of Linc. and the other to his master Mr. Lambert Osbaldeston. Before both is his picture, with his age set over it, viz. 13 (but false) an. 1633. There are also verses made by his school-fellows in commendation of them, one of which is Rob. Mead, who proved afterwards a most ingenious person; as I have elsewhere told you; and at the end are two elegies, one on Dudley lord Carleton, and another on his kinsman Rich. Clerk of Linc. inn gent. and A Dream of Elysium. I have seen a book entit. Sylva: or, divers Copies of Verses made upon sundry Occasions, Lond. 1636, oct. said in the title to be written by A. C. but whether by Abr. Cowley, I doubt it, because the said A. C. seems not to be of Cambr.

This was published again at London in 1682 in qu. in a book entit. Wit and Loyalty revived in a Collection of some smart Satyrs in Verse and Prose, on the late Times. The prefacer to these satyrs complains that this of Mr. Cowley was not set forth by the publisher of his first collection of pieces of poetry, and gives two presumptive reasons thereof, and wonders that his poem called Brutus, and that Upon the B. of Lincoln's Enlargement from the Tower (which he gueseth not to be his) have met with so good fortune as to have place therein. This was afterwards printed in the translation of the sixth book of Plants before-mention'd. As for other of his writings which have escaped my sight, you may see more in the first part of his works printed at least eight times in fol. in the second part of his works, being what was written and published by himself in his younger years, printed at least four times in fol. and in the third part of his works containing his 6 books of Plants, made English by several hands, fol. &c. A little before his first return into England 1656 there was a book published under his name, entit. The Iron Age, which he disclaimed in the preface of his Pœms which came out that year. He died at "a house called the porch house" towards the west end of the town of Chertsey in Surrey before-mention'd, on the 28th of July, aged 49 years: whereupon his body being conveyed to the house of his great patron George duke of Bucks, called Wallingford house near to Whitehall, was conveyed thence to Westminster

4 [PINDARIQUE ODE.

The Book humbly presenting it self to the Universitie Librarie at Oxford.

Hail, Learning's Pantheon! Hail, the sacred Ark,
Where all y^e World of Science does embark,
W^{ch} ever shalt wthstand, and hast soe long withstood Insatiate Times devouring Flood!
Hail, Tree of Knowledge, thy Leaves fruit! w^{ch} well
Dost in y^e midst of Paradise arise,
Oxford, y^e Muses Paradise!
From w^{ch} may never Sword the Blest expell.
Hail, Bank of all past Ages, where they lie
T^e enrich w^{ch} Interest Posteritie!
Hail, Wit's illustrious Galaxie,
Where thousand Lights into one Brightnes spread,
Hail, Living Universitie of the Dead!

Vnconfused Babel of all Tongues, w^{ch} ere
The mighty Linguist Fame, or Time, the mighty Traveller,
That could Speak, or this could Hear!
Maestique Monument, and Pyramide,
Where still the Shapes of parted Soules abide Embalmed in Verse! exalted Soules, w^{ch} now
Enjoy those Arts they w^od soe well below!
W^{ch} now all wonders printed plainly see
That have bin, are, or are to bee,
In the mysterious Librarie,
The Beatifiquè Bodley of the Deitie!

3.

Will yee into your sacred throng admit
The meanest British Wit?
Yee Generall Councell of the Preists of Fame,
Will yee not iunior, and disdain
That J a place amongst yee claime
The humblest Deacon of her train?
Will yee allow mee th' honourable Chain?
The Chain of Ornament, w^{ch} here
Your noble Prisoners proudly wear?
A Chain w^{ch} will more pleasant seem to mee,
Then all my own Pindarique Libertie.
Will yee to bind mee with theise mighty Names submit Like an Apocrypha wth Holy Writ?
What ever happy Book is chained here,
Noe other place or people needs to fear,
His Chaine's a Passport to goe every where.

As when a Seat in Heaven
Js to an vnnalitious Sinner given,
Who casting round his wondring Eye
Does none but Patriarchs and Apostles there espie, Martyrs who did their Lives bestow,
And Saints who Martyrs lived below,
Wth trembling and amazement hee begins
To recollect his frailties past and sins,
Hee doubts almost his Station there,
His Soule says to it selfe, How came J here?
It fares noe otherwise wth mee
When J my selfe wth conscious wonder see Amidst this Purified Elected Companie,
Wth hardship they and pain,
Did to this happines attain,
Noe labours J or merits can pretend;
J think, Prædestination onely was my Friend.

Ah y^t my Author had bin tyed, like Mee
To such a place and such a Companie, Jnstead of severall Countries, severall Men,
And Busines w^{ch} y^e Muses hate!
Hee might have then improu'd y^t small Estate
W^{ch} Nature sparingly did to him give;
Hee might perhaps have thriven then,
And settled vpon mee, his Child, Somewhat to Live.
T^e had happier bin for him, as well as Mee,
For when all, alas, is donne,
Wee Books, J mean Yow Books will prove to bee
The best and noblest Conversation.
For though some Errors will get in,
Like Tinctures of Original Sin,
Yet sure wee from our Fathers Wit
Draw all y^e Strength and Spirits of it,
Leaving y^e grosser parts for Conversation,
As the best Blood of Man's employ'd on Generation.

abbey, on the 3d of Aug. following, accompanied by divers persons of eminent quality, and there, in the south cross isle, or large isle joyning to the south side of the choir, was buried near to the place where the reliques of Jeffr. Chaucer had been lodged. About the middle of May 1673, the said duke of Bucks did, at his own charge, erect over his grave a curious pedestal of white marble, and a stately urn placed thereon. On the pedestal is a most elegant and befitting inscription engraven, made by his great admirer Dr. Tho. Sprat⁵ before mention'd, and all inviron'd with an iron grate, where we shall now leave him.

PETRUS SCHUMACHERUS a young Dane, was a sojourner this, and several years after in Oxon, purposely to obtain literature in the public library, and was much favoured and encouraged by Mr. Tho. Barlow the keeper thereof.—Afterwards he became a man of note in his own country, and, tho' the son of a vintner, chancellor of Denmark, &c. He hath lately sent his picture to the university of Oxon, and it now hangs in the school-gallery.

Mar. 25. NICH. BILLINGSLEY of Mert. coll.—He was a minister's son at, or near, Bristol, as I suppose, and having had a long sickness hanging upon him, was dispenced with by the venerable congregation for the absence of eight terms. In which time living in his father's house, he wrote in verse—Hagio-Martyrologia: Or an exact Epitome of all the Persecutions which have befall'n the People of God in all Ages, Lond. 1657, oct. Of which poetry and its author you may take this character from a very conceited⁷ writer, who was his contemporary, thus,

Stand off thou poetaster from the press,
Who pygni'st martyrs with thy dwarf-like verse,
Whose white long bearded flame of zeal aspires
To wrack their ashes, more than did their fires.

⁶ [Dr. Walter Pope in his Life of Bishop Ward, pages 176, 177, has brought a very grave charge against our author for having registered Byfield and Conant as the proctors for this year, and omitted himself and Porter; but the fact is that this was a mistake of the transcriber or the printer in the first edition of the ATHENÆ, and as such is corrected by Wood in his own copy in the Ashmole museum. And so indeed are the proctor's names for 1658 noted in the Historia et Antiquitates Oxon. by our author, an evident proof that he was very far from intending to falsify history, or to injure Dr. Pope.]

9. JOH. PRICE of Univ. coll.—This person, who was a minister's son, became soon after curate of St. Cross alias Halywell in the suburbs of Oxon, where preaching many sermons, he published four of them, the titles of which follow. (1) The Christian's Excellency; on Matth. 5. 47. (2) Truth begets Eternity; on Gal. 4. 16. (3) A Nation's Happiness in a good King; on Eccles. 10. 17. (4) The Praise of Charity; on Heb. 13. 16. These four sermons were printed at Oxon, 1661, in oct. and by him dedic. to Dr. Hen. King bishop of Chichester, who taking him into his patronage, confer'd a cure on him near that city, where soon after he finished his course in a crazed condition, occasioned by a high conceit of his own worth and parts.

July 9. RICH. STRETTON of New coll.—This person, who was chaplain of the said house, was afterwards chaplain to the L. Fairfax, a nonconformist divine and a traveller. He hath written A true Relation of the Cruelties and Barbarities of the French upon the English Prisoners of War; being a Journal of their Travels from Dinan in Britany to Thoulon and back again. With a Description of the Situation and Fortifications of all the eminent Towns on the Road, of their Prisons and Hospitals, the Number and Names of them that died, with the Charity and Sufferings of the Protestants, Lond. 1690, qu. &c. published under the name of Rich. Stretton, an eye-witness of those things, who perhaps hath written other matters, Quære. This person, who held forth among the godly for a time in an antiquated dancing-school without the north gate of Oxon in the winter season 1689 (king Will. III. being then in the throne) lives now a non-conformist preacher in Warwick-lane in London.

Incorporations.

These Cambridge men following were incorporated on the 13th of July, being the next day after the solemnity of the Act was finished.

BENEDICT RIVELY M. A. of Eman. coll. — He was afterwards chaplain to Dr. Reynolds bishop of Norwich and a preacher in that city,⁸ and author of A Sermon preached in the Cath. Ch. of Norwich at the Funeral of Dr. Edw. Reynolds Lord Bishop of Norwich; on Job 30. 23. Lond. 1677, qu.

JOH. DOWELL M. A. of Christ's coll. — He was afterwards vicar of Melton-Mowbray in Leicestershire and author of The Leviathan heretical: or, the Charge exhibited in Parliament against Mr. Hobbes, justified by the Refutation of his Book, entit. The Historical Narration of Heresy and the Punishments thereof. Lond. 1683, in tw. See more in Tho. Hobbes among the writers, an. 1679.

ROBERT SPRACKLING M. of A. of Peter house. — This person, who was born of a genteel family living at St. Laurence and Ramsgate in the isle of Thanet in Kent, became afterwards doct. of physic at Angers in France, in which degree being incorporated in Cambridge, became one of the coll. of physicians, and author of — Medela Ignorantiæ: or a just and plain Vindication of Hippocrates and Galen from the groundless Imputations of M. N. wherein the whole Substance of his illiterate Plea entit. Medela Medicinæ is occasionally considered. Lond. 1665. See more in March, Nedham among the writers, an. 1678. Afterwards, upon some controversy that hapned between his father and mother, (the last of which was made away) he became much discontented, turned papist, went into Lancashire, settled at Preston in Amunderness, practised among the Roman Catholics and by them cried up, tho' as 'tis said there, he led a drunken and debauch'd life. Some time before his death he was reconciled to the church of England, and dying at Preston, was buried there, but when, my author (a physician of those parts) tells me not, only that 'twas after or about the year 1670.

RICH. KIDDER M. A. of Eman. coll.⁹ — This learned person (a Sussex¹ man born, I think) was afterwards rector⁴ of St. Martin's Outwich in London, installed preb. of Norwich (in the place of Hezek. Burton deceased) on the 16th of Sept. 1681, (being then D. of D.³) dean of Peterborough in the place of Dr. Sim. Patrick promoted to the see of Chichester, an. 1689, and at length became bish. of Bath and Wells upon the deprivation of the religious and conscientious Dr. Tho. Ken for not taking the usual oaths to their majesties king William III. and queen Mary: he was nominated thereunto about the 14th⁴ of June 1691, upon the refusal of it by Dr. William Beveridge, and on the 30th of Aug. following he was consecrated thereunto in the church of St. Mary Le Bow in London by John archb. of Cant. Gilbert bish. of Sarum, Peter bish. of Winton, John bish. of Norwich, and Edw. bish. of Gloucester: at which time were also consecrated Dr. Rob. Grove⁵ of Cambridge to the see of Chichester upon the translation thence of Dr. Patrick to Ely, and Dr. Joh. Hall master of Pemb. coll. in Oxon to the see of Bristol, upon the translation thence of Dr. Gilb. Ironside to the see of Hereford. Dr. Kidder hath written (1) The young Man's Duty. A Discourse shewing the Necessity of Seeking the Lord betimes, as also the Danger and Unreasonableness of trusting to a late or Death-bed Repentance. Designed especially for young Persons before they are debauched by evil Company and evil Habits. Lond. 1663, and several times after in tw. The sixth edition was published in 1690. (2) Convivium cæleste: A plain and familiar Discourse concerning the Lord's Supper, shewing at once the Nature of that Sacrament, as also the right Way of preparing our selves for the Receiving of it, &c. Lond. 1674, oct. and afterwards again with additions. (3) Charity directed: or, the Way to give Almes to the greatest Advantage. In a Letter to a Friend. Lond. 1677, qu. (4) The Christian Sufferer supported: or, a Discourse concerning the Grounds of Christian Fortitude, shewing at once that the Sufferings of good Men are not inconsistent with God's special Providence,

Dr. Kidder hath published several books against popery, during the reign of king Jam. II. and other things, which for brevity's sake I now pass by.

[124] JAMES ARDERNE M. A. of Christ's coll.—See among the incorporations, an. 1673.

All the said Cambridge men, viz. B. Rively, J. Dowell, R. Sprackling, R. Kidder and J. Arderne were incorporated on the 13th of July; at which time were incorporated 15 other masters of the said university, among whom were JOH. QUARLES and JOH. GOSLING of Peter house.

Jan. 2. HENRY YERBURY doct. of physic of Padua.—This person, who had been turned out of his fellowship of Magd. coll. in this university by the visitors in 1648, did afterwards travel, took the said degree at Pad. in the beginning of Apr. 1654. After his majesty's return he was restored by his commissioners, an. 1660, was a candidate of the coll. of phys. and dying on the 25th of March 1686, was buried in the chappel belonging to Magd. coll. near to the north door which leads from the cloyster therein. I shall make farther mention of this person when I come to speak of Dr. Thomas Pierce.

Creations.

Apr. 16. WILL. BURT M. of A. chief master of Wykeham's school near Winchester, was created doct. of div. by virtue of the letters of Rich. Cromwell chanc. of the university.—This person, who was son of Will. Burt sometime belonging to the choir of the cath. ch. at Winchester, was born in the parish of St. Laurence in that city, educated in grammar learning in Wykeham's school there, admitted perpetual fellow of New coll. in 1627, took the degrees in arts, and soon after became master of the free-school at Thame in Oxfordshire. In 1647 he was made rector of Whitfield in the said county, and soon after became chief master of Wykeham's school before-mentioned in the place of Dr. Jo. Pottinger. On the 9th of Sept. 1658 he was admitted warden of Wykeham's coll. near Winchester in the place of Dr. Joh. Harris deceased, and after his majesty's restoration was made prebendary of the cathedral there. He hath published Concio Oxoniæ habita postridie Comitiorum 13 Julii 1658 pro Gradu Doctoris; in Psal. 72. 17. Oxon, 1659. in tw. Dedicated to Rich. Cromwell lord protector of England, with whom, and the great men going before, in the interval, he kept pace. This being all the exercise that he performed for the degrees of batch. and doct. of div. I do therefore put him under the creations. He died at Winchester 3 July an. 1679, and was buried on the south side of the altar in the chappel belonging to the said coll. of Wykeham near Winchester.

May 14. ROB. WOSELEY or WOLSELEY who had been a student in this university for 8 years time, and a burgess, as 'tis said in the register, in the late parliament, was actually created master of arts.—I cannot find his name in the catalogues of parliament men that sate in the three parliaments going before this time, only Charles Wolseley esq; who was one of Oliver's lords.

July 7. PAUL HARTMAN of the city of Thorne in Prussia, was actually created mast. of arts.—He was afterwards one of the petty canons of Ch. Ch. and is now, or else was lately, rector of Shillingford in Berks.⁶ This person, who is brother to Ad. Sam. Hartman mention'd among the incorporations, an. 1680, hath written and published certain matters pertaining to grammar, as I have heard.

The first of these three was afterwards successively bish. of Rochester and Ely, and having written and published several things he is hereafter to be remembred among the writers and bishops. The second was afterwards an archdeacon, as I shall tell you among the masters, an. 1662; and the last, who was afterwards of Jesus college was at length bishop of St. Davids.

Oct. 12. JAN. JANEWAY of Ch. Ch.

14. SAM. HARDYE of Wadh. coll.—He was the author of The Guide to Heaven, &c. printed at several times in two parts in oct. the last part of which was published 1687, 88. and therefore he is hereafter to be numbred among the Oxford writers.

Nov. 1. BENJ. WOODROFF of Ch. Ch.—He hath published several things, and therefore he is also hereafter to be remembred.

Jan. 16. THOM. GUIDOTT } of Wadh. coll.

Feb. 28. SAM. PARKER }

The first of these two, who is now a physician of note, is hereafter to be remembred among the writers: the other, who was afterwards of Trin. coll. was at length bishop of Oxon. I have mentioned him at large among the writers. [125]

Feb. 28. JOH. LANGFORD of Ch. Ch.—This person, who was a Ruthyn man born in Denbighshire, did afterwards translate into good Welsh The whole Duty of Man; Lond.

⁶ [I have heard Samuel Hartman, his son, was also petty canon of Christ Church, presented by his coll. to the vicarage of Daventry in Northamptonshire. He died 1716, and was succeeded by — Taylor, a student of the same coll. WATTS.]

The last was afterwards chaplain to Dr. Tho. Barlow bishop of Lincoln, who collating him to the archdeaconry of Bedford, he was installed therein 22 Mar. 1678, and afterwards to the prebendship of Biggleswade in the church of Linc. was installed also therein 3 May 1684.⁸

June 21. THOMAS HOCKIN of Magd. coll.—This person, who was afterwards fellow of All-s. coll. hath written A Discourse of the Nature of God's Decrees: being an Answer to a Letter from a Person of Quality concerning them. Lond. 1684, oct. In the title of this book he writes himself 'batch. of div. sometimes fellow of All-s. coll. and late preacher at Great St. Bartholomew's in London.' But whether he took the said degree of B. of D. in this university it appears not.

WILL. SHIPPEN of Univ. coll.—He was afterwards proctor of the university and at length rector of Stockport in Cheshire and author of The Christian's Triumph over Death, Sermon at the Funeral of Rich. Legh of Lime in the County Pal. of Chester Esq; at Winwick in Lancashire, 6 Sept. 1687; on 1 Cor. 15. 55. Oxon, 1688, qu. He is doct. of divinity, not of this university, but by the diploma, if I mistake not, of Dr. W. Sancroft archbishop of Canterbury.

June 25. { HENRY FOULIS

HENRY DENTON

The last of these three who was son of Thomas Denton of the antient and genteel family of his name living at Warnell-Denton in Cumberland, travelled afterwards to Constantinople in the quality of a chaplain to the English ambassador, and after his return did translate "from Greek" into English, A Description of the present State of Samos, Nicaria, Patmos and Mount-Athos, Lond. 1678, oct. Which book was written by Joseph Georgirines archbishop of Samos, living then (1678) in London; who the year before had for some weeks been in Oxon, about the act time to obtain money from the academians towards the finishing the Greek church in London. This Mr. Denton, who was fellow of Qu. coll. and presented by the provost and fellows thereof to the rectory of Blechingdon in Oxfordshire, (on the death of Joh. Hook B. D. sometime fellow of Madg. coll. which happened 20 Feb. 1673,) was buried in the church there, 19 Aug. 1681.

Doctors of Law.

May 18. NICHOLAS STAUGHTON of Exet. coll. esq; was admitted doctor of the civ. and can. law, being then dispensed with for certain terms; and on the 27th of June following, after he had spoken a formal speech before the members of the university (for which he was laughed at, because not at all desired or required) he was admitted ad suffragandum in domo convocationis & congreg. About a month or two after was printed a sharp libel entit. Sundry Things from several Hands concerning the University of Oxford, &c. And at the end of it were printed 25 Queries: the last of which runs thus: 'Whether the boy Dr. Staughton of Exeter coll. did well to lye in his scarlet gown that night he was made doctor, since his degree was a thing he ought not to have dreamed of?' He was then lord of the ancient manor of Staughton in Surrey, which unexpectedly fell to him after the death of divers persons of that name, and on the 29th of January 1660, he was created a baronet.

May 18. THO. JONES of Mert. coll. who accumulated the degrees of law by virtue of the chanc. letters, was then admitted to proceed. [126]

Doctors of Physic.

Jun. 2. THOM. JEANES of Magd. coll.—This person, who was originally of Trin. coll. in Cambr. did, while he was a junior there, with Joh. Fidoe, and Will. The humble Advice to the Lecturers of Banbury in Oxfordshire, and of Brackley in Northamptonshire*. Lond. 1648, in 2 sh. and an half in qu. Afterwards Jeanes going to Oxon, was made fellow of Magd. coll. by the visitors, and always after, during his stay there, he was esteem'd by all that knew him a good scholar, and a generous and stout man. But so it fell out, that after Dr. Tho. Pierce became president of the said coll. he found means to expel him thence, an. 1662, under pretence of having a hand in the said vile pamphlet; but those then of the house, who knew the proud and malicious humour of Pierce, have often told me, that that was not the reason of his ejection, but because Dr. Jeanes had found fault with his Concio Synodica ad Clerum Anglican. published that year; whercin he said were several barbarisms and false Latins. Which report coming to the ears of Dr. Pierce, his malice became so great

After his expulsion, which the generality of the society were against and did lament, (because they knew he was sorry for what he had done in his raw years) he went to Peterborough, where he practised his faculty with good success, but in his journey homeward from a certain noble patient, in a dark night without a companion, his horse foundered in a gravel-pit, flung him off from his back, and was forthwith stifled, in the month of Nov. 1668.

Apr. 13. THOM. HYDE of Qu. coll.⁴ was created master of arts by virtue of the chancellor's letters, which say that he is of full standing since his admission into the univ. of Cambridge for the degree of M. of A. that he hath given public testimony of his more than ordinary abilities and learning in the Oriental languages, &c. The delegates of the university ordered the day before that he should accumulate the degree of M. of A. by reading only a lecture in one of the Oriental languages, &c. which was afterwards accordingly done in the Persian language in schola linguarum. Since that time he hath published several books, and therefore is hereafter to be remembered among the writers of this university.

AN. DOM. 1660. 12 CAR. II.

Chancellor.

The same, viz. RICH. CROMWELL lately lord protector; but he upon a foresight of the restoration of king Charles II. resigning his office by his letter sent to the university, dated at Hursley in Hampshire 8 May this year, (read in convocation 16 of the same month) the most noble WILLIAM MARQUESS OF HERTFORD, &c. was restored to his place of chancellor by the house of lords on the 26th following, and on the 6th of June was confirmed by the convocation. But the said marquess dying in the night time of the 24th of Octob.⁵ (being then duke of Somerset) SIR EDW. HYDE knt. sometime batch. of arts of Magd. hall, now lord chanc. of England, and of the privy-council to his majesty, was elected into his place on the 27th of the same month, and installed at Westminster 15 Nov. following.

The senior proctor being fellow of New college, was ejected thence in Aug. by his majesty's commissioners, to make room for those that had been turned out by the visitors appointed by parl. So that then retiring to Hart-hall, he spent the remainder of his proctorship there. The junior proctor wanting time when he was elected, a protestation was openly read in convocation at the time of his admission by Mr. Will. Hawkins of Ch. Ch. a candidate for the procuratorial office. The particulars of which being many and large, I shall now pass them by for brevity's sake, and only say that Mr. Dod continued in his office while Mr. Hawkins appealed to the court of chancery.

The scene of all things was now changed, and alterations made in countenances, manners and words of all men. Those that for 12 years last past had governed and carried all things in a manner at their pleasure, did now look discontented, and were much perplex'd, foreseeing that their being in the university must inevitably vanish. Those that had lain under a cloud for several years behind, appear with cheerful looks; while others that had flourished, droop'd, or withdrew themselves privately, knowing very well that they had eaten the bread of other men, and that if they should continue in the university, they should undergo a visitation and censure by those persons, whom they themselves had formerly visited and ejected. But justice being to be done, commissioners were appointed by his majesty, after his restoration, to rectify all things in the university, who sitting several weeks in Aug. Sept. &c. restored all such that were living unmarried to their respective places, and many that were peaceable and willing to conform, and renounce their factious principles, they kept in, &c.

Incorporations.

March 27. ANDREW BEECH doct. of phys. of Padua.—This gent. who was a Londoner born, and son of a father of both his names, took the said degree at Pad. in Dec. 1657.

DAVID BRUCE a Scot of an honourable family, doctor of phys. of Valence, was incorporated the same day.—He was the son of Andr. Bruce the youngest of ten sons of the laird of Fingask, D. D. and principal of St. Leonard's coll. in the university of St. Andrews, had been educated there in humanity, and admitted M. of A. &c. Afterwards travelling into France, he studied physic at Montpellier and Paris several years, with a design to be doctorated in that faculty at Padua, but the plague raging in Italy, he went to Lyons for a time, and afterwards going to Valence in Daupheny, he took the degree of doct. of phys. there, an. 1657. After his return into Engl. he was incorporated as before I have told you, and soon after attended as physician on their royal highnesses James and Anne duke and dutchess of York, with his great uncle sir Joh. Wederbourne doct. of phys. But after some years of attendance being wearied by the court toil, most of the service lying on him because of the said sir John's infirmity, he retired from that employment, as the said sir John had done a year before, and at length after many peregrinations he settled in his own country, and is now living at Edinburgh in good repute for his practice.

June 20. ANDREW BRUCE younger brother to David before-mention'd, M. of A. of St. Leonard's coll. in the univ. of St. Andrews.—He was lately prof. of philosophy in the said coll. was now conversant in studies in Ch. Ch. in this university, and after his incorporation in the degree of master he returned to Scotland, and became minister of Newtyle in the shire of Angus, where he finished his course about 21 years since.

Jul. 17. PATRICK SHERENDEN M. of A. of Trin. coll. near Dublin.—He was afterwards D. of D. and bish. of Cloyne in Irel. 1679, on the death of Dr. Edw. Singe, who being bish. of Cloyne, Cork and Ross, the two last sees were then, the same year, confer'd on Dr. Edw. Wetenhall sometime of Linc. coll.

coll. and afterwards honorary fellow of the coll. of phys. at London.¹⁰

EDMUND BORLASE doct. of phys. of Leyden, was incorporated the same day, Aug. 7.—This person, who was the son of sir Joh. Borlase knt, master of the ordnance, and one of the lords justices of Ireland, 1643, (sir Hen. Tichborne being the other) was educated in the coll. near Dubl. and going afterwards to Leyden, had the said degr. of doct. of phys. confer'd on him there 1650. Afterwards he settled in the city of Chester, where he practised his faculty with good success to his dying day. Among the several books which he hath written and published I find these, (1) Latham Spaw in Lancashire: with some remarkable Cases and Cures affected by it. Lond. 1670. oct. dedicated to Charles earl of Derby. (2) The Reduction of Ireland to the Crown of England. With the Governours since the Conquest by K. Hen. II. an. 1172, with some Passages in their Government. A brief Account of the Rebellion An. Dom. 1641. Also, the Original of the Univ. of Dublin, and the Coll. of Physicians. Lond. 1675. in a large oct. (3) The History of the Execrable Irish Rebellion, traced from many preceding Acts to the grand Eruption 23 Oct. 1641. And thence pursued to the Act of Settlement 1672. Lond. 1680 fol. Much of this book is taken from another entit. The Irish Rebellion: or, the History of the Beginnings and first Progress of the general Rebellion raised within the Kingdom of Ireland, 23 Oct. 1641, &c. Lond. 1646. qu. Written by sir Joh. Temple knt. master of the rolls, and one of his majesty's honourable privy-council in Irel. (4) Brief Reflections on the Earl of Castlehaven's Memoirs of his Engagement and Carriage in the War in Ireland. By which the Government of that Time, and the Justice of the Crown since, are vindicated from Aspersions cast on both. Lond. 1682. oct. In the third p. of the epist. to the reader before the book, is a pretty severe reflection made on the design of the eighth chapt. of sir Will. Dugdale's book entit. A short View of the late Troubles in Engl. as was a little before by another person, in A Letter in Answer to a Friend, upon Notice of a Book entit. A short View, &c. Wherein in the eighth Chapter the Occasion of the execrable Irish Rebellion in 1641 is egregiously mistaken. This Letter, which is dated on the last of Apr. 1681, was printed at Lond. in 1 sh. in fol. the same year. What other things Dr. Borlase hath written I know not, nor any thing else of him, only that he died, and was buried at Chester, after the year 1682.

Sept. 20. JOH. BINGOOD doct. of phys. of Padua, was then incorporated.—This person, who had been fellow of Exeter coll. was ejected thence in 1648 by the then visitors appointed by parl. first for non-submission, and secondly for drinking of healths to the confusion of reformers. This last reason was mention'd in Hist. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon. lib. 1. p. 397. a. under the tenth head, next following the matter of Rich. Braine there mention'd, which is under the ninth. But the author communicating the copy of that book before it went to the press to a certain doctor in Oxon of Bidgood's faculty, he, upon the perusal of that passage, did falsly (unknowing to the author) acquaint, by another hand, the said Bidgood, then living at Exeter, of it. Whereupon Bidgood, a covetous person,¹ fearing that such a passage as that might, when made public, hinder his practice among the godly party at Exeter, and near it, he made application by letters to the said doctor of Oxon, and to Dr. Fell the publisher of the history, to have it taken out: Whereupon Dr. Fell wondring that he should scruple at such a passage, which made much for his loyalty, the sheet, wherein it was, was reprinted, and the eleventh head in the said p. 397. a, was made the tenth in its place. This health, tho' said by his contemporaries in Exeter coll. to be a Cup of Devils to Reformers, yet the author of the aforesaid history, finding it not so in the visitors register of their actions, but as it is word by word before-mention'd, therefore did he set it so down, without any invention of his own as some did surmise. This Dr. Bidgood, who was honorary fellow of the coll. of physicians at Lond. died very rich at Exeter on the 13th of Jan. 1690, after he had cashier'd and disinherited his nat. son call'd Joh. Sommers sometime M. A. of Trin. coll.² His estate was computed to be worth between 25 and 30,000*l.* the main bulk of which he left to one Humph. Bidgood his kinsman, and some to pious uses: And having been a person of a surley and proud nature, and offensive in word and action, he did a little before his death desire pardon and forgiveness of all the world, especially of several persons with whom he had any animosities.

Whether the same I cannot tell. Sure I am that the sermon was seasonably delivered, the king being then tired out by factious people with petitions relating to parliaments.

Creations.

After the restoration of his majesty king Charles II. it was his and the pleasure of the marquis of Hertford chanc. of the univ. of Ox. and of sir E. Hyde, who succeeded him in that office this year, that there should be a creation in all faculties of such that had suffer'd for his maj. cause, and had been ejected from the university by the visitors appointed by parl. an. 1648. 49. &c.

Masters of Arts.

Seventy and one masters of arts at least were actually created, among whom, some that had not been sufferers, thrust themselves into the crowd for their money. Others, yet few, were gentlemen, and were created by the favour of the chancellor's letters only. Among the 70 and odd masters that were created, I shall mention these following.

 { WILL. WREN }

² [I have seen a MS. Collection of remarkable Passages and Odd Stories, wherein is a memorand. that this John S. there called Dr. Sommers, who cured the king of Spain of his long and dangerous distemper (to the great joy of almost all Europe), was the natural son of Dr. Bidgood, a rich physician at Exeter, who, at his death, gave away his whole estate of 25 or 30,000 pounds to others, but nothing to his son. Whereupon he said to the said Dr. B., his father, 'Sir, you begot me a hastard, bred me a gentleman, and now leave me a beggar,—and so the devil take you.' T. C. (Coxeter?) WANLEY.]

Charles was afterwards burgess for the town of Cambridge to serve in that parl. that began at Westm. 19 May 1685, 1 Jac. 2. He and his brother at the time of their creation and before, were sojourners for a time in the univ. of Oxon.

Aug. 23. JON. DROPE of Magd. coll.—This person, who was son of Tho. Drope vicar of Cummore near Abingdon in Berks, was born in the vicarage-house there, became deny of Magd. coll. an. 1642, aged 16 years, or thereabouts, bore arms for the king soon after within the garrison of Oxon, made true and perpetual fellow of his coll. in 1647, and ejected thence in the year following. esq; about 1654, but leaving it soon after he was succeeded therein by Dav. Thomas usher of Thame school. After his majesty's return he was restored to his fellowship, studied physick, and practised it afterwards in a market town in Lincolnshire called Burrough. He hath written (1) An Hymenæan Essay: or, an Epithalamy upon the royal Match of Ch. II. and Katharine, Infanta of Portugal, 1662. Oxon. 1662. in one sh. and an half in qu. He died in the beginning of Octob. 1670, and was buried in the church of Burrough before-mention'd.

FRANC. DROPE brother to John before-mentioned, was created the same day, Aug. 23.—I have mention'd him already among the writers, an. 1671.

Aug. 23. JAMES METFORD of C. C. coll.—He was the son of Joh. Metford of Crookhorne in Somersetshire, was elected scholar of the said coll. from that of Merton, 28. Jan. 1647, ejected soon after thence by the parliamentary visitors, but being restored in 1660, was, after he had been created M. of A. made fellow of his house. Afterwards,³ by the presentation of the president and society thereof, he became rector of Bassingham in Lincolnshire, (where he now lives) and in Aug. 1687, he became preb. of Bole in the church of York, by the resignation of Rob. Powell. He hath published A general Discourse of Simony. Lond. 1682. oct. having been put upon the writing of it by Dr. Mitch. Honywood dean of Lincoln, who was pleased to inform the author with some resentment, of the too great progress of it in the nation, bewailing the fatal consequence of it in the church, and commanding him to say something (if possible) to stop its growth.

WILL. FULMAN of C. C. coll. was created the same day.—I have at large made mention of him among the writers, under the year 1688.

PHILIP FELL of Trin. coll. was created also the same day.—This person, tho' he was no sufferer for the king's cause, or ever took the degree of B. of A. as having * been turn'd out thence upon no good account, yet by the favour and interest of his elder brother Dr. Joh. He was always esteemed a most excellent Latin poet, as his copies of verses in several books occasionally published in the name of the university, and in others, do manifestly shew. He died at the house of Dr. George Benson preb. of Worcester⁴ (who married his sister) on the 26th of Febr. 1682, aged 49, or thereabouts: Whereupon his body was buried in the cath. ch. there among the graves of his mother's relations.

Nov. 29. GEORGE BRERETON of Queen's coll. a younger son of Will. lord Brereton.—This person, who had been no sufferer or was expell'd, was not only created among the sufferers, but also made soon after fellow of All-s. coll. which place he being in a manner forced to leave, was by the favour of Dr. Cosin made prebendary of Durham.⁵ He died in the beginning of March 1672.

Dec. 15. CLEM. COUTEUR a Jersey man born of Ch. Ch.

Jan. 14. { DAV. WHITFORD } of Ch. Ch.
{ WILL. GODOLPHIN }

The last, which had not any way suffer'd, I shall mention hereafter.

Feb. 14. HENRY HYDE eldest son of Edw. lord Hyde of Hindon chanc. of this univ. (afterwards earl of Clarendon) was diplomated M. of A.—This Henry, who was afterwards lord Cornbury, and after his father's death earl of Clarendon, became lord chamberlain to queen Katharine, in which office I find him in 1665,⁶ was sworn of his majesty's most honourable privy-council, and took his place at the board, 26 May 1680. In the middle of Febr. 1684, he was made lord privy-seal in the place of George marquess of Halifax made lord president of the privy-council, and about the beginning of Dec. 1685 (king James II. being then in the throne) he was constituted lord lieutenant of Ireland: Which honourable office he keeping a full year, was recalled, and soon after the privy-seal was taken from him, as being a person that answer'd not that king's expectation, &c. About the time of his recallment, he was elected high-steward of this university, and after king William III. came to the crown, he suffer'd in several respects, (without offence let it be spoken) because he was a non-juror. He is a true son of the church of Engl. a lover of the regular clergy, &c.

LAURENCE HYDE younger brother to Henry before-mentioned was also diplomated M. of A. the same day.—In Apr. 1661 he was elected one of the burgesses for this university to serve in that parl. which began at Westm. S of May the same year, and on the 30th of Oct. following, he with Will. lord Croft, and sir Charles Berkley groom of the stole, and gent. of the bedchamber to James duke of York, began their journey for France, the two former being sent by his majesty, and the latter by the said duke, to the king of France, to congratulate the happy birth of the dauphine, of whom the queen was delivered Nov. 1. stilo novo. About that time he the said Laurence Hyde was made, by the endeavours of his father, master of the robes to his majesty, and in 1676 or thereabouts was sent ambassador to Poland, "and in 1678 to Holland." In Oct. 1679 he was elected one of the burgesses for Wotton Bassett in his own country of Wilts. to serve in that parl. which was to begin on the 17th of the said month, and on the 19th of Nov. following he became the first commissioner of the treasury, (being the second of the four that were by his majesty appointed on the 26th of March going before, upon the removal of Tho. earl of Danby from the office of lord treasurer) and being then sworn a privy-counsellor, he took his place accordingly at the board. This was done when his majesty on the same day was pleased to declare in council, that he had given leave to Arthur earl of Essex to resign his place of first commissioner of the said treasury, and that he intended his lordship should continue of his privy-council. In the month of Apr.⁷ 1681, his maj. was pleased, in consideration of his faithful services in that office, and other employments of eminent trust, to create him viscount Hyde of Kenilworth in Warwickshire, and baron of Wotton Bassett in Wilts. and soon after upon the death of Charles the young earl of Rochester, to make him an earl by the title of earl of that city in Nov.⁸ (or thereabouts) 1682. On the 24th of Aug. 1684, his maj. being then at Windsor, did declare in council the said earl of Rochester lord president in the place of John earl of Radnor, whom his majesty had given, in consideration of his great age, leave to retire: Whereupon Sidney Godolphin, secretary of state, was made first commissioner of the treasury in his place, and Charles earl of Middleton, in Scotland secretary in Godolphin's place. In Feb. following, king James II, who was then newly proclaimed king, did constitute him lord high treasurer of England, and on the 16th of the said month his majesty gave him the white-staff. On the 29th of June 1685 he was elected knight companion of the most noble order of the garter, and was then invested with the George and Garter, having been first knighted by the sovereign, and on the 22d of July following he was installed in the royal chapel of St. George at Windsor; at which time were also installed Henry duke of Norfolk earl marshal of England, and Henry earl of Peterborough groom of the stole to his majesty. In the beginning of Jan. 1686 he was discharg'd of his place of lord treasurer; and soon after John lord Ballasyse, Sidney lord Godolphin, Henry lord Dover, sir John Ernle chanc. of the exchequer, and sir Steph. Fox,⁹ were constituted commissioners for executing the said office. On the first of March 1691 he was, with Richard earl of Renelagh, Charles lord Cornwallis, and sir Edw. Seymour, bart. sworn of their majesties hon. privy-council, &c.

7. WILL. PARSONS of New coll.—He had been a great sufferer by the presbyterians, and had been kept in jail at Cambridge 19 weeks for his loyalty to king Charles I. during the rebellion. Afterwards retiring to his small living at Birchanger in Essex,³ did usually read the Common-Prayer there in the times of usurpation, and therefore beloved of the loyal gentry in those parts. After his majesty's restoration he became prebendary of Chichester, rector of Lambourne, and vicar of Great Dunmow in Essex. At the last of which places he, dying of an apoplexy, was buried there on the eleventh of July 1671, aged 72 years. This person, tho' said in the register to be actually created doctor of the civil law, yet in the letters of the chanc. of the university written in his behalf, it is said that when he was subwarden of New coll. and batchelor of law, he read his lectures for doctorship according to the statutes, an. 1635.

JOH. LOWEN of Ch. Ch. who had been ejected thence for his loyalty by the parl. visitors in 1648, was actually created the same day, Aug. 7.—He was afterwards of Doctors Commons, and usually lived at Rainham in Essex, where I think he died, in the latter end of 1677.

Dec. 6. PET. MEWS of St. John's coll.

Feb. 16. LEOLIN JENKYNs of Jesus coll.—This person, who was the son of a father of both his names living at Llanblethian in Glamorganshire, was born at Llantrissant in the same county, and at 16 years of age, in 1641, he became a student in Jesus coll. but the troubles in the nation soon after following, he retired to his own country, and afterwards became a tutor to several Welsh gentlemen of quality in the house of Joh. Aubrey at Llantrithied in Glamorganshire esq; which was then left void by sequestration; where continuing from 1648 to 1651, he removed with his charge to Oxon, and there sojourned in an house opposite to Univ. coll. then possess'd by Sampson White a mereer, afterwards mayor of the city, and a knight, where he educated them, as in Glamorganshire before, according to the way of the church of England. In 1655 they were dispers'd, because they were obnoxious to the then schismatical members of the university, and forthwith travelled beyond the seas for 2 or 3 years. After Mr. Jenkyns his return, and delivery up of his pupils to their respective parents and relations, he was invited by the most loyal sir Will. Whitmore of Apely in Shropshire to live with him, an. 1658, the most ingenious Rob. Waring whom he had for some years kept in his family being then dead; where continuing till his majesty's restoration in 1660, he then returned to Jesus coll. of which he was first made fellow, and soon after upon the resignation of Dr. Fr. Mansell, principal, and doct. of the civ. law, as before 'tis told you. Afterwards he retired to London, and in the time of the Dutch war he executed the office of judge of the Admiralty for Dr. Joh. Exton, which he managed with great dexterity and prudence, and at length was judge in his own right; and when sir Will. Merick died, which hapned, as it seems, in Jan. 1668, he became judge of the prerogative.⁴ In Nov. 1669 he was sent by his majesty to the king of France, to claim the jewels of Henrietta Maria the queen mother of England, then lately dead there, and after his return he received the honour of knighthood from his majesty, on the seventh of January the same year. About which time he was a recruiter (for Hyeth one of the Cinque-Ports) in that parl. that began at Westminster 8 May 1661, wherein, as his enemies⁵ say, (who tell⁶ us that he was the son of a taylor, and indefatigably industrious in promoting a peace for France, which has been our . . .) he affirmed, that upon necessity the king might raise monies without act of parliament. In the beginning of the year 1673, he resigned his principality of Jes. coll. being then about to go to Colen in Germany, with Henry earl of Arlington, and sir Joseph Williamson in the quality of plenipotentiaries from his maj. of Great Britain to mediate for a peace between the emperor and king of France. Afterwards (being returned thence) sir Leolin was sent in the same quality by his maj. to Neomagin⁷ in Dec. 1675; and in 1677, when Dr. Sheldon archb. of Canterb. died, all the report then was, that he was to succeed him in that see, being then esteemed eminent for his profession, for his great loyalty to his prince, love and care of the church of England, and its orthodox elergy. In Aug. 1679, he was elected one of the burgesses of this university to sit in that parl. which was to meet at Westm. on the 17th of Octob. following, and on the eleventh of Feb. following that, he was sworn one of his majesty's privy council, being then appointed to succeed Mr. Hen. Coventry in the place of secretary of state. On the 26th of Apr. 1680 he was sworn secretary, and received the seals which the said Mr. Coventry then delivered up to his majesty, and in the beginning of Feb. following he was chose burgess again by the members of this univ. to serve in that parl. which was to begin at Oxon on the 21st of March the same year. But so it was, that the faction being then very high in their proceedings and designs, which they carried on under pretence of prosecuting the popish plot, sir Leolin was so much oppressed

And he gave me an admirable manuscript of common law of his own composing, that he began at that time you mention he lived at Oxford, and finished after his return to Windsor castle. It was a scandal to the age that he was not made a judge in Westminster hall. After the restoration I asking him how it happened he was not, he told me he was represented at court as a superannuated man, and unfit for such a place, but reveré I knew him then to be a very acute man, and of infinitely quicker parts than judge Mallet, who was then made lord chief justice of England. *Original Letter from Sir Peter Pett, to A. with business, and the more because his brother secretary did not understand it, that his body was in short time after so much broken, (followed with great and dangerous indispositions) that he with leave obtained from his maj. did at length on the 14th of Apr. 1681 deliver up the seals of his office to his maj. Whereupon giving a farewell to all secular employments, he retired to a house at Hammersmith near London which he had hired, and there spent the remainder of his days. In the middle of March 1684 (king Jam. II. being then in the throne) he was elected Burgess again by the members of this university, to sit in that parl. which began at Westm. on the 19th of May 1685, but his body being then exceedingly out of order, he did not sit. He died on the first of Sept. 1685, aged 62 years;⁸ whereupon his body being embalm'd, it was conveyed from Hammersmith towards Oxon, being then attended by some of his friends and domestic servants. When it came near the city, several doctors and principal members of the university, as also the mayor, aldermen and citizens, some in coaches, and others on horseback, met it, on the 15th of the same month, and being conducted to the public schools, the vice-chanc. bish. of the diocese, and whole body of the university received and placed it in the divinity school, which was fitted for that purpose. On Thursday the 17th day, the vice-chancellor, bishops, together with the noblemen, doctors, proctors and masters met there in the said school in their formalities; and the memory of the deceased being solemniz'd in a Latin speech by the university orator, the corps was removed to the chappel of Jesus coll. where the vice-chanc. principal thereof, read the offices of burial, and a Latin speech was also spoken by one of the fellows, which was accompanied with music and anthems suitable to the occasion. He was a great benefactor to the new buildings in the quadrangle on the west-side of the refectory of the said coll. in his life time, and when he died he gave to the said coll. 700*l.* per an. and the advowson of two churches. There is a fair mon. over his grave in that chappel with a large inscription thereon, the contents whereof shall now for brevity's sake be omitted, while I tell you that under his name are printed Several Debates in the House of Commons at the Parl. held at West. 21st of Oct. 1680. Printed in a book entit. An exact Collection of the most considerable Debates in the honourable H. of Com. at the Parl. held at Westm. 21 Oct. 1680, &c. Lond. 1681. oct. WILL. DURSTON of Magd. coll. was created the same day by virtue of the letters of the chancellor of the university which say, that he appeared in comitiis, and performed his exercises for the degree of dr. of phys. in the univ. of Dubl. and that from the beginning of the late unhappy wars (and more particularly in the city of Oxon when it was a garrison) he faithfully served his majesty, and afterwards for his loyalty was ejected out of Magd. coll. for not submitting to the then visitation. (1648.)

Aug. 2. THOM. WREN second son of Matthew bishop of Ely, and sometime a student of Cambridge, was created by virtue of the chancellor's letters, which say that by force of the late unhappy times he was constrained to leave the university of Cambridge (in divers colleges whercof his father was visitor) and for his proficiency in studies he was fain to settle himself in the virge of the univers. of Oxon, that the pressures under which his father lay for 17 years together were such, that he could not (his estate being taken away) allow his children bread, much less supply their expences for living in colleges, and the taking of their degrees, only to have the benefit of the public library, &c. This person, who was much addicted to music while he studied in Oxon, which was about 8 years, was made arch-deacon of Ely by his father after his majesty's restoration, had other spiritualities, as I conceive, confer'd upon him, and became a member of the royal society. He died in 1679, being then of Wilberton in the isle of Ely, and whether he was doctor of the laws at Cambridge I cannot tell.⁹

The first, who afterwards practised physic in the city of Salisbury, was created by virtue of the chancellor's letters; the other, who had been ejected his fellowship of Exet. coll. by the parliament visitors in 1648, was also created by virtue of the said letters, which say that he the said D. Pollwhele had from the beginning of the late unhappy troubles vigorously and faithfully served his majesty under the command of Ralph lord Hopton, then of sir Jam. Smith in the quality of a major of horse, and continued in arms until the surrender of Pendennis castle, from whence he went to his late majesty of blessed memory, and afterwards followed his now majesty for some time in Holland and Flanders: and in or about the year 1650 he returned into Cornwall, his native country, where he betook himself to the study and practice of physic, &c.

Ch.—He was created by virtue of the king's letters, which say—We have received good testimony of his abilities in the theory and practice of physic.—He hath been formerly a graduate in Oxon, and hath studied in foreign countries, &c. This person, who was son of John Jacob a physician of Canterbury, was bred in Ch. Oct. 17. EDW. HAWTAINE M. A. of Magd. coll.

30. JOHN LAMPHIRE M. A. of New coll. and Cambden's professor of history.—This person, who was son of George Lamphire an apothecary of the city of Winchester, was born in the parish of St. Laurence in that city, educated in Wykeham's school there, made perpetual fellow of New coll. in 1636, entered on the physic line when master of arts, ejected his fellowship by the parliament visitors, and afterwards practised his faculty with good success in and near Oxford. After his majesty's return he was restored to his fellowship, became Cambden's professor of history upon the ejection of Lewis du Moulin, principal of New inn in the place of Dr. Rogers ejected for nonconformity, and soon after principal of Hart hall. He hath published of other mens works, with epistles before, corrections on, and sometimes additions to, them, these following, (1) Phrases Elegantiores ex Cæsaris Commentariis, &c. and Dictata. Both written by Hugh Lloyd. See in the first vol. of the ATHENÆ OXON. col. 710. (2) Monarchia Britannica, &c. Written by Tho. Master. See in the third vol. of ATHENÆ, col. 85. (3) Rcv. Patris Lanc. Andrews, Episcopi Winton, Preces privata Gracæ & Latine. Oxon, 1675, in tw. Afterwards Dr. Lamphire obtained a more perfect copy of the said prayers, which he was about to publish, but hindered by other affairs. (4) Oratio coram Reg. Elizab. Oxonia habita, 1592. 'Tis the oration of sir Hen. Savile, and 'twas published by Dr. Lamphire with the sec. edit. of Monarchia Britannica. See in the second vol. of ATHENÆ OXON. col. 314. (5) Questiones selectiores in Logica, Ethica, &c. See in Dr. Pink among the writers vol. iii, col. 226. This Dr. Lamphire, who was justice of the peace for the county and city of Oxon, a good, generous and fatherly man, of a public spirit, and free from pharisaical leaven, or the modish hypocrisy of the age he lived in, died in his lodgings in Hart hall on the 30th of March 1688, aged 73 years, and was buried in the outer chappel, near the west door belonging to New coll. The next day Will. Thornton³ M. A. of Wadh. coll. was admitted principal of the said hall in his place, and on the 2d of Apr. following the learned Hen. Dodwell M. of A. of Dublin was elected Cambden's professor of history, to the great content of the generality of the members of the university.

Nov. 29. RICH. FRANKLIN of Qu. coll.—He was put in among the rest, tho' no sufferer for the royal cause.

Dec. 6. HENRY WYAT of Pemb. coll.—He was no sufferer, but was made fellow of the said coll. by the visitors in 1648, and by virtue of the letters sent to the convocation by Lenthall the speaker of the H. of C. he was created master of arts in 1649. Afterwards he went physician with the lord Rutherford lately made earl of Tiveot in Scotland to the garrison of Tangier in the kingdom of Fezz in Africa, and practised his faculty there with good success. At length he accompanying the said count with a select party of horse out of that garrison to view the Moors country, on the 3d of May 1664, were all, some very few excepted, cut off, (after they had passed the Jews river some miles distant from Tangier) by Gayland the chief of the Moors and his party; who having had notice, by the treachery of a certain person, that they would take a view of the country, there was an ambuscade planted to receive them by Gayland, and sheltered by a thick wood, and seconded, as 'twas supposed, by his whole army.

STEPH. BOWDEN of Magd. coll. was nominated by the chanc. letters dat. 1 Dec. this year to be created doct. of physic, but whether he was so it appears not.

The last was chaplain to his majesty in his exile, was collated to the archdeaconry of Salisbury by bishop Duppa in Jan. 1657, in the place of Will. Buckner deceased, and about the same time to a prebendship in the same church. After his majesty's restoration he was installed canon of Windsor 18 July 1660, in the place of Joh. Hales, some years before dead, and had two good rectories bestowed on him in Wilts. He died on the 16th of Jan. 1663, and was buried in the chappel of St. George at Windsor: whereupon his archdeaconry was bestowed on Josh. Childrey and his canonry on Joh. Durell.

JOH. LLOYD M. A. of All-s. coll. chaplain also to his majesty in his exile, who on the 18th of July going before had been installed canon of Windsor in the place of Hugh Cressey, who in the war time had changed his religion. This Dr. Lloyd died on the 9th of Apr. 1671, and thereupon his canonry was bestowed on Joh. Saumares M. A. of Pemb. coll. and dean of Guernsey. One Joh. He was instituted, Sept. 30, 1633, being then M. A. to the rectory of Middleton Cheney, on the presentation of the crown. MS. Harley (in Brit. Mus.) 7048. p. 427.

The next day, Oct. 1, 1633, he (Mr. Thomas Yates, clerk) took possession of the church of Middleton Cheney, sir John Danvers, knight, being 'witness,' as is recorded in words at length in the parish register, and signed by John Rogers, curate.

His notification of induction is entered on the same day, Oct. 1, 1633, in the College Register, vol. B. f. 56.

Sept. 19 the same year, he made oath that the living was 'litigious,' ib. 57. On which account, as was usual in such cases, he was permitted to hold it with his fellowship.

Aug. 20, 1642, he again notified induction to Middleton Cheney, ib. 66. b. and again, May 15, 1643, signified that it was 'litigious' or contested, ib. 67. b.

'He endured many hardships in his living,' Walker says, 'until the year 1646, when he was totally dispossessed of it; which was the more to be lamented, because he had prepared stone, timber, &c. to build a parsonage-house there; but his successor, with a meanness of spirit peculiar to the party, sold them, and contented himself with fitting up an old malt house.' Sufferings of Clergy, p. ii. f. 101. b.

This 'successor' was 'John Cave,' who signs the parish register in 1646; and in 1647 and afterwards, subscribes, 'John Cave, rector.'

Dr. Radcliffe died June 26. ib. 70. b. and was buried at St. Mary's, June 30, 1648. Par. Reg. of St. Mary's.

June 29, Dr. Radcliffe having been dead three days, the society put up a citation on the chapel door (as the statutes require) for election. The visitors sent for Mr. Tho. Sixsmith and two more fellows, bidding them submit to their new principal Greenwood; but they gave them fair words, and went home. Annals by Gutch, vol. ii. p. 592.

July 10. A guard of soldiers stayed all day at the chapel and hall door, to prevent the election of a new principal. ib. 600. The fellows therefore deferred till the 13th, and then chose Mr. Tho. Yate, one of their society, in a chamber at the west end of the old library. ib. 592.

(This was the room up one pair of stairs, in what is called Lincoln Corner, which having no window to the quadrangle, but only into Lincoln-lane, was the more retired and suitable to their purpose.)

Aug. 2, 1660, he with some other loyalists, was created D. D. But he, as Wood observes, was the only sufferer of those created that day.

Aug. 10, 1660. The king's visitors order Dr. Yate to be admitted principal, and remove Dr. Greenwood. Coll. Reg. f. 87, 88.

In 1666, Nov. 17, (which is St. Hugh's day, and the beginning of the year in the Brasen-nose accounts) he officiated at the consecration of the chapel, by Blandford, bishop of Oxford. Dr. Yate's Book, p. 290.

Sir W. Dugdale, June 2, 1668, addresses a letter to him as his 'very worthy and much honoured friend.' See an extract from the letter in the Founders of Brasen-nose, App. p. 532, and more of Yate, p. 356.

Fuller also, Worthies of Cheshire, p. 182, calls Dr. Yate 'his good friend.' (It appears by sir W. Dugdale's letter, that Dr. Yate furnished him with collections concerning the priory of Cold Norton, &c.)

In 1671, Oct. 1, a lease of the privilege of printing was granted by the university to sir Leoline Jenkins, Dr. Yate, Dr. John Fell, and Joseph Williamson, for 3 years from Lady-day 1672, at the rent of 200*l.* Univ. Archives, east press, (now S. E.) p. 7, where also 9—12 are on the same business; or see the sen. proctor's repository of charters, &c.

(The days of Dr. Fell form an æra in the annals of the Oxford press. It is probable from this lease that some part of the credit is due to Dr. Yate. At least it is something 'e tot Graiorum millibus,' to be selected and associated with such men as the incomparably learned and excellent Bp. Fell, sir Leoline Jenkins, the great benefactor of Jesus college, and, I suppose, sir Joseph Williamson, a great benefactor to Queen's coll.)

Dr. Yate was also twice delegated with Dr. Fell and others, by James duke of Ormond, chancellor of the university, to execute his jurisdiction during his absence as lord lieutenant of Ireland; namely in 1674 and 1677. A. W. Annals, by Gutch, vol. ii. Fasti, 147, 148.

He died April 22, 1681. Coll. Reg. ut supra, f. 120. b. and was buried in the cloisters, near the entrance of the antechapel. His epitaph and arms (party per chev. or and sable, three gates counterchanged) are given in Wood's Colleges, p. 376. I have said Founders, p. 356. n. o. He died in the 79th year of his age, I suppose, from the words of the epitaph: 'Post xx annorum pacatissimum in regimine decursum. Et [post] vitæ [annum] LXXVIII.' but perhaps the meaning is, 'Et vitæ [anno] LXXVIII.'

In Wood's Colleges, p. 370, among the portraits in the hall, occurs 'Thomas Yates, D. D. principal.'

William Yate, M. A. and fellow, nephew to Dr. Yate, died Sat. Nov. 8, 1679, æt. 33. Buried in the cloisters. Ib. 378.

Elizabeth Bartlet, Dr. Yate's widow (first married to sir Richard Cave, knight) died Friday, Jan. 11, 1688, aged 80 or more, and was buried near Dr. Yate. Ib. 381. Her arms are impaled on his monument.

Tho. Yate, M. A. one of the sen. fellows, died in college, Wedn. Jan. 4, 1683, in the 31st year of his age, and was buried in the cloister. He was heir and executor to Dr. Yate, who was elder brother to his father, Samuel Yate, curate to Dr. Yate at Middleton Cheney. Ib. The said Samuel Yate or Yates, (for both he and his brother, Dr. Yate, sometimes wrote their name Yate and sometimes Yates) succeeded Dr. Yate in the living of Middleton, which he held till his death. He was buried at Middleton, April 7, 1693. Par. Reg. of Middleton Cheney.

He was afterwards bishop of St. Dav. and Worc. successively.

These four last doctors I have mention'd at large among the writers in their respective places.

BYRON EATON of Brasen. coll.—He was soon after principal of Gloc. hall, and when Dr. Barlow became bish. of Linc. he gave him first the archdeaconry of Stow, and afterwards that of Leicester, in which last he was installed 8 Sept. 1683.⁷

All the said doctors before-mention'd from Guy Carleton to Byr. Eaton were created on the 2d of Aug.

At the same time were letters from the chancellor read for GEORGE JAY of Ch. Ch. to be created D. of D. but being not present, he was to be admitted when he made his appearance. The said letter speaks thus of him.—He continued a student of Ch. Ch. for the space of 20 years and upwards, and in the year 1614 he proceeded M. of A. and was first made grammar reader, then terre-filius at the public act, and afterwards was made chaplain to the earl of Anglesea and after to the duke of Bucks, and then to Dr. White bishop of Ely lately deceased. And now his majesty taking special notice of Mr. Jay's worth and abilities, as also of his services done to him, and his sufferings for him, hath been graciously pleased, without any privy or seeking of his own,

The third of these was treasurer of the cathedral church of St. David, afterwards archdeacon of Cardigan, and died in 1680. The last, who was fourth son of Peter Priaulx of Southampton, and born, and educated in grammar, there, was admitted probationer fellow of the said coll. of Mert. an. 1635, proceeded in arts, and soon after entred into the sacred function. In the time of the rebellion he left the college, sided with the men that were uppermost, became rector of Fovant in Wilts, and afterwards assistant to the commissioners for the ejecting of such whom the presbyterians and independents called ignorant, scandalous and insufficient ministers and schoolmasters, an. 1654. After his majesty's restoration he became preb. of Netherbury in terra in the church of Salisbury, D. of D. as before 'tis said, and being then esteemed an excellent theologian, the king's professorship of divinity was offer'd to him upon Dr. Sanderson's promotion to the see of Linc. but he modestly refusing it, it was confer'd on Dr. William Creed. In May 1671 he became archdeacon of Salisbury in the place of Joh. 30. RICH. PARR of Ex. coll.

In the month of Oct. were the king's letters, dated 27 Sept. read in behalf of one HERBERT ASTLEY to be doct. of divinity, but whether he was admitted it appears not.—He was afterwards doct. of law of Cambridge, as it seems, preb. and at length dean of Norwich: in which last dignity he was installed on the second day of Sept. 1670 in the place of Dr. Joh. Croft deceased. This person, who was son of Herb. Astley, or Ashley rather, of Plymouth in Devonshire, was, upon his accidental coming into Norfolk, taken into the patronage of sir Jac. and sir Isaac Astley, and by them, who took him to be their kinsman, was prefer'd to several livings in those parts, and marrying with a Hobart, he was, by the endeavours of that family, promoted to the said deanery. He died in the month of May, as it seems, in 1681, and was inter'd in the cathedral church at Norwich near to the monument of sir Hen. Hobart.

The first of these three became archdeacon of Winchester in the place of Dr. Tho. Gorges deceased, and dying on the 29th of March 1684, aged 74 years, his archdeaconry was bestowed on Dr. Rob. Sharrock.

19. THOM. MANTON of Wadh. coll. the noted presbyterian:

29. THOM. LOCKEY B. D. and student of Ch. Ch.—He was afterwards canon of that house, and dying on the 29th of June 1679, aged 78 years, was buried in the second isle joyning on the north side to the choir of Ch. Ch. where there is a neat monument over his grave. He was a retired and studious person, had been a great tutor in his house in the time of usurpation, a collector of pictures, coins, medals, &c. All or most of which, with his choice library, came into the hands of Dr. Hen. Killigrew preb. of Westminster.

THO. HACKET² M. A. of Trin. coll. near Dublin was actually created the same day.—He was dean of Cork in Ireland, afterwards vicar of Cheshunt in Hertfordshire, chaplain in ordinary to his majesty, and at length bishop of Downe.³ He hath extant A Convocation Sermon at Dublin;

Afterwards he became rector of Hartingfordbury in Hertfordshire, procured by his interest (as certain other presbyterians did,) to be created D. D. among the royalists, and afterwards being ejected from his living for nonconformity, (as a printed catalogue of the generality of nonconformists in England informs me) did afterwards conform and became rector of St. Margaret Patens in the city of London.⁶ He hath published The righteous Judge, Sermon preached at Hertford Assize, 10 March 1683 on Gen. 18. 25. last part, Lond. 1682, qu. This person being a high royalist for the cause of the king of England, 'twas frequent with him to have several passages in his sermons at the Hague, (esteemed by those that were not lovers of his majesty, to be extravagancies, invectives and strange digressions) which being looked upon as much tending to the prejudice of peace and the intended treaties between England and Holland, he

Mar. 12. WILLIAM HOLDER of Cambridge.—This worthy person, who is a Nottinghamshire man born,* was educated in Pemb. hall there, where he had a Greek scholar's place, commenced M. of A. entered into holy orders, and in 1642 or thereabouts, he became rector of Blechindon in Oxfordshire, and in the year following was incorporated M. of A. in this university, as before I have told you. After his majesty's restoration he became canon of Ely, fellow of the royal society, canon of St. Paul's,³ subdean of his majesty's chapel (in the place of Walt. Jones⁶ deceased) and subalmoner to him. He is a great virtuoso and a person of many accomplishments, and hath obtained a great name for his most wonderful art in making a young gentleman named Alex. Popham, (son of colonel Edw. Popham, sometime an admiral at sea for the long parliament) who was born deaf and dumb, to speak; and how soon, and by what method he did it, he tells you in an appendix to his most rare and ingenious discourse of The Elements of Speech, which I shall anon mention. This great cure was performed by him (whereby he is the first that is remembered ever to have succeeded therein in England, or perhaps in the world) in his house at Blechindon, an. 1659: and because it was a wonderful matter many curious scholars went from Oxon to see and to hear the person speak, but he being afterwards called home by his friends, began to lose what he had been taught by Dr. Holder. Afterwards a great noise being made, that Dr. Joh. Wallis had, by his art, made another young gentleman named Mr. Whalley, who had lost his speech ever since he was five years of age, to speak, the said Mr. Popham was by his relations sent to the said Dr. Wallis to make him speak, which he effecting, he afterwards very vainly assumed the glory of it to himself, without taking notice of what had been before done to him. This Dr. Holder hath written The Elements of Speech, an Essay of Inquiry into the natural Production of Letters; with an Appendix concerning Persons that are deaf and dumb. Lond. 1669, oct. as also A Supplement to the Philosophical Transactions of July 1670, with some Reflections on Dr. Wallis his Letter there inserted, Lond. 1678 in two sh. in qu. This last was written by him to vindicate himself that he had taught Mr. Popham to speak, which Dr. Wallis in the said letter did claim to himself. Whereupon, soon after, Dr. Wallis (who, at any time, can make black white, and white black, for his own ends, and hath a ready knack of sophistical⁷ evasion, as the writer of these matters doth know full well) did soon after publish an answer to that Supplement entit. A Defence of the Royal Society and the Philosophical Transactions, particularly those of July, 1670, in Answer to the Cavils of Dr. Will. Holder, Lond. 1678, in 4 sh. in qu. written by way of letter to Will. lord visc. Brouncker. Dr. Holder also, who hath good skill in the theoretic and praeitic parts of music, hath written in English* A Treatise of the natural Grounds and Principles of

Harmony. Lond. 1694, oct. Dr. Holder hath also written A Discourse concerning Time, with Application of the Natural Day, and Lunar Month and Solar Year, &c. Lond. 1694, oct.⁸

* hath written in English a Treatise of Musick, which is ready, as I have heard, for the press. First edit.

In the month of Sept. became also a sojourner in this university for the sake of the said library FRANCIS WILLOUGHBY of Middleton in Warwickshire esq. a person much celebrated to this day among the virtuosi of great renown.¹—He was the only son of sir Francis Willoughby knt. descended* of two very antient families, both Willoughbys, the one honourable, viz. that of Eresby in Lincolnshire, by the father's side, the other worshipful, viz. that of Willoughby on the Wolds in Nottinghamshire, by the mother's. While he was young his relations discovered in him most excellent gifts and abilities both of body and mind, and therefore nothing was by them spared to promote and enlarge them, as being also blessed with a fair estate. However, when he grew elder, as he did duly prize these advantages of birth, estate, and parts, so did he not content himself therewith or value himself thereby, but laboured after what might render him more deservedly honourable, and more truly to be called his own, as being obtained by the concurrence at least of his endeavours. First then as God had given him a quick apprehension, piercing wit and sound judgment; so by his great industry and constant use of these gifts he did highly improve and advance them. He was from his childhood addicted to study, and ever after when he came to the use of reason so great a husband of his time, that he did not willingly lose or let slip unoccupied the least fragment of it, detesting no vice more than idleness, which he looked upon as the parent and nurse of almost all others: nay, so excessive was he in the prosecution of his studies without any intermission or diversion that most of his friends were of opinion he did much weaken his body and impair his health by his uncessant labours and perpetual intention of mind upon business. Whence it came to pass that he obtained very great skill in all parts of learning, and particularly a deep insight into those sciences which are most abstruse and impervious to vulgar capacities; I mean the most subtil parts of the mathematics. Of his skill in natural philosophy, chiefly the history of animals (birds, beasts, fishes and insects) I shall say no more at present, but that it hath not been my hap to meet with any man either in England or beyond the seas of so general and comprehensive knowledge therein. To pass by his eminent virtues, as his humility, sobriety and temperance, exemplary chastity and purity, his justness, constancy, charity, &c. I shall give you the catalogue of his works, viz. (1) Ornithologia Libri tres: in quibus Aves omnes hactenus cognitæ in Methodum Naturis suis convenientem redactæ accurate describuntur, Descriptiones Iconibus elegantissimis, & vivarum Avium simillimis, Aeri incisus illustrantur, Lond. 1676, fol. Viewed, corrected and digested into order by Joh. Ray fellow of the royal society. Afterwards it was translated into English, with an Appendix added to it by the said Mr. Ray.—Lond. 1678, fol. The author Mr. Willoughby observing in the busy and inquisitive age he lived in, the history of animals alone to have been in a great measure neglected by Englishmen, he made the study thereof his province, applying himself with all diligence to the cultivating and illustrating of it. Which that he might the more effectually do, he not only read what had been written by others, but did himself accurately describe all the animals he could find and procure either in England or beyond the seas, making a voyage into foreign countries, chiefly for that purpose, to search out, view and describe the several species of nature; and tho' he was not long abroad, yet travelled he over a great part of France, Spain, Italy, Germany and the Low Countries. In all which places he was so inquisitive and successful, that not many sorts of animals, described by others, escaped his diligence. He drew them out or described them with a pencil, which are with great curiosity engraven on copper plates, at the charge of his relict Emm, and are printed in the Latin and English edition of the said Ornithologia. He hath also written (2) Historia Piscium Libri quatuor, &c. Oxon, 1686, fol. Which work was with great pains, view'd, review'd, made fit for use, and the two first books entirely compleated by the said most eminent virtuoso Mr. Ray. It is adorned with very many cuts of several sorts of fishes, that were not ever before known in England. (3) Letter containing some considerable Observations about that Kind of Wasps called Ichneumones, &c.—dat. 24 Aug. 1671. See in the Philos. Transact. num. 76. p. 2279. (4) Letter about the hatching a Kind of Bee lodged in old Willows.—dat. 10 July 1671. See in the said Transact. num. 74. p. 2221. This Mr. Willoughby's Travels into Spain, are published by Mr. Joh. Ray at the end of his own travels. At length this most worthy and learned person Mr. Willoughby dying to the great reluctancy of all curious and inquisitive persons, especially those of the royal society, (of which he was an eminent member and ornament) to his friends and all good men that knew him, and the great loss of the commonwealth of learning, on the third day of July 1672, aged 37 years, was buried, as I presume, at Middleton among the graves of his ancestors.

May 24. ROB. SHARROCK of New coll. — He was then licensed to proceed, but did not stand in the act following to compleat that degree.⁵

Not one doct. of phys. was licensed this year, only [142] created.

Doctor of Divinity.

July 3. GEORGE ESCOURT of Trin. coll. a compounder.

Incorporations.

May 21. GEORGE SMITH doct. of phys. of Padua. — This person, who was lately of Qu. coll. in this university, took the said degree at Pad. in Mar. 1657. He was afterwards of the coll. of phys.

June 18. EDW. WETENHALL batch. of arts of Cambridge. — In the next month he was admitted M. of A. as I have before told you.

25. JOHN PARRY fellow of Jesus coll. and M. of A. of 8 years standing, who having performed all his exercise for batch. of div. in Trin. coll. chappel near Dublin on the 26th of Jan. 1660, and the same day declared batch. of div. there, was incorporated batch. of divinity of this university. — He was afterwards bishop of Ossory as I have among the writers told you, an. 1677.

RALPH WHITFIELD B. A. of Dublin was incorp. the same day. — He took that degree at Dub. 7 Aug. 1655, which is all I know of him.⁶

July 9. TIM. PULLER M. A. and fellow of Jesus coll. in Camb. — He was afterwards rector of Sawcombe in Hertfordshire, D. of D. of Cambr. an. 1675, rector of the church of St. Mary le Bow in London, and author of The Moderation of the Church of England considered as useful for allaying the present Distempers, which the Indisposition of the Time hath contracted, Lond. 1679, oct. &c. "He died at London in Nov. 1693, and was buried in the church of St. Mary le Bow."

At the same time when this worthy person Mr. Puller was inc. (which was just after the act time) nine masters of Cambridge were incorp. also; among whom JOH. ELLIS of Caius coll. was one, WILL. WILLIAMS of Emanuel another, (of both whose names have been several writers) and THO. LEIGH of the said coll. a third. One Thom. Leigh batch. of div. and vicar of Bishops Stortford in Hertfordshire, hath published, The Keeping of Holidays, Sermon preached at Hadham before Henry Bish. of London, at his Lordship's Conference with the Clergy there, Lond. 1684, 85. qu. Whether he be the same with the former Tho. Leigh, I know not. Quære.

HANNET WARD doct. of physie of Angers in France was incorporated on the same day July 9. — This person, who was a Dorsetshire man born, had the said degree confer'd on him at Angers an. 1646, and was now vicar of Stourminster-Newton-Castle in his own country, and one of the preb. of Wells. He hath published (1) The Protestant Soldier fighting under Truth's Banner, printed 1642. (2) Sermon preached at Shaftesbury in the primary Visitation of Guy Bishop of Bristol; on Ephes. 3. 8. Lond. 1674, qu. and other things which I have not yet seen. See more in Hen. Byam among the writers, an. 1669.

⁵ [Quære? for there are questions printed under his name in the sheet of the act 1661. TANNER.]

July 9. TOBIAS DICKSON doct. of phys. of Cambr.

11. WILL. BRIGHT doct. of the same faculty at Padua. —The same degree was confered on him at Padua, an. 1658. He was afterwards honorary fellow of the college of physicians.

Sept. 9. ROB. WISHART M. of A. of St. Andrew's in Scotland. —He was son of the learned and famous George Wishart D. D. of whom the reader may be pleased to know that he was a Scotch man born and a minister in the church of St. Andrew in the same university, that he had suffered in the time of the covenant a long and tedious imprisonment in the nastiest part of the Tolbooth at Edinburgh called the thief's hole, and afterwards did accompany the most victorious and noble James marquess of Montross in his conquest of Scotland: But upon the much lamented declension of that immortal person, he became chaplain to the sister of king Charles I. called the queen of Bohemia, and, about the time of his majesty's restoration,⁷ a minister in Newcastle upon Tyne, where he was held in great veneration for his unspotted loyalty. In 1662, Jun. 1, he was consecrated at St. Andrew's bishop of Edinburgh, with Dr. Dav. Michell to Aberdene, and dying at Edinburgh in Jul. or Aug. 1671, was buried in the abbey church of Halyrood-house. He was a person of great religion, and very charitable to the poor, and having been a prisoner, he was always careful, at each dinner that he made, to send the first dish from his table to the prisoners.⁸ He hath written The compleat Hist. of the Wars of Scotland, under the Conduct of the illustrious and truly valiant James Marquess of Montross, &c. Printed several times in Lat. and English. The first edit. came out at the Hague in 1647. oct. See in Dav. Whitford among the writers, an. 1674.

Nov. 12. RICH. TREVOR of Mert. coll. doct. of phys. of Padua. —This well-bred gent. who was son of sir Joh. Trevor kt. and younger brother to sir Joh. Trevor, who was made secretary of state in the latter end of Oct. 1668, after his return from his embassy in France, died near the Temple gate on the 17th of July 1676, and was buried in the church of St. Dunstan in the West in Fleetstreet, Lond.

21. { LEVIN FLUDD } doct. of phys. of Padua.
{ ROB. STAPLEY }

The first of these two had that degree confer'd on him at Pad. in Aug. 1639, and the other in May 1648.

[143]

Dec. 7. JOHN DOWNES } doct. of phys. of { Leyden.
Mar. 4. JOH. ATFIELD } { Caen.
13. THOM. BATHURST } { Leyden.

The first of these three was afterwards fellow of the coll. of phys. at Lond. The second, who was a Londoner born, and had taken his degree at Caen in 1657, was also afterwards fellow of the said coll. and the third, who took his degree at Leyden in 1659, was afterwards a knight, and I think fell. also.

⁷ [In 1660 upon Dr. Cosins being made bishop of Durham, R. Wishart succeeded him in the rectory of Brancepeth. GREY. The rectory of Brandspath was on his consecration given to Dr. Brevint. TANNER.]

⁸ [See Burnet's Hist. of his own Time, i. 236. 143.]

Creations.

Creations were made in all faculties, either by the favour of his majesty, or of Clarendon the chancellor of the university, when he was entertained by the univ. in Sept. 1661.

Batchelors of Law.

About five were created, but not one of them was afterwards a writer or bishop: Among them were THO. WILKINS of Jes. coll. a sufferer for his majesty's cause, Sept. 12. EDM. ARNOLD of Mert. coll. belonging to the court of arches, Oct. 10, &c.

Masters of Arts.

The creations of masters' were mostly made in a convocation held in the morn. of the 9th of Sept. at which time Edw. earl of Clarendon lord chanc. of England, and chanc. of the univ. was seated in the supreme chair.

JOH. WILMOT EARL OF ROCHESTER, of Wadh. coll.

JAM. LEVINGSTON VISC. OF KIMARDIN (as 'tis said in the reg.) and earl of Newburgh in Scotland, sometime of Mert. coll.

EDW. MONTAGUE eldest son of Edw. lord Montague of Boughton.

EDW. HYDE of Ch. Ch. third son of Edw. earl of Clarendon. —He died of the small-pox on the 10th of January an. 1664, aged 19 years or thereabouts, and was buried in the abbey ch. at Westminster, leaving then this character behind him, that he was the most hopeful youth and the best-natur'd creature in the world.

JOHN LOVELACE of Wadh. coll. eldest son of John Lovelace —He was after the death of his father lord Lovelace, but obtaining no great matter during the reigns of king Charles II. and king James II. which he expected, because his father had been a great sufferer for the cause of king Charles I. he was by the favour of king William III. (to whom he adhered when he arrived in the West in the beginning of Nov. 1688, and for his sake was for some time imprison'd at Gloucester) made captain of his band of gentlemen pensioners, in the beginning of March 1688, "and chief-justice in eyre of all his majesty's forests on this side the Trent. He died 27 Sept. 1693."

EDW. SEEBRIGHT } of St. Joh. coll. baronets.
JOHN WILLIAMS }

The former was of Besford in Worcestershire, the other of Dorsetshire.

Sir ALAN. BRODERICK knt. his majesty's surveyor general for the kingdom of Ireland. —This person, who was endowed with a poetical wit, and hath several specimens thereof extant, died at Wandsworth in Surrey, 25 Nov. 1680, and was buried there the 3d of Dec. following. "He was formerly of Magd. hall,⁹ and was son of Tho. Broderick of Wandsworth esq;."

JOHN BULTEEL secretary to Edw. earl of Clarendon. —This person, who was son of John Bulteel a Frenchman, sometime living at Dover, died a batchelor in the parish of St. Martin in the Fields in Westminster, an. 1669. One Joh. Bulteel gent. translated from French into English A general chronological History of France before the Reign of K. Pharamond, and ending with the Reign of King Hen. IV. &c. Lond. 1683. fol. Whether he be the same with the former, who was created M. of A. I know not. I have made mention of another Joh. Bulteel in the FASTI the first vol. col. 420.

MATTHEW WREN or WRENN secretary to the said Edw. earl of Clar.—This person, who was the eldest son of Dr. Matthew Wren bish. of Ely,¹ was originally a student in Cambridge, and afterwards a student for several years (in the time of usurpation) in this university, not in a coll. or hall, but in a private house. After his majesty's restoration he was taken into the service of the earl of Clarendon, was elected a burgess for St. Michael in Cornwall to serve in that parl. that began at Westm. 8 May 1661, became a member of the royal society, and of the council thereof, and after the fall of the said Clarendon, he became secretary to James duke of York, and continued in his service to the time of his death. At length giving way to fate on the 14th of June or thereabouts, an. 1672, aged about 42 years, his body was conveyed to Cambridge, and there buried in Pemb. hall chappel, in the same vault wherein his father was five years before buried. This ingenious person hath written (1) Considerations on Mr. Harrington's Commonwealth of Oceana; restrained to the first Part of the Preliminaries. Lond. 1657. oct. Before these Considerations is a large letter sent by the author to Dr. Joh. Wilkins warden of Wadham coll. by whom the said author was desired to give his judgment concerning the commonwealth of Oceana. (2) Monarchy asserted: or the State of monarchical and popular Government, in Vindication of the Considerations on Mr. Harrington's Oceana, Lond. 1659, and 1660. oct.² See more in Jam. Harrington among the writers, an. 1677.

JOHN DUGDALE chief gent. in the chamber of the said earl of Clarendon lord chanc. of England.—This person, who was the son of sir Will. Dugdale mention'd in these FASTI, an. 1642, was afterwards Windsor herald upon the resignation of Elias Ashmole esq;³ and at length Norroy king of arms, (upon the promotion of sir Thom. St. George to the office of Garter, in the place of the said sir William deceased) in the beginning of March 1685; about which time he received the honour of knighthood from his majesty. This sir Joh. Dugdale hath published A Catalogue of the Nobility of England, according to their respective Precedencies, as it was presented to his Majesty on New-years day An. 1684. To which is added The Blazon of their paternal Coats of Arms, and a List of the present Bishops, by permission of the Duke of Norfolk Earl Marshal. This was printed at Lond. on a broad side of a large sh. of paper, an. 1685, and came out again with additions in 1690.

All which were created by the favour of the said chanc.

Oct. 9. PAUL LATHAM of Pemb. coll.—He was afterwards preb. of Salisbury, and a publisher of several sermons, and therefore he ought hereafter to be mention'd more at large.

Nov. 6. THO. TRAHERNE of Brasen. coll.

Besides all these were several others created, among whom were RICH. NEWBOROUGH of Bal. coll. May 28, who had served his maj. in the late wars, and was this year preb. of Hereford.⁴

Batchelors of Divinity.

Thirteen batch. of div. were created by virtue of the chancellor's recommendations, among whom were these,

Jul. 1. THOM. MARSHALL of Linc. coll.

Sept. 12. { WILL. WYATT } of St. Joh. coll.
RICH. SAMWALS of C. C. coll.

As for Wyatt, who was born at Todenham in Gloucestershire, he was not graduated in arts, because before the time came when he should take the degree of batch. the civil war began. Afterwards he was assistant to Dr. Jer. Taylor when he taught school in Caermarthenshire, and wrote, as 'twas usually said, (which he himself did also acknowledge) A new and easy Institution of Grammar, &c. which was published under Dr. Taylor's name. See more in the life of the said doctor among the writers, an. 1667. vol. iii. col. 788. Afterwards Mr. Wyatt taught at Evesham in Worcestershire, and at length assisted Mr. Will. Fuller while he taught a private school at Twittenham in Middlesex. Afterwards, when that person became bishop of Linc. he made him not only his chapl. but also preb. and afterwards chantor of the church there.⁵ Which dignities he resigning in 1681, he retired to Nun-Eaton in Warwickshire,⁶ where he died in the house of sir Richard Newdigate, about 1686. What other things the said Mr. Wyatt hath written I cannot tell.

Nov. 6. RICH. BAYLIE of St. Joh. coll.—He was son of Dr. Rich. Baylie president of that coll. and dying at London, (where he was a merchant) in the latter end of 1675, his body was conveyed to Oxon, and buried in a vault under a little chappel (built by the said doctor an. 1662.) joyning to that of St. Joh. coll. on the 15th of March the same year.

Dec. 11. DAVID BUDD.—The coll. or hall of which he was a member (if of any) is not set down in the register.

Doctors of Physic.

May 9. WILL. JACKSON of Univ. coll. was created by virtue of the king's letters, which tell us, that his father^a was doct. of div. and sequestered in the late rebellion from about 300*l.* per an. Also that this William was in the old king's service at Colchester, and in the service of this king; That his near kinsman col. Rob. Levinz suffered, and was executed by the bloody rebels, &c.

Doctors of Divinity.

Apr. 1. THO. TRIPLET M. of A. was then diplomated.—He was born in, or near, Oxon, was educated a student of Ch. Ch. where, and in the univ. he was always esteemed a great wit, and a good Grecian^c and poet. In Oct. 1645 he became preb. of Preston in the ch. of Sarum, at which time he was also beneficed, but soon after being sequestered, he taught school at Dublin in Ireland, was there when king Charles I. was beheaded, and afterwards taught at Hayes in Middlesex. After king Charles II. was restored, he was made preb. of Westminster, and of Fenton in the church of York;^d and dying 18 Jul. 1670, aged 70 years, his body was buried in the south transept or large south isle joyning to the choir of St. Peter's church in Westminster. Over his grave was, soon after, fastned to the west wall of the said isle a fair monument, in the very place where the monument of Tho. May the poet once stood. This worthy doctor, of whom you may see more in the second vol. col. 569. hath several specimens of his poetry extant in various books, and some that yet go from hand to hand in MS.

May 21. FRANC. DAVIES of Jes. coll.—He was afterwards bish. of Landaff.

Jun. 7. JOH. FAIRCLOUGH commonly called FEATLEY of All-s. coll.

12. SAM. BOLTON of Linc. coll. now one of the king's chaplains, was then created by virtue of the chancellor's letters, which say, that he is a man of extraordinary abilities and great integrity; and one who by his preaching in this city (London) is very serviceable to the interest of the king and church, &c. On the 15th of Jan. 1661, he and Dr. Br. Ryves, preach'd before the house of commons at St. Margaret's in Westm. and were by them desired to print their sermons; but whether they were printed, I know not, for I have not yet seen either. See more of this Dr. Bolton in the second vol. col. 516.

Jun. 7. { EDW. DROPE } of Magd. coll.
{ EDM. DIGGLE }

The first of these two, who was esteemed a good preacher, and therefore put upon preaching before the king and parl. at Oxon, in the time of the rebellion, and upon that account had the degree of doctor confer'd upon him, died in Magd. coll. 13 Apr. 1683, aged 84, or thereabouts, and was buried in the outer chappel there. The other, who also had his degree confer'd upon him on the like account, was then canon of Litchfield (which they call the golden prebend) by the favour of Dr. Frewen bishop thereof (to whom he was chaplain) and afterwards became preb. of Hustwait in the church of York, and archdeacon of York, or of the West-Riding of Yorksh. in the place of Dr. Rich. Marsh^e deceased; in which last dignity he was installed 19 Oct. 1663. He died at Slimbridge in Gloucestershire (of which he was rector) on the first of August, an. 1688.

Jul. 3. CORNELIUS TRIGLAND a learned theologist, and chapl. to the prince of Aurange or Orange, was diplomated by virtue of the chancellor's letters, which say, that he is one of the ministers at the Hague,—was very kind to the king (Charles II.) and his friends, while they lived in those parts—shewed himself kind to the church of England—entrusted by our king with a great share of the education of his nephew the prince of Orange, &c. There is mention made of this learned person in Dr. George Morley among the writers, an. 1684.

of Bucks, in the place of Rob. Newell,⁴ who died in the time of the civ. war.

[146] Jul. 9. DAVID MICHELL (Sanctandrianus as in the reg. he is called) preb. of Westminster, was created by virtue of the chancellor's letters, which say, that Mr. Dav. Michell of Aberdene is a person very learned and honest, and from the beginning of the troubles has been a great sufferer for the cause of his majesty and the church, &c. This worthy person was born in the shire of Merne, was minister at Edinburgh, and there challenged for Arminianism in the time of the covenant, and forced afterwards to fly into Engl. where he enjoyed some benefice during his exile. After his maj. restoration, he was made preb. of Westm. as before 'tis told you, and on the first day of June 1662 he was consecrated bishop of Aberdene at St. Andrew's, with Dr. Wishart to Edinburgh, where sitting but one year, died of a fever, and was buried in the cath. ch. of St. Macchar at Old Aberdene among his predecessors.

Jul. 19. THO. GORGES of All-s. coll. — On the 23d of Apr. 1643, he was collated to the prebendship of Woodford and Willsford in the ch. of Salisbury, and afterwards suffered much for the royal cause. After the return of his maj. he was restored to his prebendship, was installed archdeacon of Winchester on the death of Dr. George Roberts, 19 Mar. 1660, and soon after became preb. of Westminster. After his death his archdeaconry was bestowed on Dr. Walt. Dayrel, and his preb. of Salisbury on Dr. Will. Lloyd, to which he was collated in Dec. 1667, but who succeeded him in Westm. I cannot yet tell. In 1629, the said Tho. Gorges was elected fellow of All-s. coll. with Gilbert Talbot a native of Worcestershire, son of Sherington Talbot an inhabitant then of Lacock in Wilts: Which Gilb. (who was originally of Ch. Ch.) was by his majesty sent ordinary agent to the republic of Venice, about 1638, was afterwards a sufferer for his cause in the time of the rebellion, and having the honour of knighthood confer'd on him, became master of the jewel-house, and one of the first 21 persons who were appointed by his majesty to be of the council of the royal society at its first institution, &c.

Sept. 5. WILL. BARKER of New coll. was created doctor for his laudable sermons preached before the king and parl. at Oxon during the time of the rebellion. — He was now preb. of Canterbury, and dying in his rectory-house at Harlwick in Bucks, 26 Mar. 1669, was buried in the church there. I have seen his epitaph, wherein 'tis said, that he was always noted for his orthodox sermons, and for his frequent and innocent conceits and jests.

Sept. 9. RICH. RALLINGSON or RAWLINGSOON of Queen's coll. chaplain to the duke of Newcastle, was created while the chancellor held the supreme chair in convocation. — He was an ingenious man, well skill'd in the mathematics, but had not preferment confer'd on him equal to his merits. He died in 1668, being then, as I conceive, rector of Pulborough in Sussex.

and died in 1669 or thereabouts. The third was afterwards bish. of Bangor, and the last beneficed in his own country; of whom by the way I must let the reader know these things; viz. That he was a Cardiganshire man born, son of Joh. Lloyd of Varedreff in the same county gent. That he became a student in Jesus coll. in Mich. term an. 1640, but the rebellion breaking out soon after, he left the university without a degree, and closed with the predominant party. That in 1648 or before he retired to the university again; submitted to the visitors appointed by the parl. and was actually created mast. of arts in the Pembrokian creation. That about that time he was rector of Llandishill in his own country, and afterwards wrote and published, Christ's Valedictions: or, sacred Observations on the last Words of our Saviour delivered on the Cross. Lond. 1658. in tw. They are discourses, or at least the effect of certain sermons on Luke 23. ver. 34, 43, 46. and on Job. 19. ver. 28, 30. &c. FRANCIS GREGORY of St. Mary's hall, was created the same day. — This person, who was the son of Francis Gregory, was born at Woodstock in Oxfordshire, educated in gram. learning in the coll. school at Westminster, in academical at Cambr. whence he return'd to Westm. and was an usher under Mr. Rich. Busby. Afterwards he became master of the free-school in the town of his nativity (founded by Richard Cornwell cit. and skinner of Lond. 27 Eliz. Dom. 1585.) and at length the first master of the free-school founded at Whitney in Oxfordshire by Hen. Box a druggist of Lond. after his majesty's restoration. At both which places continuing several years, he did much good by his sedulous instruction. In 1672 or thereabouts, he became rector of Hambleton near Great Wycomb in Bucks, and about that time one of his majesty's chaplains in ordinary. He hath written (1) Etymologicum parvum ex magno illo Sylburgii, Eustathio, Martinio aliisque magni Nominis Authoribus excerptum, digestum, explicatum, &c. in Usum Schol. publ. Westmon. Lond. 1654. &c. oct. (2) Instructions concerning the Art of Oratory, for the Use of Schools, more especially for the Use of Westm. School. Lond. 1659. &c. (3) Nomenclatura brevis Anglo-Latino-Græca in Usum Sch. pub. Westm. (4) Examples of the five Declensions of Nouns. These last two have been several times printed, and with some impressions were added Centuria duæ Proverborum Ang-Lat-Græcorum. (5) Votivum Carolo: Or a Welcome to his sacred Majesty Charles II. printed 1660, in 3 sh. and a half in qu. This book consists of several copies of verses, mostly made by M. Greg. and some by his scholars at Woodstock. (6) The Trial of Religions, with Cautions to the Members of the reformed Church against Defection to the Roman. Lond. 1674, 75. qu. (7) The grand Presumption of the Rom. Church, in equalling their Traditions to the written Word; and their Jealousies of themselves, in refusing to admit the holy Scriptures as the Rule for the Tryal of their Religion: in two Discourses. Lond. 1675. qu. (8) Discourse upon the Manifestation of Christ to the Gentiles, &c. Oxon. 1678. qu. He hath also several sermons extant, as (1) David's Return from his Banishment, Thanksgiving Sermon for the Return of King Charles II. preached at St. Mary's in Oxon, 27 May

Clayton Lord Mayor of London, and the Court of Aldermen, 5 Nov. 1679, at St. Mary-le-Bow, on 2 Sam. 19. 3. Lond. 1680. qu.* This Dr. Gregory, who is now living at Hambleton⁶ free from the noise of a school, had a younger brother named John Gregory born at Woodstock, educated in Cambr. afterwards master of the coll. school in Gloucester, rector of Hemsted in Gloucestershire by the favour of the lord Scudamore, and at length archdeacon of Gloucester, on the death of Edward Pope, in the latter end of 1671. He hath written A Discourse of the Morality of the Sabbath, being an Exposition of Exod. 20. 8, 9, 10, 11. with Prayers relating thereunto. Lond. 1681. oct. In which book the author shews a great deal of ancient learning, especially as to criticism, and the languages. It is dedicated by his son Joh. Greg. M. A. of Magd. hall to John lord visc. Scudamore his patron, by whose grant he succeeded his father in the rectory of Hemsted before-mention'd. The said John the father hath also written Greek Scholia on the New Test. but whether yet printed, I know not. He died in the beginning of Dec. 1678; whereupon his archdeaconry was bestowed on Thom. Hyde M. A. of Queen's coll. in Ox. There was another younger brother named Abrah. Gregory, who was D. D. and preb. of Gloucester, "who died in 1690 at his own house, tho' he had been sometime in prison for disaffection to the government of king William III."

⁷ [He was rector of Stratfield-sea, Hampshire.]

tho' of little merit, the archdeaconry of Bath, with the preb. or rectory of Cudworth, and the chappel of Knowle annexed, on the death of Dr. Tim. Revett, in the beginning of Apr. 1638, and in Dec. following had the rectory of Buckland S. Mary given to him. In the latter end of March 1639, he was collated to the preb. of Whitechurch in the said ch. of Wells, and in the latter end of June following, he resigning Cudworth with Knowle, was succeeded therein by Rich. Busby M. A. of Ch. Ch. In 1643 he resign'd the archdeaconry of Bath to Will. Davis, having other preferments bestowed on him, and after his majesty's restoration, he had settled on him the archdeaconry of Taunton, with a prebendship in the ch. of Wells of 10*l.* per an. annex'd to it, the rich rectory of Christian Malford in Wilts, and a resid. canonship in the said ch. of Wells. All which he enjoyed many years, gaining from them a good estate in lands and money. He died on the 4th of April 1682, and thereupon Dr. Mews bish. of Bath and Wells bestow'd his archdeaconry of Taunton on Edw. Waple B. D. of St. Joh. coll. his canonship on Dr. Will. Levinz president of that coll. and Christ. Malford on Dr. Baptista Levinz of Magd. coll. afterwards bishop of the isle of Man. "There is also one Dr. Rob. Pierce a physieian of Bath who has publish'd, Letter to the Royal Soc. giving an Instance of the Effects of the Bath in curing Palsies and Barrenness. Phil. Trans. nu. 169. Mar. 23. 1684. Letter to one of the Royal Soc. giving an Account of a Shell found in the Kidneys of a Woman. Ib. nu. 171. 20 May 1685."

Nov. 16. WILL. HODOES of Exet. coll.——In 1645, May 30, he was admitted archdeacon of Worcester in the place of Dr. Edward Thornborough deceased, by the favour of Dr. Prideaux bish. of Wore. whose dau. he before had married. Dr. Hodges was about that time, if not before, one of the vicars of Bampton in Oxfordshire, and rector of Ripple in Worcestersh. which last he kept in the times of usurpation; and dying about the latter end of Aug. 1676, (within few days after the death of his beloved son Thomas M. A. lately of Bal. col. esteemed a florid preacher during his stay in the university) his archdeaconry was confer'd by Dr. Fleetwood B. of Worcester on his son John Fleetwood, M. A. of King's coll. in Cambridge, and was admitted thereunto on the 4th of Sept. following.

Dec. 7. RICH. HEYLYN B. D. of Ch. Ch.——He was afterwards made canon of Ch. Ch. in the place of Dr. Wall deceased.

17. HEN. SUTTON of Brasen. coll.——I have made mention of this person in Dr. Prideaux vol. iii. col. 269.

Feb. 27. DAN. BREVINT M. A. of Jes. coll. and a student in div. 20 years.——This person is now dean of Lincoln; hath written several things, and therefore he is to be numbred hereafter among the Oxford writers.

Chancellor.

The same; viz. EDW. EARL OF CLARENDON.

Vice-chancellor.

WALT. BLANDFORD D. D. warden of Wadham coll. 18 Septemb.

The Caroline cycle being still kept back a year, Mert.

and Magd. colleges did chuse proctors this year, according as the said cycle was kept back, viz. Mr. Rob. Crippes for the first; and Mr. Joh. Hook for the other. But the vice-chanc. and heads of houses being then and before inclined to reform it and set it right, Ch. Ch. and Brasen-nose chose also according to the true tenor of the cycle. So that from thence a controversy arising, it was on the 22d of March last year decided at Westminster in the chancellor's house, by him the said chancellor and the bishops of London and Worcester, viz. Sheldon and Morley, who ordered that the proctors chosen by Ch. Ch. and Brasen-nose should stand and be admitted. Which being the result of the matter pronounced before certain members of the university then present, of which the president of Magd. coll. was one, and the warden of Mert. should have been another, but withdrawn when he saw how the business was carried, these persons following were admitted proctors in convocation.

Doctors of Divinity.

Apr. 9. RICH. WATSON of Caius coll. in Cambr. and chaplain to James duke of York, was declared doctor in convocation, he being then absent; whereupon a diploma for it being drawn up, it was sealed on the third of the ides of the same month.—He had been master of the free-school in Cambr. while he was fellow of the said coll. and being a most zealous man for the ch. of Engl. preached a sermon Touching Schism in St. Mary's church there an. 1642, which being highly offensive to the presbyterians, he was ejected from his fellowship and school. Afterwards, to avoid their barbarities he fled into France, was patroniz'd at Paris by sir Rich. Browne clerk of his majesty's council, officiated for some months in his oratory or chappel there, and was one of those English divines who did many times argue with the contrary party concerning the visibility of their church. The said sir Richard also endeavoured to have such an establishment made for him; as thereby, in the most difficult of times, he might have had a comfortable subsistence and a safe protection under his sacred roof, besides the other graces and civilities received from him. Afterwards he became chapl. to Ralph lord Hopton, in whose service he continued till that lord's death, being then accounted one of the prime sufferers of the English clergy beyond the seas. After his majesty's restoration he did not return with him, but continued at Caen till 1661, and then repairing to his native place, became chaplain to the duke of York, rector of Pewsey in Wiltshire in Septemb. 1662, preb. of Warmister in the ch. of Sarum by the ceasing of Rich. Hyde, in the latter end of March 1666, preb. of Bitton in the said ch. in Dissertatio sive Epistola*, &c. which I have mention'd before in these FASTI among the incorporation, an. 1642. See in the first vol. of the FASTI col. 519. and in Thom. Jones in the fourth vol. col. 51. among the writers, an. 1682: This person who was a good scholar, but vain and conceited, died on the 13th of Jan. 1684, whereupon his prebend. of Bitton was bestowed on Benj. Johnson, and his rectory on Dr. Rob. Woodward chanc. of the dioc. of Salisbury.

Apr. 19. HENRY CARPENTER sometime of Exeter coll. now chaplain to the honourable the house of commons assembled in parl. was declared D. D. by a diploma then dated, upon the earnest request of his nephew sir Edw. Turnour speaker of the said house of commons made to the chancellor of the university.—The masters then murmured that they should be imposed upon to confer degrees on those they never saw, and great grumbling there was: with which the chanc. being acquainted, he by his letters dated the 30th of the said month doth in a manner excuse himself for what he had done for several reasons; the contents of which being large, I shall now for brevity's sake omit them.⁹ This Hen. Carpenter, who was son of Rich. Carpenter minister of Culleton in Devonsh. became preb. of Yatminster prima in the church of Sarum, in Aug. 1660, and on the 20th of May this year (1662) canon of Windsor in the place of Dr. George Hall promoted to the see of Chester, he being then rector of St. Dionyse Back-church in Lond. He hath written The Deputy-Divinity, or inferior Deity, and subordinate God in the World, Conscience; in two Sermons. Lond. 1657. in tw. He died on the 14th of Oct. 1662; after a short enjoyment of Windsor. Whereupon Dr. Pet. Mews of St. John's coll. succeeded him in the canonry there.

Apr. 22. EDW. BAYNES of Exet. coll. was created by the favour of the chancellor and decree of convocation.

May 7. CHARLES GIBBES of Mert. coll.

This year, June 23, the venerable convocation did confirm the degree of D. of D. which JOHN WALLIS the Savilian prof. of geometry took in the time of Oliver Cromwell, viz. an. 1654: whereupon a diploma being drawn up for that purpose, it was sealed on the 25th of the said month.

June 1. RICH. READ doct. of phys. of Leyden.—He took that degree at Leyden in July 1656.

July 9. WILL. HAWES doct. of phys. of Padua.—He took that degree at Pad. in Jan. 1644.

19. ROB. PORY D. D. of Christ's coll. in Camb.²—This person, who had been chaplain to Dr. Juxon archb. of Canterbury, and while he was bish. of London, did enjoy several dignities by his favour, as the archd. of Middlesex, a residentiaryship of St. Paul's, &c. besides several churches. Which being look'd upon as too many for one person, was an almanack published this year (1663) by Poor Robin, in the title of which was an imprimatur pretended to be set by Rob. Pory D. D. who dying in 1669 was succeeded in his archdeaconry by Tho. Lamplugh D. D. of Oxon.

July 10. JOHN BARGRAVE D. D. of Peter house³ in Cambr.—This gentleman, who was of the family of Bargrave in the parish of Ptringbourne in Kent, had been a great traveller, was now, or soon after, canon of Canterbury, and dying on the eleventh of Mar. 1680, aged 70 years, was buried in the passage from the corner of the cloyster going to the choir of the cathedral church of Canterbury. 'Tis said that he had an especial hand in An Itinerary containing a Voyage made thro' Italy in 1646 and 47, &c. Lond. 1648, oct. published by Joh. Raymond gent.

LAURENCE WOMACK D. D. of Cambridge⁴ was incorporated the same day.—On the 8th of Sept. 1660 he was installed archdeacon of Suffolk, in the place of Rich. Mileson, some years before that dead, and in 1683 being nominated bish. of St. David's in the place of Dr. Will. Thomas translated to Worcester, he was consecrated thereunto in the archb. chap. at Lambeth (with Dr. Francis Turner to Rochester) on the eleventh of Nov. the same year. He died in the city of Westminster 12 March 1685, but where buried I cannot yet tell. He was a great royalist and true son of the church of England, as by his published books is evident, among which, these are some (1) The Examination of Tilenus before the Triers,⁵ &c. To which is annexed The Tenets of the Remonstrants touching the 5 Articles, voted, stated, &c. and An Essay of Annotations upon the fundamental Theses of Mr. Tho. Parker, &c. Lond. 1658, in tw. July 14. JOH. HALES doct. of phys. of Cambr.—He was of Eman. coll. in the same university.

SIR PETER WYCHE knt. M. A. of Cambr. was incorporated the same day.—He was originally of Exeter coll. in this university, afterwards of Trin. hall in that of Cambridge, hath written and translated several things, and therefore he ought to be remembered hereafter among the Oxf. writers.

EDW. GELSTHORPE M. A. of Gonv. and Caius coll. senior proctor.

ROB. PEPPER M. A. of Chr. coll. jun. proct.

Both of the university of Cambridge. The junior was afterwards chanc. of the diocese of Norwich.

SAM. FULLER M. A. of the said university was incorporated the same day.—He was of St. Joh. coll. in that university, afterwards chancellor of the cathedral church of Lincoln and a publisher of one or more sermons.⁸

Sept. 28. JAMES FITZ-ROY duke of Monmouth, visc. Doncaster, &c. was incorporated M. A. as he had stood at Cambr.² at which time the king, queen, and their respective courts were in Oxon.—He was presented by the university orator with a flattering speech,⁴ and in the plague year 1665, when the said king and queen were at Oxon, he was entered as a member in C. C. coll. there. This person, who was the eldest natural son of king Charles II. was begotten on the body of Mrs. Lucy Walters alias Barlow of Pembrokeshire, as I have heard, who, as a spy, was by Oliver imprison'd in the Tower of London, in the beginning of 1656, but released thence in July the same year. He was born at Rotterdam in 1649, and for some time nurs'd there, but when his father king Charles II. went into Scotland to be there crowned by the presbyterians, he was (being then known by the name of James Crofts) committed to the care of his grandmother Hen. Maria the queen mother of England, then in France. And what became of him afterwards, a book written by S. T. a novice, and an unskilful author, will tell you, the title of which is, An Historical Account of the heroic Life and magnanimous Actions of James Duke of Monmouth, &c. Lond. 1683, oct. Which book coming out in his life time, I shall only add this, that for raising a rebellion in the West parts of England in the beginning of king James II. (against whom he had acted several times very unworthily while he was duke of York, in order to the disinheriting him of the imperial crown) was taken, carried to London, committed to the Tower, and at length on the 15th of July 1685 was beheaded on Tower-hill; whereupon his body was buried in the church or chappel there, dedicated to St. Peter ad vincula. Having now this just opportunity laid before me, I shall give you the names of all or most of the natural children of the said king (Charles II.) but before I begin with them you are to know that the said Mrs. Walters gave out that the said king did beget on her body a daughter, but because he would not own her, I shall not number her among the children. She was first married to a gentleman of Ireland, and afterwards to Will. Fanshaw one of the masters of the requests. The second was Charlott begotten on the body of — Boyle viscountess Shannon, sister to Tho. Killigrew groom of the bedchamber to king Charles II. who was first married to — Howard the only son of Tho. Howard a younger brother to the earl of Suffolk, and after his death to Will. Paston son and heir to Robert viscount Yarmouth. She died in her house in the Pall-Mall within the liberty of Westminster 28 July 1684, and was buried without any arms of her own (because the king had not assigned her any) in the abby church at Westminster. (3) Charles Fitz-Charles, commonly called Don Carlos, earl of Plymouth, begotten on the body of Mrs. Katharine Pegge of Leicestershire, afterwards the wife of sir Edw. Green of Essex bart. This Ch. Fitz-Ch. who had married one of the daughters of Tho. earl of Danby, died of a bloody-flux at Tangier, (a city in the kingdom of Fezz in Africa, which had been given to king Charles II. when he took to wife Katharine the infanta of Portugal) on the 17th of Oct. 1680; whereupon his body was conveyed into England, and buried, as I presume, in the abby church of Westminster. Qu. (4) Charles Fitz-Roy duke of Southampton, begotten on the body of Barbara, wife of Roger Palmer, esq; (afterwards earl of Castlemaine) and daughter of Will. Villiers lord Grandison; which lord dying of his wounds received at Edghill battle⁵ in 1642, was buried in the cathedral of Ch. Ch. in Oxon; over whose grave a stately monument was erected some years after his majesty's restoration by his said daughter Barbara. This Charles Fitz-Roy, who was born in Kingstreet in Westm. and was for some time a nobleman or canon commoner of Ch. Ch. married the daughter and heir of sir Henry Wood sometime one of the clerks of the Spicery in the reign of king Charles I. and afterwards one of the clerks of the Green-cloth, by his second wife, the daughter of sir Tho. Gardiner sometime recorder of London. This dutchess of Southampton died without issue near Whitehall in Nov. or Dec. 1680, and was buried in the abby church at Westminster. (5) Henry Fitz-Roy earl of Ewston and duke of Grafton, begotten on the body of the said Barbara wife of Roger Palmer. This Henry, (whom the king for a considerable time would not own to be his son, and therefore the titles of Charles Fitz-Roy were, in case he died without heirs male of his body, to descend to George Fitz-Roy, whom I shall anon mention) married Isabel the only child of Henry earl of Arlington. He died at Cork in Ireland of a wound received while that place was besieged by the forces of king William III. on the ninth of Oct. 1690: whereupon his body was conveyed into England, and buried at Ewston in Suffolk near the body of the earl of Arlington. (6) George Fitz-Roy earl of Northumberland, begotten on the body of the said Barbara. He was born in a fellow's chamber in Merton coll. 28 Dec. 1665, at which time the queen and her court lodged in that coll. as the king did at Ch. Ch. to avoid the plague then raging in London and Westminster. In the latter end of the year (in Jan. or Feb.) 1685 there was committed a clandestine marriage between him and a woman of ordinary extract, widow of one captain Lucy of Charlecot in Warwickshire, a captain in the earl of Oxford's regiment, but were, as it seems, soon after parted. (7) Charles begotten on the body of Elianor Quinn or Gwinn a comedian in the king's play-house, &c. was born in Lincolns-Inn-Fields about the 14th or 15th of May 1670, had the surname of Beaulere given to him 27 Dec. 28 of king Charles II. being then created earl of Burford, &c. He is now duke of St. Alban's. (8) Charles Lenox duke of Richmond, begotten on the body of Lovisa de Querovall a lady of French extraction, and an attendant on Henrietta dutchess of Orleans when she came into England to give a visit to the king her brother, an. 1670. She was afterwards made dutchess of Portsmouth. (9) Charlot a daughter begotten on the body of Barbara before-mention'd, then countess of Castlemaine, afterwards dutchess of Cleveland. The said Charlot was married to sir Edw. Henry Lee of Ditchley in Oxfordshire bart. afterwards earl of Litchfield. (10) Mary begotten on the body of Mary Davies a comedian in the duke of York's play-house. She had afterwards the surname of Tudor given to her, and on the 18th of Aug. or thereabouts, an. 1687, she was married to the son of sir Francis Radcliffe, afterwards earl of Derwentwater. (11) James begotten on the body of the said Elianor Quinn, was born in the Pall-Mall within the liberty of Westminster on Christmas day or thereabouts, an. 1671, and died in France of a sore leg about Michaelmas in 1680.

Here are eleven natural children set down, but whether in order according to birth, I cannot justly tell you. There was another daughter begotten on the body of the said Barbara dutchess of Cleveland which the king would not own, because supposed to be begotten by another, and whether he own'd it before his death I cannot tell. He also adopted for his daughter, the daughter of the said Rog. Palmer earl of Castlemaine, which was born of Barbara his wife before she had knowledge of his majesty. After her adoption she was married to Thomas Lennard lord Dacres, earl of Sussex. But now after this digression let's proceed to the rest of the incorporations.

Feb. 13. JOH. HEAVER D.D. of Camb.—He had been fellow of Clare hall in that university, was now canon of Windsor and fellow of Eaton coll. and dying on the 23d of June 1670, was succeeded in his canonry by Tho. Viner batch. (afterwards doct.) of div.⁶

Mar. 15. ANTHONY HORNECK a German of Qu. coll. mast. of arts of Wittenberg.—He was an eminent minister in Lond. hath published several books of divinity and sermons, and therefore he is hereafter to be remembred among the Oxford writers.

Creations.

By the command of the chanc. of the university were creations made in all faculties in the latter end of Sept. at which time the king and queen were in Oxon.

Batchelor of Law.

Sept. 28. JOHN BAYLIE of St. John's coll.—This gentleman, who was a younger son of Dr. Richard Baylie president of that coll. was afterwards chancellor of the diocese of Bath and Wells.—He died at or near Wells, about the 20th of Jan. 1688.

Masters of Arts.

These following persons were created on the 28th of Sept. in a full convoc. then celebrated.

JAMES HOWARD earl of Suffolk.

JOHN GREENVILL earl of Bath, chief gentleman of his majesty's royal bedchamber.—He was before the wars began a gentleman com. of Gloc. hall, and after they began a commander of note in his majesty's army against the rebels, and at length entrusted by his majesty king Charles II. in the great affair of his restoration, &c.⁷

JOHN MIDDLETON earl of Middleton in Scotland,⁸ and lord high commissioner thereof.

⁷ [Died at London 22 Aug. 1701. RAWLINSON.]

⁸ [Presented by Dr. South. See Opera posthuma Latina South, p. 97. RAWLINSON.]

HENRY HAMILTON a young nobleman of Ch. Ch. earl of Clanbrazill, son of James sometime earl of Clanbrazill.

HENRY SOMERSET lord Herbert of Ragland.—He was afterwards marquiss of Worcester and duke of Beaufort.

CHARLES BERKLEY viscount Fitz-Harding.—He was now treasurer of his majesty's household, and one of the lords of the privy council, and dying in Whitehall of a short apoplectical distemper on the 12th of June 1668, sir Thomas Clifford succeeded him in his treasurership.

WILLIAM LORD CAVENDISH son of the earl of Devonshire.—He was afterwards earl of Devonshire.

JOHN HALES of Ch. Ch.

FRANC. HEN. LEE of Ditchley } barts.

Sir ALLEN APSLEY knt.—He was originally, as 'tis said, of Trin. coll. in this university, and afterwards a faithful adherer to his majesty's cause in the worst of times.⁹ After the restoration of king Charles II. he was made captain lieutenant in the regiment of James duke of York, falconer to his majesty, and treasurer of the household and receiver general to the said duke. This person, who died in St. James's square near London about the 15th of Oct. 1683, hath written and published a poem entit. Order and Disorder: or, the World made and undone. Being Meditations upon the Creation and the Fall, as it is recorded in the Beginning of Genesis. Lond. 1679, in five cantoes. He was a burgess for Thetford in Norfolk to serve in that parliament which began at Westm. 8 May 1661. [155]

HENRY GUY esq; sometime of Ch. Ch. now cupbearer to the queen.—He was afterwards an officer of the excise in the north, was a recruiter for Headon in Yorkshre to serve in that parliament which began at Westminster 8 May 1661, became secretary to the commissioners of his majesty's treasury 26 Mar. 1679, and in the same year one of the grooms of his majesty's bedchamber, upon the resignation of col. Silas Titus. Afterwards he was made a commissioner of the custom-house, &c.

SIDNEY GODOLPHIN esq;—This person, who is of the antient family of Godolphin in Cornwall, was afterwards a recruiter for Helston in Cornwall to serve in that parliament which began at Westminster 8 May 1661, one of the grooms of his majesty's bedchamber, and the last of the four commissioners of his majesty's treasury on the 26th of Mar. 1679, about which time Thomas earl of Danby was discharged of his place of lord treasurer. In the middle of Apr. 1684 he succeeded sir Leol. Jenkyns in the place of secretary of state, and on the 17th of that month he was sworn to that office at a council held at Hampton Court. On the 24th of Aug. following, he was by his majesty declared the first commissioner of the treasury, and thereupon Ch. earl of Middleton succeeded him in his secretaryship, and in the beginning of Sept. following he was by his majesty created a baron by the title of lord Godolphin of Rialton in Cornwall. About the 16th of Feb. 1684, his majesty king Charles II. being then newly dead, he was by king James II. made lord chamberlain to his queen, and about the 5th of Jan. 1686, he with John lord Bellasyse, Henry lord Dover, sir John Ernle chanc. of the exchequer and sir Steph. Fox were appointed commissioners for executing the office of lord high treasurer of England, Laurence earl CHARLES BERKLEY knight of the Bath, a nobleman of Ch. Ch. and eldest son to George lord Berkley.

GREVILL VERNEY of Compton Murdack in Warwickshire knight of the Bath.—He died at Lond. 23 July 1668.

BERNARD GREENVILL esq;—He was afterwards a recruiter for Leskard in Cornwall to serve in that parliament which began at Westm. 8 May 1661, and one of the grooms of his majesty's bedchamber.

Sir ROB. ATKYNS.—Tho' the title of knight of the Bath be not added to his name in the public register, yet I take him to be the same sir Rob. Atkyns knight of the Bath, who became serjeant at law, an. 1671, one of the justices of the Common Pleas in the year following, and at length, when the prince of Aurange came to the crown, lord chief baron of the exchequer, and speaker of the house of lords, &c. He hath written (1) *An Inquiry into the Power of dispensing with penal Statutes: together with some Animadversions upon a Book written by Sir Edw. Herbert L. Ch. Justice of the Court of Com. Atkyns was son of sir Edw. Atkyns one of the justices of the King's Bench in the troublesome times, and is father to that worthy gentleman sir Rob. Atkyns of Saperton in Gloucestershire.

EDM. WARCUP—See among the created doct. of law, an. 1670.

JAMES TYRRELL esq; of Qu. coll.—This gentleman hath published four or more books, and therefore he is hereafter to be numbred among the Oxford writers.

THOMAS ROSS esq;—This person, who was nearly related to Alex. Ross as I have heard, adhered to his majesty king Ch. II. in his exile, and was tutor for a time to James Crofts afterwards duke of Monmouth. Upon his majesty's return he became keeper of his libraries and groom of his privy chamber, and author of a translation from Latin into English poetry of the whole 17 books of The second Punick War between Hannibal and the Romans: written originally by Silius Italicus, with a Continuation from the Triumph of Scipio to the Death of Hannibal, Lond. 1661, fol. Besides these, who were created on the 28th of Sept. were about 30 more (some of quality) that had the said degree of master confer'd upon them. It was also granted at that time to nine other persons to be created when they were pleased to require admission, among whom Mr. Rob. Hook sometime of Ch. Ch. (now of the royal society) was one, but whether he or they were admitted it appears not.

Doctors of Law.

Four were actually created on the 28th of Sept. the names of which follow.

Sir HENRY BENNET knight, one of the secretaries of state to his majesty.—This gentleman, who was second son of sir John Bennet of Arlington commonly called Harlington in Middlesex, by Dorothy his wife, daughter of sir John Croft of Saxham in Suffolk, was educated in the condition of a student in Ch. Ch. took the degrees in arts, and had the reputation of a poet among his contemporaries, which was evidenced by certain copies of his composition, occasionally printed in books of verses published under the name of the university, and in others, in his time. In the beginning of the civil war, when his majesty fixed his chief residence in Oxon, he became under secretary to George lord Digby secretary of state, and afterwards a gentleman volunteer for the royal cause, in which condition he did his majesty good service, especially at the sharp encounter near Andover in Hampshire, &c. When the wars were ended, he left not his majesty when success did, but attended his interest in foreign parts, and, the better to fit himself for his majesty's service, he travelled into Italy and made his remarks and observations of all the parts and states of Christendom. Afterwards he was made secretary to James duke of York, received the honour of knighthood from his majesty at Bruges in March (stil. nov.) 1658, and then was sent leiger to the crown of Spain; in which negotiation with that wary court, he carried things with so much prudence, circumspection and success, that his majesty, upon his happy return for England, soon called him home, and made him keeper of his privy purse. In the month of Oct. 1662, he was made principal secretary of state on the resignation of sir Edw. Nicholas, whereupon the place of keeper of the privy purse was confer'd on the son of Charles viscount Fitz-Harding, called sir Charles Berkley, captain of the guards to James duke of York, and governour (under his highness) of the town and garrison of Portsmouth, &c. In the latter end of the year 1663 he was made a baron of this realm by the title of lord Arlington of Arlington in Middlesex, and in Apr. 1672 he was made earl of Arlington. On the 15th of June following, he was elected one of the knights companions of the most noble order of the garter, and on the 22d of the same month he, with George duke of Buckingham, began their journey towards Holland, as ambassadors extraordinary and plenipotentiaries to treat and settle affairs between the most Christian king and the states. In Apr. 1673 he was appointed one of the three plenipotentiaries to go from his majesty of Great Britain to Colen, to mediate for a peace between the emperor and the said Christian king, and on the 11th of Sept. 1674 he was, upon the resignation of Henry earl of St. Albans, made lord chamberlain of his majesty's household: in which honourable office he was confirmed by king Jam. II. when he came to the crown. He died early in the morning of the 28th of July 1685, aged 67 years: whereupon his body was conveyed to his seat at Ewston in Suffolk, and there buried in a vault under the church of that place. Two days after his death his majesty king James II. gave the white staff of lord chamberlain to Robert earl of Aylesbury, who, after a short enjoyment of it, died much lamented in his house at Ampthil in Bedfordshire, on Tuesday the 20th of Octob. the same year. See more of him in the FASTI the first vol. col. 491. The eldest brother of the said Henry earl of Arlington was named John, knight of the Bath at the coronation of king Charles II. created a baron of this kingdom by that king, under the stile and title of John lord Ossulston, in Nov. an. 1682. He was originally a gentleman com. of Pembroke coll. to which he was not only a benefactor by contributing largely towards the building thereof, but by giving a fellowship thereunto.

WILL. COVENTRY sometime of Qu. coll. son of Thom. lord Coventry.—I have made large mention of him among the writers under the year 1656.

WILL. GODOLPHIN M. A. of Ch. Ch. and under secretary to sir Hen. Bennet before-mentioned.—This person, who was descended from the antient family of his name in Cornwall, was elected student of Ch. Ch. from Westminster school, an. 1651, where he continued, till his majesty's restoration, under presbyterian and independent discipline: afterwards getting into the service of the said sir Henry, he was chose a recruiter for Camelford in Cornwall to serve in that parliament that began at Westminster 8 May 1661, wherein shewing himself zealous for the prerogative had several boons bestowed on him. On the 28th of Aug. 1668, his majesty confer'd on him the honour of knighthood, he being then about to send him to the catholic king and queen regent of Spain, to reside as his ambassador in that court,⁵ upon the return thence of Edward earl of Sandwich his majesty's late ambassador extraordinary there. So that going, and continuing there several years, he changed his religion for that of Rome.

Doctors of Physic.

Mar. 26. RICH. KEURDEN sometime known by the name of JACKSON, M. A. of St. Mary's hall, was then actually created D. of P.—He was the son of Gilbert Keurden, (who died in 1662) son of Rich. Kenrden, (who died 1630) son of Gilb. Jackson of Keurden near to Preston in Lancashire, and was at this time and several years after a practitioner of his faculty at Preston and in the country adjacent. But his geny being more adequate to antiquities than his proper profession, he neglected his practice and wrote in honour of his country.—Brigantia Lancastriensis restaurata: Or, History of the honourable Dukedom, or County Palatine of Lancaster, in 5 vol. in fol. The method of which he printed in certain proposals by him scattered among his friends, in July and Aug. 1688; wherein it appears that he had then obtained several sums of money from some of the gentry of Lancashire, and elsewhere, to print that work.⁶

Sir HEN. DE VIC of the isle of Guernsey bart.—He had been resident at Brussels for king Charles I. near 20 years, and after that he was made chancellor of the noble order of the garter. He died 20 Nov. 1672, “(so in his epitaph, but “I rather think in 1671)” and was buried in the north cross isle of the abby church dedicated to St. Peter in Westminster. About that time his chancellorship went to Seth bishop of Sarum and his successors in that see.

Doctors of Divinity.

Oct. 1. ROB. POWELL M. A. of All-s. coll. was then created by virtue of the chancellor's letters.—This person, who had been made fellow of the said coll. by the parliamentary visitors, an. 1648, was now archdeacon of Shrewsbury, and afterwards chancellor of St. Asaph, and took all advantages to thrust himself into other places, tho' he himself had been no sufferer for the king's cause, but rather an enemy to him and his friends. After the letters of the chancellor had been read for his creation, the generality of the members of conv. cried non, and protested with great clamours against his creation: whereupon a scrutiny being made, he was by the falseness of one of the proctors pronounced passed. Afterwards Dr. John Wallis presenting him to the vice-chanc. he was admitted batch. of divinity, and after another presentation by the said person, doct. of that faculty.

ROB. SOUTH M. A. of Ch. Ch. of six years standing, was created at the same time.—This gentleman, who had been bred in the said house during the times of usurpation, was now orator of the university and chaplain to the chanc. thereof. After the letters of the said chancellor had been read for his creation, the batchelors of divinity and masters of arts were against it, (as they were against that of Powell) but at length after a scrutiny, the said doctor pronounced him virtute juramenti sui (as he had done Powell) passed by the major part of the house. Whereupon, by the double presentation of Dr. John Wallis, he was first admitted batchelor, then doct. of divinity.⁷

JAMES SESSIONS B. of D. of Magd. hall, was also then (Oct. 1.) created, but not at all denied.

At the same time the chancellor commended to the members of convocation one Mr. John Clegge of St. Alb. hall, a person of good affections to the king and church, to be also created D. D. but he did not then appear.

Mar. 21. THOMAS BARTON of Magd. hall was then created by virtue of the chancellor's letters then read, which say that he is master of arts, and hath been throughout the war chaplain to prince Rupert in the army, &c.⁸

This year became a sojourner in the university to improve himself in literature one LAURENCE son of Nich. FESSIUS, a Dane, born in the city of Schaane sometime belonging to the king of Sweedland afterwards to the king of Denmark; which Laurence, after his return to his own country, wrote several panegyrics on the king of Denmark, and other things.

“MICHAEL STRAUCHIUS a Saxon was a sojourner in the “university, and entred into the public library 16 Aug. 1663. “He afterwards professed at Wittenberg, and wrote some- “thing in that faculty. So Geor. Matt. Konigius in Bib. “vet. & nov. edit. 1678.”

Doctor of Music.

July 7. CHRISTOPH. GIBBONS, one of the organists of his majesty's chappel, was then licensed to proceed doct. of music, which degree was compleated in an act celebrated in St. Mary's church on the eleventh of the said month, with very great honour to himself and his faculty. He was licensed by virtue of his maj. letters, written in his behalf, which say that the bearer Christopher Gibbons, one of our organists of our chappel royal, hath from his youth served our royal father and our self, and hath so well improved himself in music, as well in our judgment, as the judgment of all men well skilled in that science, as that he may worthily receive the honour and degree of doctor therein, &c. This person, who was son of Orlando Gibbons mentioned in the FASTI, the first vol. col. 406. was bred up from a child to music under his uncle Ellis Gibbons organist of Bristol (mentioned in the said FASTI, col. 258.) and for his great merits in that faculty, had a place conferred on him in his majesty's chappel before the civil war. After the restoration of king Charles II. he was principal organist of his chappel, his principal organist in private, master of the singing boys belonging thereunto, organist of Westminster, and one of his majesty's private music. He had a principal hand in a book entit. — Cantica Sacra: Containing Hymns and Anthems for two Voices to the Organ both Latin and English, Lond. 1674, in fol. See before in the said FASTI, col. 337. The other hands in the same work besides those of Gibbons, were those of Rich. Dcering, Benj. Rogers of Windsor and Matthew Lock. This doct. Gibbons died in the parish of St. Margaret's within the city of Westminster, an. 1676.

Batchelors of Law.

Two were admitted, of whom WILL. CARR of All-s. coll. of Scotch extract, was one, but not to be understood to be the same with Will. ✠ Not one doct. of phys. or of divinity was admitted this year.

Incorporations.

Mar. 31. CHARLES WILLOUGHBY of Mert. coll. doct. of physic, of Padua.

May 26. LUKE GLEN M. A. of Edinburgh.

June 13. JOHN ROGERS doct. of phys. of Utrecht.—This person, who was son of Nehemiah Rogers of Duddinghurst in Essex, hath published Analecta inauguralia, sive Disceptationes Medice: necnon Diatribæ discussoriæ de quinque Corporis humani Concoctionibus, potissimumq; de Pncumatosi ac Spermatosi, Lond. 1664, oct. He then lived at St. Mary Magd. Bermondsey in Surrey, where he practised his faculty.

"28. DAN. HODSON M. D. of Leyden.—He was admitted to that degree in the said university 22 Jul. 1654."

On the 12th of July, being the next day after the conclusion of the act, were 28 masters of arts of the university of Camb. incorp. among whom were these,

MILES BARNE M. A. and fellow of Peter's house.²—He was afterwards D. D. and chaplain in ordinary to his majesty king Charles II. In the beginning of March 1686 he with others were put into the commission of peace by king James II. for the county of Cambridge, and what became of him afterwards let others speak. "He published A Sermon preached before the University of Cambridge 9 Sept. 1683, being a Day of public Thanksgiving for the Deliverance of his Majesty's sacred Person, his Royal Brother, and the Government, from the late hellish Fanatical Conspiracy; on Luke 19. 14. Cainbr. 1683, qu." He hath three or more sermons extant, and other things as it seems.³

THOM. TENISON M. A. and fellow of C. C. coll.⁴—He was about this time chaplain to Edward earl of Manchester, and afterwards to his son Robert, doct. of divinity, chaplain to his majesty king Charles II. vicar of St. Martin's in the Fields within the liberty of Westminster, in the place of Dr. Lloyd promoted to the see of St. Asaph, archdeacon of London, and at length worthily promoted to the see of Lincoln, on the death of Dr. Thomas Barlow, in the winter time 1691. He hath published several sermons, and other matters of divinity, as also several things against popery in the reign of king James II. which shew him to be a learned man; besides his book called The Creed of Tho. Hobbes of Malmesbury. See in Vitæ Hobbianæ Auctarium, published 1681, p. 199. See also in what I have said of sir Thom. Browne the physician, among the writers of the fourth vol. an. 1682.

JOHN TEMPLER M. A. of Trin. coll.⁵—He was afterwards D. D. published one or more sermons, and Idea Theologiæ Leviathanis, &c. Cantab. 1673, against Thom. Hobbes. See there in the said Auctarium, p. 199, 200.

Besides the said masters, were also then incorporated two batchelors of divinity, one of which was named THOM. LONGLAND of St. John's coll. in Cambridge,⁶ author of—Quatuor Novissima: Or, Meditations on the four last Things, &c. printed 1657, in tw. &c.

Among several foreigners that became sojourners and students in the university this year, to improve themselves in literature by the use of the public library were (1) JOH. CHRISTOPH. BECMANNUS a Saxon, who, after his departure, published several things in his own country, whereby he obtained the name of a learned man. "Georg. Matt. Konigius in Bib. vet. & nov. edit. 1678, saith that Joh. Christ. Becman. Catalogum Bibliothecæ Universit. Francofurtanæ ad Odorum publicæ luci donavit. 1676." (2) CHRISTOPH. SANDIUS, who sojourned in an house near Qu. coll. and gave his mind up for the most part to the perusal of Socinian books, not only in the public library, but in others belonging to colleges and in booksellers' shops. He was born at Königsberg in Prussia 12 Oct. 1644, and afterwards being instructed by his father of both his names (the most noted Socinian in the country wherein he lived, and therefore deprived of those places of trust which he enjoyed, about 1668) in the Socinian tenets, was sent by him to Oxon to improve them by reading and studying. Afterwards retiring to his country he wrote and published several books, and after his death (which hapned at Amsterdam on the last of Nov. 1680) was published of his composition Bibliotheca Anti-Trinitariorum, &c. Friestad. 1684, oct. in which, p. 169, 170, &c. you may see a catalogue of his works, some of which are Socinian. (3) JOHN MICHAEL BENSON a Dane, who afterwards became doct. of the civil law in another university; counsellor to the king of Denmark, and a publisher of several things of his faculty, &c.

Sept. 6. EDWARD MONTAGUE earl of Manchester, baron of Kimbolton, &c. master of arts, and chancellor of the univ. of Cambridge,¹ (which university he had ruin'd in the time of the grand and unparallel'd rebellion) was incorporated in the same degree as he had stood at Cambridge. — After he had been conducted into the house of convocation in his master's gown and hood by the beadles, and seated on the right hand of the vicechancellor, the orator of the university, who then stood on the other side, near and above the registry's desk, did then speak (directing his voice to him) an eloquent oration: which being done, the said orator went from his place, and going to, he took, him by the hand, and led him to the middle of the area, where he presented him to the vicechancellor and ven. convocation; which being done, and he incorporated by the vicechancellor's sentence, he re-took his place. This is that Kimbolton, who with 5 members of the house of commons were demanded by his majesty on the 4th of Jan. 1641, for endeavouring to subvert the fundamental laws and government, and to deprive the king of his legal power, &c. and the same, who after he had sedulously endeavoured to promote, did carry on, a rebellion, and continued his course till the wars were ceased. Afterwards striking in with Oliver, he became one of his lords, that is, one of the lords of the other house, and was a great man, a thorough-pac'd dissembler, &c. and never a loser for his high actings against the royal family. After his majesty's restoration, towards which he pretended to be a great helper, when it could not otherwise be avoided, he was made lord chamberlain of his majesty's household, and in that quality did he, with Edw. earl of Clarendon chanc. of the univ. come this year to Oxon from Salisbury, (where they left their majesties) in order to have lodgings provided for them, about to come hither to take up their winter-quarters to avoid the plague then raging in Lond. and Westminster. This Edw. earl of Manchester had a younger brother named Walter Montague² born in the parish of St. Botolph without Aldersgate in London, educated in Sidney coll. in Cambr. afterwards travelled beyond the seas, and returning with an unsettled mind, did, at length, (after he had been sent once or more into France about public concerns) give a farewell to his own country, and religion where-in he had been born and baptized, and going beyond the sea he settled himself in a monastery, "or rather in the college³ "at St. Omers" for a time, and wrote A Letter in Justification of his Change,⁴ which was afterwards answer'd by Lucius lord Falkland. Afterwards being received with great love into the favour of the qu. mother of France, she made him abbot of Nantveil of the Benedictine order in the dioc. of Mets, and afterwards abbot of the Benedictines of St. Martin's abbey, near Pontois in the dioc. of Roan, in the place of Joh. Franc. de Gondy deceased. He was also one of her cabinet council, and a promoter of Mazarine into her service, who, when fix'd, shew'd himself in many respects ungrateful to Montague and his friends: And whereas Mazarine made it one of his chief endeavours to raise a family, and to do such things that might perpetuate his name, so Montague, who was of a most generous and noble spirit, and a person of great piety, did act to the contrary, by spending all that he could obtain for public and pious uses. In his younger years before he left the ch. of England, he wrote The Shepherd's Paradise. Com. Lond. 1629. oct. And after he had left it — Miscellanea spiritualia. Or devout Essays, in two parts: The first was printed at Lond. 1648, the other at the same place in 1654, and both in qu. I have seen a book entit. Manchester al Mundo: Contemplations on Death and Immortality. Lond. 1635. oct. and several times after: the fifteenth impression of which was made at Lond. in 1690. in tw. Which book was written by one of the family of the earl of Manchester, but whether by this Walter Montague, who was a younger son to Henry Montague the first earl of Manchester of his name, I cannot tell, because his name is not set to it. "I have been since inform'd that it was written by the father, the aforesaid Henry." This Walter, who was commonly called abbot Montague, and sometimes lord abbot of Pontois, died after Henrietta Maria the queen mother of England, who concluding her last day on the last of Aug. 1669, he soon after followed, as I have been informed by one of his domestic servants, who told me further, that he was buried in the chappel or church belonging to the hospital of Incurables at Paris. You may read much of him in a book called Legenda lignea, &c. Lond. 1653. oct. p. 137, 138. &c. but that book being full of satyr, persons of moderate principles believe little or nothing therein. "It was said that he was before his death elected archbp. of . . . in Guien."

As for the other persons, who were incorporated besides the said earl of Manchester, were these,

Dec. 8. JOH. LOGAN M. of A. of Glasgow, with liberty to suffragate in convoc. and congreg. which is all I know of him.

Mar. 8. HENR. MONTAGUE M. A. of Cambridge, a younger son to the said Edward earl of Manchester, and others.

Creations.

The creations this year were mostly made on the 8th of Septemb. when the said EDWARD EARL OF MANCHESTER was incorporated M. A. at which time the chancellor of the university was then in Oxon.

Masters of Arts.

ROB. MONTAGUE vice. Mandevile eldest son to Edw. earl of Manchester.—He was presented by the orator of the university with a little speech, and afterwards was seated on the left hand of the vicechancellor. "He was one of the gent. of the bedchamber to king Charles II." After his father's death in 1671 he became earl of Manchester, and died at Paris about the latter end of Decemb. according to the English account, an. 1682.

CHARLES DORMER vice. Ascot of Mert. coll. eldest son of Charles earl of Caernarvan.

EDWARD CAPELL of Wadh. coll. a younger son of Arthur lord Capell.

VERE BERTIE a younger son of Montague earl of Lindsey.—He was made serjeant at law in 1675, and afterwards one of the barons of the exchequer.

CHARLES BERTIE his brother.—He "became secretary to the lord treasurer in 1673, and" is now treasurer of the ordinance.

NICH. PELHAM bart. of Ch. Ch.

SCROPE HOW knt. of Ch. Ch.

"The last was comptroller of the excise in 1694."

WILL. DOLBEN a counsellor of the Inner-Temple, and brother to Dr. John Dolben.—He was afterwards recorder of London, a knt. serjeant at law, and one of the justices of the King's-Bench.

[163] RICH. COOLING or COLING secretary to Edw. earl of Manchester.—He was afterwards secretary to Hen. earl of Arlington while he was lord chamberlain, and on the 21st of Feb. 1688 he was sworn one of the clerks of his maj. privy-council in ordinary: at which time were sworn with him sir John Nicholas knt. of the Bath, Will. Blathwait and Charles Montague esquires. This Rich. Cooling was originally, as it seems, of All-s. coll.

The said nine persons were actually created on the 8th of September.

Doctors of Law.

Sept. 8. SIR CYRILL WYCHE knt. (son of sir Pet. Wyche sometime comptroller of his majesty's household,) now a burgess in parliament for Kellington in Cornwall.—He "was born at Constantinople when his father was ambassador there, and had his name from his godfather Cyrell the patriarch whom the Jesuits murdered"—was M. A. of Ch. Ch. in the times of usurpation, was afterwards secretary to the lieutenantancy in Ireland, one of the royal society, and a burgess in other parliaments.

NOV. 7. SIR HENNEAGE FINCH knt. solicitor general, and one of the burgesses of the univ. to sit in parliament.

COL. GILES STRANGEWALES sometime of Wadh. coll. now a knight for the county of Dorset to serve in parl. was created the same day.—This most loyal and worthy gent. who was of Melbury Samford in the said county, died 1675.

The said two persons were created doctors of the civil law in a convocation held on that day, (Nov. 7.) after they had communicated the thanks of the honourable house of commons, lately sitting in the said convocation-house, to the members of the university for their Reasons concerning the solemn League and Covenant, negative Oath, &c. made 1647. Laurence Hyde esq; another burgess for the university, and sir Joh. Birkenhead were the other two that were, besides the two former, appointed to return thanks, and were then present in convocation; but the first of these last two was not created doctor of the civ. law, because he had before been diplomated M. A. which he then thought was sufficient, and the other created doctor, as I have before told you.

Doctors of Physic.

Sept. 8. ROBERT BOYLE esq; was created after Edw. earl of Manchester had been incorporated.—This honourable person, who was the son of Richard the first earl of Cork, was born at Lismore in Ireland, whence, after he had been well grounded in juvenile learning, he went to the univ. of Leyden, and spent some time there in good letters. Afterwards he travelled into France, Switzerland, Italy, &c. and spending some time in Rome, he was so much satisfied with the curiosities there, that afterwards he never had any desire to see or view the curiosities or antiquities of other places. After his return into England, being then accounted a well-bred gentleman, he settled in Oxon, in the time of Oliver, about 1657, where he carried on his great delight in several studies, especially in experimental philosophy and chymistry, spent much money, entertained operators to work in his laboratory which he had built for his own use, and often did repair to the club of virtuosi in the lodgings of Dr. Wilkins warden of Wadh. coll. and they to him, in his joyning to Univ. coll. and opposite to that of All-souls. After his majesty's restoration, when the royal society was erected, he was made one of the first members thereof, was one of the council belonging thereunto, and the greatest promoter of new philosophy of any among them. After he had left Oxon for London, he settled in the house of his sister Katherine lady Ranelagh,⁵ where he erected an elaboratory, kept men at work, and carried on chymistry to the last. The books that he hath written are many, some of which are printed beyond the seas, and are there highly valued: In all which he hath done such things for the benefit of the world and increase of knowledge, that none hath yet equalld, much less gone beyond him. In them you'll find the greatest strength and the genteel smoothness, the most generous knowledge and the sweetest modesty, the noblest discoveries and the sincerest relations, the greatest self-denial and the greatest love of men, the profoundest insight into philosophy and nature, and the most devoute, affectionate sense of God and of religion, as in any works whatsoever written by other men, &c. This worthy person died the 30th of December 1691, aged 64 years or thereabouts, and was buried on the 7th of Jan. following at the upper end, on the south side, of the chancel of the church of St. Martin in the Fields in Westminster, near to the body of his sister the lady Ranelagh before-mention'd, who dying about a week before him, the grief for her death put him in convulsion fits which carried him off.⁶ Soon after were elegies and epitaphs on him made public,⁷ as also the sermon at his funeral, preach'd by Dr. Gilb. Burnet bishop of Sarum; in all which you'll find just encomiums of him, as no doubt you will in the life of him the said Mr. Boyle, about to be published by the said doctor. The eldest brother of this Mr. Rob. Boyle was Richard earl of Burlington and Cork. The next was Roger earl of Orery a great poet, statesman, soldier, and great every thing which merits the name of great and good. He hath published four plays in heroic verse highly valued and commended by ingenious men, and died in Octob. 1679. The third was Francis viscount Shannon, whose Pocket Pistol, as he stiled his book, may make⁸ as wide breaches in the walls of the capitol, as many canons. These were his elder brothers, and besides them he had seven sisters all married to noble persons.

This year in the month of Septemb. ANDR. MARVEL a burgess for Kingston upon Hull to serve in that parl. which began at Westm. 8 May 1661, became a sojourner in Oxford for the sake of the public library, and continued there, I presume, some months. See in Sam. Parker among the writers an. 1657, where you'll find an account of him and his works. In the beginning of Dec. following was entred into the said library ARTHUR TREVOR an eminent and famous common lawyer, &c.

In January following FRANCIS SANDFORD an officer of arms attending the king now in Oxon, was entred also in the said library, with the liberty then allowed to him of a student. This person having published several books, I must, according to the method that I have hitherto followed, let the reader know, that tho' he was descended from the antient and genteel family of the Sandfords of Sandford in Shropshire, yet he was born in the castle of Carnow in the county of Wicklow in Ireland and half barony of Shelelak; which half barony was purchased of king James I. by his mother's father called Calcot Chambre. When the rebellion broke out in Ireland, Francis being then about eleven years of age, his relations carried him thence into England, settled themselves at Sandford, with intentions to breed him a scholar, but then the rebellion breaking out there, and his family afterwards sufferers for the royal cause, he had no other education than what grammar schools afforded. On the 6th of June 13 Car. II. he was by letters patent created pursuivant at arms by the name and title of Rouge Dragon, and afterwards on the 16th of Nov. in the 27th of the said king's reign he was created Lancaster herald of arms: Which office he held till 1689, and then surrendered it up. He hath written and published (1) A genealogical History of the Kings of Portugal, &c. Lond. 1664. fol. 'Tis partly a translation. (2) The Order and Ceremonies used at the Funeral of his Grace, George Duke of Albemarle, &c. with the Manner of his Effigies lying in State in Somerset-house, the whole Proceedings to the Abby of Westminster, the Figure of his Hearse in the said Abby, &c. Printed in the Savoy near London 1670, in a thin fol. all exactly represented in sculpture, with the form of the offering performed at Westm. (3) A genealogical History of the Kings of England, and Monarchs of Great Britain, &c. from the Norm. Conq. An. 1066, to the Year 1677, in seven Parts or Books, with their Effigies, Seals, Tombs, Cenotaphs, Devices, Arms, &c. Pr. in the Savoy 1677, in fol. (4) The History of the Coronation of King James II. and Queen Mary, solemnized in the collegiate Church of St. Peter in the City of Westminster, on Thursday the 23d of Apr. 1685, with an exact Account of the several Preparations in Order thereunto, &c. the whole Work illustrated with Sculptures. Pr. in the Savoy 1687 in a large fol. What other things he hath published I know not, nor any thing else of him besides, only that he living in or near Bloomsbury in Middlesex, "died the 16th of Jan. 1693, and "was buried in St. Bride's churchyard."⁹

Baxter, who died 8 Dec. 1691, Lond. 1692, oct. 2d edit.—Mr. Boyle and Mr. Baxter, deare friends, died within a short space of one another. Mr. Boyle was engaged in a contemplation of the designe and architecture of the visible world, and made rare discoveries in the system of nature, not for curiositie and barren speculation, but to admire and adore the perfections of the Deity in the variety, order, beauty, and marvellous artifice of the creatures that compose this great universe. Mr. Baxter was conversant in the invisible world, &c. WOOD, MS. Note in Ashmole.]

Sparrow master of the same: For which opposition, some, if not all, of the fellows that sided with him, were ejected. Afterwards, if not at that time, he was minister of Battersea in Surrey, then of the church of St. Paul in Covent Garden¹ within the liberty of Westminster, chaplain in ordinary to his majesty, subdean of Westminster, and in the year 1680 dean of Peterborough in the place of Dr. James Duport, who had succeeded in that dignity Dr. Edw. Rainbow,² an. 1664. On the 13th of Oct. 1689, he was consecrated bishop of Chichester in the bishop of London's chapel at Fulham, in the place of Dr. Joh. Lake deceased, and in the month of July 1691 he was translated to Ely in the place of Dr. Franc. Turner, deprived of his bishoprick for not taking the oaths to their majesties king William III. and queen Mary. This Dr. Patrick hath many sermons, theological discourses, and other things, relating to the supreme faculty, extant, which shew him to be a learned divine, and an orthodox son of the church of England.

July 5. JOH. CAWLEY of All-s. coll.—This person, who was son of Will. Cawley of the city of Chichester, was, by the endeavours of his father, made fellow of the said coll. by the visitors appointed by parliament, an. 1649, where he continued several years. HENRY COMPTON M. of A. of Cambr.⁴ youngest son of Spencer earl of Northampton, was then incorporated M. of A. with liberty allowed him to enter into and suffragate in the house of congregation and convocation.—This gent. was originally of Queen's coll. in this university, and afterwards, through several preferments, he became bishop of London.

June 19. EDWARD BROWNE batch. of phys. of Cambridge.⁵ —I shall mention him among the doctors of that faculty in the next year.

27. SIMON PATRICK batch. of div. of Cambridge.—I have made mention of him among the doct. of div. of this year.

Creations.

Those that were created this year were mostly such that were created when Thom. earl of Ossory had the degree of doctor of the civil law confer'd on him.

Masters of Arts.

Mar. 27. SAM. BOWATER of Pemb. coll. lately batch. of arts of Cambridge, was created mast. of that faculty; and the same day was admitted batch. of div. conditionally that he preach a Latin sermon. The other persons following were created on the 4th of Feb. after the earl of Ossory and two of his retinue had been created doctors of the civil law.

[167] JAMES RUSSELL } of Magd. coll.
GEORGE RUSSELL }

They were younger sons of William earl of Bedford.

THOM. LEIGH a nobleman of Ch. Ch.—He was afterwards lord Leigh of Stonely.

ANTHONY ASHLEY COOPER of Trin. coll. son of Anthony lord Ashley—He was after his father's death earl of Shaftesbury, an. 1682.

Sir RICH. GRAHAM of Ch. Ch. bart.—This gentleman, who was usually called sir Rich. Grimes, was the son of sir George Graham of Netherby in Cumberland bart. and afterwards at riper years a Burgess for Cockermouth in Cumberland to serve in several parliaments, particularly for that which began at Westm. the 26th of Jan. 1679, and for that which began at Oxon the 21st of March 1680. Afterwards he was created by his majesty king Charles II. viscount Preston in Scotland, and by king James II. was sent ambassador into France upon the recalling thence of sir Will. Trumbull. Some time after his return, he became so great in the favour of that king, that on the 28th of Octob. or thereabouts, an. 1688, he was made one of the secretaries of state upon the removal of Robert earl of Sunderland, who seemed very willing to be discharged of that office, because, that having then lately changed his religion for that of Rome, he thought it very requisite to make provision for a safe retirement to avoid the danger that might come upon him, if the enterprise of the prince of Orange should succeed, as it did. In the said station of secretary the lord Preston continued till king James II. left the nation in Dec. following, who then would have made him viscount Preston in Amounderness in Lancashire, but the sudden change of affairs being then made, to the great wonder of all people, there was no seal pass'd in order to it. In the beginning of Jan. 1690 he was taken, with others, in a certain yacht going to France to king James II, upon some dangerous design, as 'twas said, and thereupon being committed prisoner to the Tower, was in danger of his life, and endured a long and tedious imprisonment, &c.⁶ He is a gent. of many accomplishments, and a zealous lover of the church of England, &c. ⁶ [He was, in 1682, sent by king Charles II. envoy extraordinary to the court of France, being attended thither by Mr. Wake, afterwards archbishop of Canterbury, as chaplain to him. When he resided at Paris he procured the suppression of the abbot Primi's History of Dutch War, printed there in 1682, and containing an account of the secret treaty between France and England, negotiated by Henrietta, dutchess of Orleans, with her brother king Charles at Dover, in May 1669. Being engaged in a plot in favour of king James, he was seized on the 30th of December, 1690, going to France, with Mr. John Ashton and Mr. Elliot, and on the 17th of January tried at the Old Baily and condemned for high treason; but after acting a very weak and irresolute part, redeemed his life by his discoveries, while his companion Mr. Ashton submitted to death with great firmness and decency. Doctors of Law.

Feb. 4. THOM. BOTELER earl of Ossory in Ireland, and lord Boteler of More-park in England, the eldest son of James duke of Ormond, and general of all the forces in Ireland, under his father now lord lieutenant of that kingdom, was created doct. of the civil law with more than ordinary solemnity.—He was afterwards made knight of the most noble order of the garter, and in 1673 May 17 he was made reer-admiral of the blue-squadron of his majesty's fleet, in order to the great sea-fight against the Dutch, which shortly after hapned: In which fight, as also in others, he gallantly acted beyond the fiction of a romance. Afterwards he was made lord chamberlain to the queen, and on the 16th of Apr. 1680 he was sworn of his majesty's most honourable council. At length this brave gent. of whom enough can never be spoken, died of a violent fever in Whitehall on Friday 30 July 1680: whereupon his body was the next evening carried privately, and deposited in a vault in the chapel of Henry VII. joyning to the abbey church at Westminster, there to remain till his father the duke of Ormond should order the farther disposal of it. Afterwards it was conveyed to Kilkenny in Ireland (as I have been inform'd) and there laid in the vault belonging to the Ormondian family, under part of the cath. church. His eminent loyalty and forward zeal on all occasions to serve his majesty and country, were manifested by many brave and generous actions; which, as they made him to be honoured and esteemed by all when living, made him also when dead generally lamented.⁸ There were several elegies made on his death,

To the church of Hempstead, near Gloucester, he gave all the tithes of the parish to endow the same, purchasing the moiety of them from Henry Powle, esq. for that use, and so made it a rectory, and built a good house for the succeeding rectors upon a parcel of land which he purchased for that use.

To the parish church of Bredwardyne, in the diocese of Hereford, his lordship gave the tythe of a meadow called Robert's meadow.

To the parish church of Little Birch, in the diocese of Hereford, he gave the tithes of Aylston's wood, being six score acres.

To the church of Home Lacy, in the diocese of Hereford, he gave all the tithes of the parish, made it a rectory, built a fair brick house for the rector, repaired the church, and beautified the same, adding very regular seats and pews.

And to a chapel of ease in the same parish called Bowson, he gave the great tithes of that township.

To the church of Boshury, in the diocese of Hereford, he gave his tithes of Uplemton, alias Temple Court, in that parish.

His lordship also rebuilt part of the abbey-church of Dooz, in the diocese of Hereford, built a new large tower for the bells, and was at the charge of having the same consecrated (all which cost 1500*l.*) and built a very good stone house, barn, and stable, for the rector there, and added to it the scite of the manor of the abbey, and all the impropriate tithes of the parish. All which donations, and the incidental charges in building, &c. amounted, at a moderate computation, to at least ten thousand pounds.

And after this, about the year 1670, John lord viscount Scudamore, having an estate, which was the priory of Llanthorn, near the city of Gloucester, finding a poor curacy of not above 10*l.* per annum, bought in the impropriation of the place at a very dear rate, and gave it to the church for ever. The same lord having the scite of the whole priory in his estate, procured a private act of parliament to make all his estate that was tithe free and extra parochial, to become for ever tithable at the full extent, and to belong to Hempstead, within a mile of Gloucester, which now, by his bounty, is become a rectory of good value, worth at least 150*l.* per annum, there being an old demolished chapel in his priory; he also gave the chapel yard worth 4*l.* per annum, to the church, and also built a neat parsonage house, which cost full 700*l.* and dying before the house was finished, ordered his executors to compleat the same, which was honourably done by them.]

⁸ [He was a man so religious, and of such a noble courteous nature, that I deploring much the untimely loss of so great and valiant a commander as he was, the chiefest and best of which was made by Thomas Flatman, which being his master-piece, he was nobly rewarded for his pains, as I have told you among the writers under the year 1688.

GEORGE DOUGLAS son of the marquess of Douglas in Scotland, lately an officer of note in the army under the king of France, now an officer or captain under the king of Poland, was created next after the earl of Ossory.

Sir NICH. ARMORER knt. governor of Duncannon castle, with the territory adjoining, in Ireland.

The said three persons were presented by Dr. Hen. Deane of New coll. and created by the vicechanc. with a little complimentary speech: which being done, and they conducted to their respective seats among the doctors, Mr. George Hooper of Ch. Ch. the dep. orator, did congratulate them with an accurate speech in the name of the university. Afterwards were created masters of arts certain noblemen and persons of quality of this university, as I have before told you among these creations.

In the latter end of this year, JOH. JACOB. BUXTORFIUS, professor of the Hebrew tongue in the university of Basil, became a sojourner in this university for the sake of the Bodleian Vatican, and continued there some months. He was a learned man, as by the things that he hath published appears.

⁹ [The Lord Chancellor to the University.

Good Mr. Vice-Chancellor,

Having found it necessary to transport myself out of England, and not knowing when it will please God that I shall return again, it becomes me to take care that the University may not be without the service of a person better able to be of use to them than I am like to be. And I do therefore hereby surrender the office of Chancellor into the hands of the said University, to the end that they may make choice of some other person better qualified to assist and protect them than I am, I am sure he can never be more affectionate to it. I desire you, as the last suit I am like to make to you, to believe that I do not fly my country for guilt, and how passionately soever I am pursued, that I have not done any thing to make the University ashamed of me, or to repent the good opinion they once had of me. And though I must have no further mention in your publick devotions, which I have always exceedingly valued, I hope I shall always be remembered in your private prayers, as, Good Mr. Vice-Chancellor,

Oct. 17. { WILLIAM PINDAR } of Univ. coll.
RICH. THOMPSON

The first of these two I shall mention among the masters, an. 1670. The other, who took no higher degree in this university, I must mention here. He was the son of Rob. Thompson of Wakefield in Yorkshire, was bred in grammar learning there, and thence sent to Univ. coll. where he became a scholar of the old foundation, took one degree in arts, left it upon pretence of being unjustly put aside from a fellowship there, went to Cambridge, took the degree of master of arts, had deacon's orders conferred on him, and afterwards those of priest: which last he received from Dr. Fuller bish. of Linc. in Hen. 7. chappel¹ at Westminster 14 March 1670. Being thus qualified, he became curate of Brington in Northamptonshire for Dr. Thomas Pierce, who, when made dean of Salisbury, an. 1675, left that living and took his curate with him to that city, and in 1676 he gave him a prebend there, and afterwards a presentation to St. Mary's in Marlborough in Wilts. In 1677 he travelled with John Norbourne of Caln in the same county gent. but before he had spent 12 months in France with him, he was recalled and had the church of Bedminster near Bristol confer'd on him, and afterwards the vicaridge of St. Mary Radcliff: at both which places expressing himself a most zealous and orthodox man for the church of England, especially when the popish plot broke out, the faction aspers'd him with the name of papist, and more particularly for this reason, when he said in his prayer or sermon in the church of St. Thomas in Bristol, 30 Jan. 1679, that there was no popish but a presbyterian plot. About which time shewing himself a great stickler against petitions to his majesty for the sitting of a parliament, which the faction with all their might drove on, he was brought into trouble for so doing; and when the parliament sate, he was, among those many that were against petitioning, brought on his knees in the house of commons and blasted for a papist: whereupon to free himself from that imputation, he wrote and published The Visor pluckt off from Rich. Thompson of Bristol Clerk, in a plain and true Character of him, printed in one sh. in fol. in 1681, wherein he takes occasion to shew, that while he was in his travels, he did not study at St. Omers or Doway as the faction gave out, but sojourned in protestant houses in Paris, Glen, Blois, and frequented protestant chappels, company, &c. Afterwards in consideration of these his sufferings, his majesty gave him the deanery of Bristol, void by the death of Mr. Sam. He hath published, besides the Visor before-mention'd, A Sermon in the Cathedral Church of Bristol before Henry Duke of Beaufort Lord Lieutenant of Gloucestershire, &c. on Titus 3. 1. Lond. 1685, qu. Baliol coll. having not a statutable master to undergo the procuratorial office this year, which the Caroline Cycle did appoint, Mr. BENJAMIN WOODROFFE a student of Ch. Ch. entred himself a commoner in the said college a day or two before the time of election. And being elected by the master and masters of the said college, he stirred so much in the matter for admission thereunto in convocation, as to have a hearing before the king and his council. But they finding it a litigious thing, referred it to the university: wherefore the doctors and masters assembled in convocation for the admission of the proctors, they did (after Mr. Woodroffe had made an eloquent speech before them in his own defence and for the obtaining of the office) adjudge the matter to the halls; so that Mr. WHITE, who had been chosen before, was then admitted.

June 5. HENRY HOWARD heir to the duke of Norfolk, and a munificent benefactor to this university, by bestowing thereon Marmora Arundelliana, or the marbles which for several years before had stood in the garden of Arundel-house in the Strand near London, was actually created with solemnity doct. of the civil law.—He was afterwards made earl of Norwich and lord marshal of England, an. 1672, and at length succeeded his brother Thomas (who died distracted at Padua⁶) in the dukedom of Norfolk. This Henry duke of Norfolk died on the eleventh of January, 1683, and was buried among his ancestors at Arundel in Sussex. He then left behind him a widow (which was his second wife) named Jane daughter of Rob. Bickerton gent. son of James Bickerton lord of Cash in the kingdom of Scotland, who afterwards took to her second husband Tho. Maxwell a Scot of an antient family and colonel of a regiment of dragoons. Under this duke of Norfolk's name⁷ was published *History and Relation of a Journey from Lond. to Vienna, and from thence to Constantinople, in the Company of his Excellency. HENRY HOWARD of Magd. coll. son and heir of Henry Howard before mentioned, was, after his father had been created doct. of the civil law, created master of arts.—On the 28th of Jan. 1677, he being then commonly called earl of Arundel, his father being at that time duke of Norfolk, he was by writ called to the house of lords by the name of the lord Mowbray; at which time sir Robert Shirley was brought into the lords house, and seated next before Will. lord Stourton, by the name of lord Ferrers of Chartley. This Henry Howard was after his father's death duke of Norfolk, and on the 22d of July 1685 he was installed knight of the most noble order of the garter, &c. See in the creations, an. 1684.

After these two Henry Howards were created and seated, one on the right, and the other on the left hand of the vice-chanc. the public orator of the university stood up, and in an excellent speech congratulated them, especially the father, in the name of the university.⁸

June 16. THOM. HOWARD of Magd. coll. younger brother to Henry before-mentioned, was then actually created master of arts.—This Thomas Howard, who had the said degree given to him when the former two were created, but was then absent, was, with his said brother Henry, student in the said coll. for a time under the inspection of Dr. Hen. Doctor of Music.

July 8. BENJ. ROGERS organist of Magd. coll. was then admitted doctor of music; which degree he compleated in that great and solemn act celebrated in Sheldon's theatre, on the 12th of the same month, being the third day after the opening and dedication of the said theatre for a learned use. This person, who was son of Peter Rogers belonging to his majesty's chappel of St. George at Windsor in Berks, was born at Windsor, was, when a boy, a choirester, and when a man, clerk or singing-man of the said chappel at Windsor.

VOL. IV.

Afterwards he became organist of Ch. Ch. in Dublin, where continuing till the rebellion broke out in 1641 he was forced thence, and going to Windsor, he obtained a singing man's place there. But being soon after silenced, by the great troubles occasioned by the civil wars in England, he taught his profession at Windsor and in the neighbourhood, and, by the favour of the men then in power, got some annual allowance in consideration of his lost place. In 1653 or thereabouts, he being then famed for a most admirable composer, did, at the request of great personages, compose several sets of ayres of four parts to be performed by violins and an organ: which being esteemed the best of their kind that could be then composed, were sent, as great rarities, into Germany to the court of archduke Leopold, (now emperor) and were tried and often played by his own musicians to his very great content, he himself being then a composer and a great admirer of music. In 1658 his great favourer and encourager of his profession Dr. Nathaniel Ingelo fellow of Eaton,¹ conducted him to Cambridge, got the degree of batch. of music to be confer'd on him,² as a member of Qu. coll. (that doctor having been sometime fellow thereof,³ and at that time a proceeder in divinity) and giving great content by his song of several parts, (which was his exercise) performed in the commencement that year by several voices, he gained the reputation there of a most admirable musician, and had the greater part of his fees and entertainment defray'd by that noble and generous doctor. "When the same Dr. Nath. Ingelo went chaplain to Bulstrode lord Whitlock into Sweden, he carried with him "some of the best compositions of B. Rogers, which were "played several times before queen Christina with great "liking." After his majesty's restoration, the lord mayor, aldermen and chief citizens of London being unanimously disposed to entertain the king, the two dukes, and both houses of parliament with a sumptuous feast, it was ordered among them that there should be added to it the best music they could obtain: and B. Rogers being then esteemed the prime composer of the nation, he was desired of them to compose a song of several parts to be performed while the king and company were at dinner. Whereupon, in order to it, Dr. Ingelo made Hymnus Eucharisticus; the beginning of the prelude to which is, 'Exultate, Justi, in Domino,' &c. This also he translated into English, and both were printed in single papers. These things being done, B. Rogers composed a song of four parts to that hymn, which was more than once tried in private. At length on the 5th of July (Thursday) 1660, being the day that his majesty, James duke of York, Henry duke of Gloucester, and both houses of parliament were at dinner in the Guild-hall of the city of London, the said printed papers in Latin and English being delivered to the king, two dukes, and dispersed among the nobility, &c. purposely that they might look on them while the performance was in doing, the song was began and carried on in Latin by twelve voices, twelve instruments and an organ, mostly performed by his majesty's servants. Which being admirably well done, it gave very great content, and Mr. Rogers the author being present, he obtained a great name for his composition and a plentiful reward. Much about that time he became organist of Eaton coll. where continuing till Theodore Colby a German was prefer'd to be organist of Exeter cathedral, Dr. Thomas Pierce who had a great value for the man (he himself being a musician) invited him to Magd. coll. and gave him the organist's place there, and there he continued in good esteem till 1685, and then being ejected, (the reason why let others tell you) the society of that house allowed him an yearly pension to keep him from the contempt of the world: in which condition he now lives, in his old age, in a skirt of the city of Oxon unregarded. He hath extant several compositions of two parts, treble and bass, in a book entit. "Court Ayres, Pavins, Almains, Corants, and Sarabands of two Parts, &c. Lond. 1655, oct. published by Playford, and also certain compositions in a book entit."—Cantica Sacra: Containing Hymns and Anthems for two Voices to the Organ, both Latin and English, Lond. 1674, fol. As also in The Latin Psalms and Hymns of four Parts, published by John Playford. His compositions for instrumental music, whether in two, three, or four parts have been highly valued, and were always, 30 years ago or more, first called for, taken out and played as well in the public music school as in private chambers: and Dr. Wilson the professor, the greatest and most curious judge of music that ever was, usually wept when he heard them well perform'd, as being wrapt up in an ecstasy, or, if you will, melted down, while others smiled or had their hands and eyes lifted up, at the excellency of them, &c. But now let's go on with the admissions.

ning of the year 1691 (of which Dr. Ken had then lately been deprived for not taking the oaths to the said king W. III. and queen Mary) is a right learned man, and hath publish'd several books and sermons, which shew him so to be.⁷

JUNE 15. JOHN NORTH M. A. of Cambr.—This gentleman, who was fellow of Jesus coll. in the said university, but now of Trinity coll. in this, (where he continued for some time) was a younger son of Dudley lord North of Kirtling, was afterwards master of Trin. coll. in Cambridge, D. of D. clerk of the closet, and preb. of Westminster.⁸ He hath published one Sermon “preach'd before the King at Newmarket, 8 Oct. 1671. Psal. 1. ver. 1. Cambr. 1671. “qu.” and made a strict review of Plato's select dialogues, De Rebus divinis in Greek and Latin, purged many superfluous and cabalistical things thence, (about the fourth part of them) which being done he published them in 1673. He died at Cambridge in the month of April (about the 12th day) an. 1683, being then esteemed a good Grecian.

JULY 8. THEOPH. HOWERTH doct. of phys. of Cambr.—He was of Magd. coll. in that univ. and of the coll. of phys. at London.

This year Sheldon's theatre being opened, and dedicated for a learned use, was a most splendid act celebrated therein on the 12th of July; and very many Cambridge men coming to the solemnity, 84 masters of arts of that univ. were incorporated in a congregation held in the house of convocation the next day. The names of some of which follow.

WILL. SAYWELL fellow of St. Joh. coll.⁹—He was afterwards chaplain to Dr. Peter Gunning bish. of Chichester and afterwards of Ely, was installed chancellor of the church of Chichester, 5 Dec. 1672, became master of Jesus coll. in the said university, D. of D. and archdeacon of Ely in the place of Barnab. Oley deceased.¹ He hath written several things, among which are Evangelical and Cath. Unity maintained in the Church of England: or an Apology for her Government, Liturgy, Subscriptions, &c. with Answers to the Objections of Mr. Baxter, Dr. Owen, and others, against Conformity. Also the L. Bishop of Ely's (Gunning) Vindication, shewing his Way of true and Christian Concord. And a Postscript in Answer to Mr. Baxter's late Objections against my self concerning general Councils, &c. Lond. 1682. oct. The book of Mr. Baxter which he answers, is his Apology for the Non-conformist Ministry, &c. Lond. 1681. qu. and that of Dr. Owen, is An Enquiry into the Original of Evangelical Churches, &c. He hath written The Reformation of the Church of England justified, according to the Canons of the Council of Nice, &c. being an Answer to a Paper reprinted at Oxford, entit. The Schism of the Church of England demonstrated, &c.—Printed in the reign of king James II. &c. “at Cambr. 1688, qu. in 5 sh. He publish'd also A serious Enquiry into the Means of an happy Union, or what Reformation is necessary to prevent Popery.”

SAMUEL SCATTERGOOD fell. of Trin. coll.—He was afterwards vicar of Blockley in Warwickshire, an. 1678,² and is author of two or more sermons.

THO. GALE fell. of the said coll. of the holy Trinity—In 1672 he became chief master of St. Paul's school in London, was afterwards D. D. prebendary of St. Paul's, fellow of the royal society, and much celebrated for his admirable knowledge in the Greek tongue, for his great labour and industry in publishing Greek authors as well MS. as printed exemplars, as also certain books of English antiquities. “Georg. Matth. Konigius in Bib. vet. & nov. saith: Tho. Gale Anglus edidit uno volumine Palæphatum & Heraclitum Περὶ Ἀριστῶν: Anonymum de iisdem, Phorutium de Naturâ Deorum, Salustium de Diis, Ocellum Lucanum, Timæum Locrum: Demophili Democratis & Secundi Sententias, Sextum Pythagoricum: Theophrasti Characteres, Pythagoricorum Fragmenta, Heliodori Opera.—Cantabr. an. 1671.” in oct. The said Dr. Gale publish'd also in Greek and Latin, Historiæ Poeticæ Antiqui Scriptores, Apollodorus Atheniensis, &c. Par. 1675. large oct. dedicated to sir Jo. Williamson.”

JOH. SHARP of Christ's coll.³—He was made archdeacon of Berks, in the place of Dr. Peter Mew, promoted to the see of Bath and Wells, an. 1672, was afterwards⁴ chaplain to Heneage lord Finch lord keeper of the great seal of England, preb. of Norwich, rector of St. Giles's in the Fields near London, dean of Norwich (in which dignity he was install'd 8 June 1681, in the place of Herb. Astley deceased) afterwards of Canterbury, upon Dr. Jo. Tillotson's translation thence to that of St. Paul in London, in Sept. 1689, and at length, upon the death of Dr. Thom. Lamplugh, archbishop of York; to which he was consecrated in the church of St. Mary le Bow in London, on Sunday the 5th of July 1691. He hath ten sermons or more extant.

HENR. JENKS fellow of Gonville and Caius coll.⁵—He was afterwards fellow of the royal society, and author of The Christian Tutor: or a free and rational Discourse of the Sovereign good and Happiness of Man, &c. in a Letter of Advice to Mr. James King in the East-Indies. Lond. 1683. oct.

ROB. WENSLEY of Sidney coll.—He was afterwards vicar of Chestnut in Hertfordshire,⁶ chaplain to James earl of Salisbury, and author of two or more sermons, and of The Form of sound Words: or the Catechism of the Church

ANTH. SCATTERGOOD⁹ of Trin. coll. D. D.

MALACH. HARRYS of Eman. coll. D. D.

The said doctor Scattergood, who was preb. of Linc. and Litchfield, and rector of Winwick and Yelvertoft in Northamptonshire, and sometime chaplain to Dr. Joh. Williams archb. of York,¹ was eldest son of Joh. Scattergood of Ellaston in Staffordshire, was a learned man, and hath extant several sermons and other things.² He was living in 1681, aged 70 years, or more.

All which doctors from Will. Fairbrother to Mal. Harrys were incorporated on the 13th of July.

Dec. 1. THOM. WATERHOUSE doct. of phys. of Leyden.—He was a Londoner born, and had the degree of doct. of the said fac. confer'd on him at Leyd. 1655.

Dec. 17. ROB. MORRISON of Univ. coll. Dr. of phys. of Angers in France.—This eminent botanist was born at, and educated in acad. learning in, Aberdeen in Scotland: From which place he was forced to fly after the battel at Brigg of Dee near Aberdeen, wherein Middleton the general of the covenanters was conqueror. Afterwards going to Paris, he was employed in the education of a young gent. called monsieur Bizet the son of a counsellor, and addicted his mind then to the study of medicine; for the obtaining of which faculty he began to learn the art of simpling or knowledge of plants and herbs under one monsieur Roobin: And in short time making a great progress therein to the wonder of all, he was, upon Roobin's recommendations, taken into the service of the duke of Orleans, with whom he continued till that duke died, and in the year 1648 he took the degree of doct. of phys. at Angers. At length upon the return of his majesty king Charles II. an. 1660, he came with him into England, was made his botanic professor and overseer of all his gardens, and had a garden and a house allowed him, and an ample salary, but enjoyed it, with his apartment, but for a short time. While he was in that capacity, he was chosen fellow of the coll. of phys. at London, and became highly valued and esteemed for his most admirable skill in botany. At length coming to the knowledge and acquaintance of Mr. Obad. Walker sen. fel. of Univ. coll. he recommended him to the dean of Ch. Ch. and other leading men of the university, to be chosen botanic professor: Whereupon, by the great testimonies and recommendations of his worth, he was elected on the 16th of Dec. and incorporated doctor on the day following, an. 1669, as I have before told you. He made his first entrance on the botanic lecture in the medicine school, on the 2d of Sept. 1670, and on the 5th of the same month he translated himself to the physic-garden, where he read in the middle of it (with a table before him) on herbs and plants thrice in a week for 5 weeks space, not without a considerable auditory. In the month of May 1673 he read again, and so likewise in the autumn following: which course, spring and fall, he proposed always to follow, but was diverted several years by prosecuting his large design of publishing the universal knowledge of Simples. He hath written (1) Prædiorum Botanicorum Pars prior, seu Hortus Regius Blæensis auctus, &c. Lond. 1669. oct. (2) Prædiorum Botanicorum Pars secunda, in qua Hallucinationes Casp. Bauhini, & Dialogus cum Socio Regalis Societatis. Ibid. eod. an. (3) Plantarum Umbelliferarum Distributio nova per Tabulas Cognationis & Affinitatis, ex Libro Naturæ observata & detecta. Oxon. 1672. fol. A laudable account of this book is in the Philos. Transact. num. 81. (4) Plantarum Historiæ Universalis Oxoniensis Pars secunda. Seu Herbarum Distributio nova, per Tabulas Cognationis & Affinitatis, ex Libro Naturæ observata & detecta. Oxon. 1681 fol. adorned with many cuts. The author designed to go forward with one or more volumes, but being suddenly cut off, the work ceased. However there is now in the press at Oxford a vol. in fol. in continuance or pursuit of the said last vol. of Dr. Morison, written by Jacob Bobart keeper of the phys. garden in Oxon, with annotations thereunto of the eastern names by Dr. Tho. Hyde, chief keeper of the Bodleian library. After which is done, there will come out another vol. of Trees by the same hand. This Dr. Morison, who was esteemed the best in the world for his profession, taking a journey from Oxon to Lond. and Westm. in order for the carrying on his great designs of publishing one or more volumes of plants, did, when in Westminster, receive a bruise on his breast by the pole of a coach, as he was crossing the street between the end of St. Martin's-lane and Northumberland-house near Charing-cross, on the ninth day of Novemb. 1683; whereupon being soon after carried to his house in Green-street in Leicester-fields, died the next day, to the great reluctancy of all those that were lovers and admirers of his faculty. Afterwards he was buried in the church of St. Martin's in the Fields within the liberty of Westminster.

Creations.

The creations this year were in all the four faculties, occasion'd mostly by the dedication of the theatre, and the coming to the university of the duke of Ormond.

Masters of Arts.

On the 9th of July, in a convocation held in the Sheldonian theatre, betwixt the hours of 8 and 10 in the morn. (at which time it was dedicated to a learned use) were these seven persons following actually created masters of arts there.

GEORGE BERKLEY of Ch. Ch. a younger son of George lord (afterwards earl of) Berkley.—He was afterwards beneficed in Leicestershire,³ at Segrave I think, and published A Sermon at the Assizes held at Leicester 22 July 1686; on Mat. 7. 12. Lond. 1686. qu. &c.

THO. MIDDLETON } of Ch. Ch. baronets.
JOH. BOWYER }
RALPH ASHTON of Brasen coll. baronet.
JOH. LLOYD of Jesus coll. baronet.
CHARLES KEYMISH of Wadh. coll. baronet.

Afterwards were these two persons following created in the convocation house, at what time the most noble duke of Ormond was created doct. of law.

Jul. 15. { ROB. SHIRLEY of Ch. Ch. baronet.
{ WILL. DRAKE of St. Joh. coll. baronet.

Sir Rob. Shirley, son of sir Rob. Shirley who died in the Tower of London, was brought into the lord's house, and seated next above the lord Stourton by the name of the lord Ferrers of Chartley, 28 Jan. 1677, as I have before told you.

Jul. 17. { FRANC. CHOLMONDELEY esq;
{ GEORGE BRUCE.

These two were to have been created on the 15th of Jul. when the duke of Orm. honoured the degree of doct. of law, had they been present. The first was of the antient family of his name in Cheshire, and was a burgess, as it seems, to serve in parl. after the prince of Orange came to the crown. The other was a Scot of an antient and noble race.

Doctors of Law.

July 15. The most illustrious prince JAMES BOTELER, duke, marquess and earl of Ormond, earl of Ossory and Brecknock, viscount Thorles, baron of Lanthony, and Arclo, chief butler of Ireland, lord of the royalties and franchises of the county of Tipperary, chanc. of the univ. of Dublin, lord lieutenant general, and general governour of his majesty's kingdom of Ireland, one of the lords of his most honourable privy-council in all his majesty's kingdoms of England, Scotland, and Ireland, lord steward of his majesty's household, lord lieutenant of the county of Somerset, gentleman of his majesty's bedchamber, and knight of the most noble order of the garter, was with great solemnity actually created doctor of the civil law in the house of convocation, in order to his election of chancellor of this university, which was accordingly made on the 4th of Aug. following. He was paternally descended⁴ from Harvey Walter a great baron of this realm in the time of king Henry II; whose posterity, afterwards, became earls of Ormond; whereof another James, surnamed Boteler, (who married Elizabeth the daughter of Humph. de Bohun earl of Hereford and Essex, lord of Brecknock, and constable of England, by Elizabeth his wife, one of the daughters of king Edward III.) was the first so created by king Edward III. This James duke of Ormond was lord lieutenant of Ireland in the time of king Charles I. of blessed memory, where he performed great things for his cause, and afterwards did constantly adhere to king Charles II. in the tedious time of his calamitous exile. Afterwards, for these his loyal actings and sufferings, he was by his majesty, after his restoration, made lord lieutenant of Ireland, and advanced to honours and places in England, as before 'tis told you. At length in the latter end of Nov. 1682, his majesty king Charles II. was graciously pleased to create him a duke of this kingdom of England, by the name and title of James duke of Ormond. This most noble person, who was a true son of the church of England, a zealous adherer to the royal cause, and a great lover of the regular clergy, universities and scholars, hath going under his name several Declarations, Letters, &c. while he was lord lieutenant of Ireland, and in other capacities engaged there for the cause of king Charles I. as also A Letter in Answer to Arthur Earl of Anglesey his Observations and Reflections on the E. of Castilehaven's Memoirs concerning the Rebellion of Ireland. Lond. 1682. in 3 sh. in fol. See in Arth. Annesley earl of Angl. among the writers in vol. iv. col. 181. an. 1656. He died much lamented at Kingston hall in Dorsetshire, on Saturday the 21st of July 1688, aged 79 years: Whereupon succeeded him in his honours his grandson James earl of Ossory, son of his eldest son Thom. late earl of Ossory. Afterwards his body was to be conveyed to Kilkenny in Ireland, and there deposited in a vault under part of the cath. ch. among his ancestors.

PHILIP STANHOPE earl of Chesterfield was created the same day, Jul. 15.—He had before taken for his second wife Elizabeth daughter of the said James duke of Ormond.

ROB. SPENCER esq.

JOH. EVELYN esq.

The last of these two, who was originally of Bal. coll. hath written many things of great curiosity, and therefore he is hereafter to be numbred among the Oxford writers with honour.

It was then also, (July 15.) granted that CHARLES EARL OF DUNFERMLING in Scotland, and THEOBALD EARL OF CARLINGFORD in Ireland, who accompanied the duke of Ormond in these parts, might be created doctors of law, but whether they were so, it appears not.

Doctor of Physic.

Nov. 2. ELIAS ASHMOLE esq; sometime of Brasen. coll. now (1669) chief comptroler of his maj. excise in Engl. and Wales, was diplomated doct. of phys.—ab eruditione recondita et benevolentia in academ. propensa nobis charissimus, as it is said in the pub. reg. of the university. He hath written several things, and therefore he is with due respect to be numbred hereafter (as he is partly already) among the Oxford writers.

Doctors of Divinity.

Feb. 28. JOH. DURELL of Merton coll. the judicious and laborious advocate for the church of England both in word and deed, was then created.⁵

On the 15th of July when the duke of Ormond was created, it was unanimously granted by the members of convocation that RICH. LINGARD, dean of Lismore in Ireland, might be admitted to the degree of doct. of div. but whether he was so, it appears not. He was now public professor of div. of the university of Dublin, of which he was D. D. and dying at Dublin, was buried in the chap. of Trinity coll. there, on the 13th of Nov. 1670. Soon after were published An Elegy and funeral Oration on his Death: In both which, the

He was originally of the university of Cambridge, and hath written among other things,⁶ A Letter of Advice to a young Gentleman, leaving the University, concerning his Behaviour and Conversation in the World. Printed in tw. 1670, &c. The said letter was written to James Lane of Ch. Ch. in Oxon, eldest son of Geor. visc. Lanesborough.

PETER WORM a Dane, son of the great antiquary Olaus Worm, was a student this year, and after, in Oxon, where obtaining several accomplishments, became, after his return to his country, secretary to the king of Denmark, &c.

In the beginning of July, JOH. RODOLPH. WESTENIUS and SEBASTIANUS FESCIUS, both of Basil in Germany, were entred students in the public library and continued in Oxon about two years. The first was afterwards professor of the Greek tongue at Basil, and a publisher of several noted books, the other also a publisher of certain curious and critical matters, which are now highly valued by scholars of his country, &c.

Dec. 20. JOHN ULACQ doct. of the civil law of Orange was incorporated in a convocation held in the theatre, while the prince of Orange was entertained with the delights of the muses there.—He was the son of Cornelius Ulacq, chief amanuensis or scribe or secretary to the said prince of Orange.

EDW. HALSIUS doct. of phys. of Leyden, and physician in the court of the said prince, was then and there also incorporated.

SAM. MORRYS doct. of physic of the said university was also then and there incorporated.—He was batch. of arts of Magd. hall, an. 1662.

These three last were nominated by the prince of Orange to be incorporated.

Creations.

The creations this year were in all the four faculties, occasion'd mostly by the coming to the university of the prince of Aurange or Orange.⁹

Masters of Arts.

Apr. 22. JOSHUA STOFFORD of Brasen-nose, lately of Magd. coll.—He was soon after admitted batch. of div. as I have before told you.

Dec. 20. RICH. LAUDER of St. John's coll. was actually created in a convocation held in the theatre, while the prince of Orange sate in a chair of state on the right hand of the vice-chancellor.—This noble person was son of Charles Maitland baron of Haltown in Scotland (by his wife the daughter and heir of Lauder) younger brother to John Maitland duke of Lauderdale, and was afterwards lord justice clerk of Scotland, where he was called lord Maitland so long as his father Charles was earl of Lauderdale (for by that title he was known after the said Joh. Maitland duke of Lauderdale died, which was at Tunbridge in Kent on St. Bartholomew's day 1682) and after the said Charles his death, which hapned about the ninth day of May an. 1691, the said Richard Lauder became earl of Lauderdale, and is now living in Scotland. After him were these persons following created in the said convocation.

WILL. SCHARP of Ch. Ch. who was allowed to wear the gown of a noble man during his stay in the university, was next, after Lauder, created.—He was the eldest son of Dr. James Scharp sometime professor of div. and rector of the univ. of St. Andrew, afterwards consecrated archb. of St. Andrew's in St. Peter's church, commonly called the abbey church in Westminster, 15 of Decemb. 1661, at which time were also consecrated Andr. Fairfowl minister of Duncce to the archiepiscopal see of Glasgow, James Hamilton late minister of Cambusnethan to the see of Galloway, and Rob. Leighton dean of his majesty's chappel royal in Scotland, and late principal of the coll. at Edinburgh, to the see of Dumblaine. This most worthy archbishop Scharp, who is justly characterized to have been 'pietatis exemplum, pacis angelus, sapientiæ oraculum, gravitatis imago,' &c. was most barbarously murdered, for his function sake, near the city of St. Andrew, by a pack of hell-hounds, enemies to God, man, and all kind of religion, to the great horror and amazement of all the Christian world, on the 3d of May 1679, aged 61 years: Whereupon his body was buried in the cath. church of St. Andrew, and had soon after put over it a stately monument, with a most noble inscription thereon; the contents of which being now too large for this place, they shall for brevity's sake be omitted.

ANDREW BRUCE a Scot of an antient family.—I have made mention of another Andrew Bruce among the incorporations, an. 1660.

JOH. TREVOR gent. com. of Mert. coll. son of sir John Trevor one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state, and of his most honourable privy-council.—The said sir John Trevor died on the 28th of June 1672, aged 47 years and was buried in the church of St. Bartholomew in Smithfield London: whereupon Hen. Coventry esq; was sworn principal secretary in his place on the 3d of July following. The said sir John Trevor was son of another sir John Trevor of the city of Westminster knt. who, after he had kept pace with the dominant party in the times of usurpation, as his said son had done, (for they were both halters in the presbyterian rebellion, and adherers to the usurper) died full of years in the said city, in the winter time, before the month of Dec. an. 1673.

Besides the aforesaid persons, were then actually created WILLIAM TAYLER, JOH. DAN, FRANC. ANSHENHURST, JAM. INNYS, CLEM. DOLBY, JOH. MATTHEW and JAMES WADBYNG; of all whom I know nothing.

Febr. 1. { ALTHAM ANNESLEY } of Magd. coll.
 { RICH. ANNESLEY }

These were the sons of Arthur earl of Anglesey, and were to have been created, had they not been absent, in the Oran-gian creation. I shall make mention of the said Rich. Annesley, among the doct. of div. an. 1689.

MAR. 21. SIR WILL. ELLIS of Linc. coll. bart.—He was also nominated to be created when the prince of Orange honoured the degree of doct. of the civil, but was then absent.

Batchelor of Divinity.

Jan. 13. JOSEPH SAYER of Wadh. coll.—This divine, who was son of Franc. Sayer sometime minister of Yattenden in Berks, became *commoner of Wadh. • Servitor. First coll. in 1647, left it without a degree, edit. took holy orders † from Dr. Prideaux, † But from whom I know not. First edit. bishop of Worcester, succeeded his father in Yattenden, an. 1656, resign'd it to his brother Francis sometime of Mert. coll. an. 1665, at which time Joseph Sayer became rector of Newbury, and of Sulham in his own country of Berks. In the month of May 1670 he became preb. of Bishopston in the church of Salisbury, by the death of one Will. Hobbes, and under pretence of being ejected for his loyalty from his coll. (which is false) he got himself to be put in the roll of those which the prince of Orange deof Augustine Briggs, esq. twice member of parliament for that city; was educated in Bennet college in Cambridge, under the care of Dr. Tenison (afterwards archbishop of Canterbury) and chosen fellow of that society, in which he continued several years, and had the tuition of a good number of pupils, discharging that trust with honour to the college. After he had improved himself by travelling into foreign countries, being well versed in most parts of learning, he settled at London, where he lived in great esteem for his eminent skill in his profession, and obtained the society and friendship of the most learned men. He accurately surveyed the eye, and was a judicious anatomist, as appears by his two treatises, Ophtha-binographia and Nova Visionis Theoria, inserted in the Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society. He married Hannah, sole daughter and heiress of Edmond Hobart, gent. of Holt, in Norfolk, related to the honourable family of that name, of Blickling, in the said county. He dyed Sept. 4, 1704, aged 62, at Town Mall in Kent, where he lies interred, leaving three children, Mary, Henry, and Hannah. MS. Insertion in Bishop Tunner's Copy.]

sired to be created, while he was entertain'd at Oxon. About which time, he, by the endeavours of one Sayer his majesty's chief cook, procured the rich rectory of North-Church in Hertfordshire. He hath published, A Sermon preached at Reading, 25th of Feb. 1672, at the Assizes there holden for the County of Berks, &c. on Rom. 13. Part of the 5th Verse, Lond. 1673. qu. On the 8th of Decemb. 1681 he was installed archdeacon of Lewes in Sussex, which is all that I hitherto know of him.¹

Doctors of Law.

Sept. 16. ISAAC VOSSIUS son of the famous Joh. Gerard Vossius, was then actually created doct. of the civil law, after he had been with great humanity and friendship entertained by some of the chief heads of colleges, as his father had been before, in 1629; much about which time he was installed canon of Canterbury—This Dr. Vossius was installed canon of Windsor, in the place of Dr. Tho. Viner deceased, 12 May 1673, and dying in his lodgings in Windsor Castle on the 10th of Feb. 1688, was buried there, leaving then behind him the best private library, as it was then supposed, in the whole world.² He hath published several books, the titles of some of which you may see in the Bodleian Catalogue.³ Several also he wrote while he was at Windsor, among which is his book De Sibyllinis aliisque quæ Christi natalem præcessere Oraculis: Accedit ejusdem Responsio ad Objectiones nuperæ Criticæ sacræ, &c. Oxon. 1680. oct. "a laudable account of which book is in the Philosoph. Trans. num. 93. p. 6024, &c. he has also extant a book "De Motu Marium, &c."

Decemb. 20. The most illustrious prince WILLIAM HENRY NASSAU, prince of Orange and Nassau, was actually created doct. of the civil law in a convocation held in the theatre.—The rest of his titles you shall have as they stand in the public register, given into the hands of the registry by one of the chief attendants, thus: Comes Cattimelibocii, Viendæ, Dietziæ, Lingæ, Moersiæ, Burenæ, Leerdamiæ, & Marchio Veræ & Flissingiæ, Dynasta Dominus ac Baro Bredæ, Urbis, Graviæ & ditionis Cuychiæ, Diestæ, Grimbergæ, Herstalliæ, Cronendonchiæ, Warnestonii, Arlaili, Noseretti, Sancti Viti, Daesbergæ, Aggeris, Sancti Martini, Geertrudenbergæ utriusq; Swaluwe, Naelwici, &c. Vicecomes hæreditarius Antwerpæ & Vezantionis, Marescallus hæreditarius Hollandiæ, Regii ordinis Periscelidis Eques.—This most noble prince was conducted in his doctor's robes, with a velvet round cap, from the apodyterium (or vestry of convoc.) by the beadles with their silver staves erected, and chains about their necks, in the company of the reg. prof. of the civil law: And when he came near to the grades leading up to the vicechancellor's seat in the theatre, the said professor, in an humble posture, presented him with a short speech, the prince having his cap on; which being done, the vicechancellor created him with another, and then descending from his place, he took the prince by the arm, and conducted him up to his chair of state, standing on the right hand of that of the vicech. at some distance above it. The said prince is now king of Engl. by the name of William III.

A little before his entrance into the theatre, the vicechancellor read the names of certain persons that were then to be created in the four faculties of arts, law, physic and divinity, which were all or mostly nominated by the prince, and given into the hands of sir Charles Cotterel master of the ceremonies, who gave it into those of the vicechancellor. The paper or roll contained the names of fifteen to be created masters of arts, one to be batch. of divinity, eighteen to be doctors of the civil law, (whereof one was incorporated) six to be doctors of phys. and seven to be doct. of divinity. After the names were read by the vicechancellor, and proposed to the ven. convocation for their consents, there was a general murmuring among the masters, not against the strangers to be created, but some of their own body. This creation was called by some the Orangian creation, tho' not so pleasing to the generality, as might be wished for. After the prince was seated, these persons following were created doct. of the civ. law.

JACOBUS LIBER Baro ac Dominus Wassenariæ, Obdami, Hensbrokii, &c. Præfectus equestris necnon Legionis Equitum Major, Gubernator urbium Willemstadii, Clandriæque, ut & propugnaculorum adjacentium confæderati Belgii Servitio.

WILLIAM ALBERT earl or count of Dona, who was now, or at least was lately, ambassador from the king of Sweden to his majesty the king of Great Britain.—He was here in England in the same quality, an. 1667, as I have told you in Anth. Ashley Cooper, among the writers, an. 1682. vol. iv. col. 74.

HENRY DE NASSAU, lord in Ouwerkerk, &c.—One of both his names and title became master of the horse after king William III. came to the crown, and capt. of the fourth troop of his majesty's horse-guards.

WILL. DE NASSAU, lord in Leersum, in Fæderato Belgio Turmæ peditum præfectus, &c.—This person and H. de Nassau were related in blood to the prince.

WILLIUM BENTING⁴ or BENTINK—After the prince of Orange came to the crown of England, he was made groom of the stole and privy-purse, and in the beginning of Apr. 1689 he was made baron of Cirencester, viscount Woodstock, and earl of Portland.

JOHN DE BYE lord in Albranswert.—His other titles stand thus in the register—Celsissimi Principis Auriaci Aulæ Magister primarius, Canonicus Ultrajectensis Turmæ Peditum in Fæderato Belgio Præfectus & Vice-Colonellus.

JAMES DE STEENHUYNS free lord in Heumen, Malden, Oploo, and Floresteyn.

HERMAN SCAEP lord of Beerse, was, being absent, diplomated.

Sir CHARLES COTTEREL knt. master of the ceremonies, and master of the requests.—This gent. who was of Wylsford in Lincolnshire, "son of sir Clement Cotterel groom-porter to king James I." succeeded sir Joh. Finet in the mastership of the ceremonies, an. 1641, and became so great a master of some of the modern languages, that he translated from Spanish into English *A Relation of the Defeating of Card. Dormer esq; assistant master of the ceremonies in his place. On the 18th of Feb. following, his majesty confer'd the honour of knighthood on the said Ch. Lod. Cotterel, and at the same time did put about his neck a gold chain and medal, the mark of his office.

SIR WALT. VANE kt.—Of the family of the Vanes of Kent.

HENR. COCCEIUS.

JOHN WOOLDRIDGE or WOLVERIDGE esq;—He was of Dedmaston in Shropshire, had been educated in Cambridge, and afterwards became barrester of Grey's Inn, &c.

THOMAS DUPPA esq;—He was nephew to Brian sometime bish. of Winchester, was afterwards eldest gentleman usher and daily waiter to his majesty; and, upon the death of sir Edw. Carteret, usher of the black rod, about the middle of March, 1682. Soon after he was made a knight.⁵

EDM. WARCUP esq;—This person, who is a cadet of an antient family of his name at English near Henley in Oxfordshire, became a commoner of St. Alb. hall a little before the grand rebellion broke out, afterwards a traveller, and at length a captain in the parliament army, by the favour of his uncle Will. Lenthall speaker of the long parliament; and a captain he was in the regiment of sir Anth. Ashley Cooper, in the latter end of 1659. After the king's return he was made a justice of peace of Middlesex, of which, as also of his commission in the lieutenantancy and service of the duke of York, he was deprived for a time and committed to the Fleet for abusing the name of Hen. earl of Arlington. But being soon after restored, upon his submission to the said count, he became very active in that office, especially against the priests and papists, when the popish plot was discovered, an. 1678. In 1663 he was created master of arts, in 1670 doct. of the civil law, as 'tis herē told you, and on the 15th of Dec. 1684, being then of North More in Oxfordshire, he received the honour of knighthood from his majesty at Whitehall. He hath translated out of the originals An exact Survey of the whole Geography and History of Italy, with the adjacent Isles of Sicily, Malta, &c. and whatever is remarkable in Rome, Lond. 1660, fol.

All which doctors of the civil law, from the prince of Orange to this John Moore, were created on the 20th of Dec. the prince being then seated in his chair of state.

Dec. 20. THOM. HAYES was created doct. of the same faculty, in the said conv. by virtue of the chancellor's letters, which say that he had served his majesty as chaplain to sir Thomas Allyn (vice-admiral) as well in all the Turkish wars as before, &c.

Doctors of Physic.

ABRAHAM CLIFFORD an Englishman, secundarius à secretis to the prince of Orange.—This person, who was a presbyterian, hath written—Methodus Evangelica: or the Gospel Method of God's saving Sinners by Jesus Christ, practically explained in 12 Positions, Lond. 1676, oct. To which is prefixed a preface by Dr. Tho. Manton and Mr. Rich. Baxter. This Dr. Clifford died in the parish of St. Sepulchre's in London, in the beginning of the year 1675.

WILL. BRIAN one of the prince's court.

RICHARD MORTON.—This physician, who was a minister's son, was originally of Magd. hall, afterwards one of the chaplains of New coll. took the degrees in arts, and about the time that he took that of master, became chaplain in the family of Foley of Worcestershire. Afterwards shewing himself a nonconformist when the act of uniformity was published, he studied physic, and after he had the degree of doctor of that faculty bestowed on him by the prince of Orange, he became fellow of the coll. of physicians in London, and at length author of Phthisiologia, seu Exercitationes de Phthisi tribus Libris comprehensa. Totumq; Opus variis Historiis illustratum, Lond. 1689, in a large oct.

Feb. 28. In a convocation then held, JAMES ALBAN GIBBES or GIBBES (or Ghibbesius as he writes himself) poet laureat to Leopold the emperor of Germany, "and the "Horace of his age," was declared doctor of physic by virtue of the chancellor's letters written to the vice-chanc. which partly run thus—"Understanding that you have received a present of a gold chain and medal from Mr. Gibbes poet laureat to his imperial majesty, I think it will become you to make him some handsome return by sending him a degree of doctor of laws, or physic, by a diploma, or else a letter of thanks, or both," &c. After the letter was read, and the vice-chancellor had proposed the matter to the convocation, he was declared doctor of physic: yet his diploma was not sealed till the 10th of Aug. 1673. See more among the creations of that year.

Doctors of Divinity.

DENNIS GREENVILL of Exet. coll.—He was afterwards dean of Durham, and when the prince of Orange came to the crown, a non-juror.

JOHN DAVYS.

THOM. of laws and 19 masters of arts of Cambridge incorp. The batch. of laws was,

Jul. 14. GEORGE OXENDEN of Trin. hall in the said university.—He was afterwards doct. of his faculty, dean of the Arches, vicar-general to the archbishop of Canterbury, and chancellor to the bish. of London. “Master of Trin. hall,” “and the king’s professor of law in the university of Cambridge.”

Among the masters that were incorporated were these following.

May 5. MATTHEW SMALLWOOD of Qu. coll. senior proctor of the univ. of Cambr.⁹

Jul. 15. NATHAN. RESBURY of Eman. coll.—He was afterwards minister of Wandsworth and Putney in Surrey,¹ chaplain to Arthur earl of Anglesea, and after his death to James his son, and at length chaplain in ordinary to their majesties king Will. III. and queen Mary, &c. He hath published 4 or more sermons, and two little things against popery in the reign of king James II.

Jul. 15. RICH. PEARSON of Eman. coll.—He was afterwards rector of St. Michael’s Crooked-lane in Lond. and author of three or more sermons.

STEPH. UPMAN of King’s college was incorporated the same day.²—He was afterwards secretary to Robert earl of Ailesbury, fellow of Eaton coll. an. 1677, prebendary of Westminster,³ &c.

JOHN MOORE of Clare hall, was incorporated also the same day.⁴—He was afterwards chaplain to Heneage earl of Nottingham, lord chancellor of England, D.D. minister of St. Austin’s church in London, afterwards rector of St. Andrew’s church in Holborn, and chaplain in ordinary to their majesties king Will. III. and queen Mary.⁵ He hath 4 or more sermons extant, and perhaps other things. Quære. On the 5th of Jul. 1691 he was consecrated bish. of Norwich in the church of St. Mary le Bow in Lond. (with other bishops) in the place of Dr. Will. Lloyd deprived for not taking the oaths to king Will. III. and queen Mary.⁶

Besides the said masters, were two batch. of div. of the said univ. of Cambr. incorp. of which one was

RICHARD RICHARDSON of Eman. coll. Jul. 15.⁷—I have made mention of him and his translation⁸ of A Treatise of Bees, which he entit. Caroli Butleri Fœminia Monarchia, sive Apum Història, &c. in Ch. Butler among the writers of

vol. iii. col. 209. The other batch. of div. who was incorp. was JOHN BALDERSTON of the said coll. of Eman.

There were also two doct. of the laws of the said univ. incorp. viz.

May 5. JONAS DOCWRA of Christ’s coll. and

Jul. 15. ROB. THOMPSON of Trin. hall.—This last, who was, if I mistake not, secretary to the archbishop of Canterbury, wrote and published—Sponsa nondum Uxor: Or, the Marriage between the Lady Katharine Fitz-Gerald and Edward Villiers Esq; asserted. Being an Answer to Dr. Dndl. Loftus his Book entit. ΔΙΓΑΜΙΑΣ ’ΑΔΙΚΙΑ, &c. Lond. 1678, in 5 sheets and half in qu.

HENRY ATHERTON doct. of physic of Cambr.—He was of Christ’s coll. in that university, and afterwards author of The Christian Physician, Lond. 1683, oct. and perhaps of other books. Qu.⁹

JAMES ARDERNE D. D. of Cambridge.¹—This person, who was a Cheshire man born, “and descended from the “antient family of his name there,” was educated in Christ’s coll. in that university, and this year 1673 and in the year after, he was fellow commoner of Brasen-n. coll. partly for the sake of the public library, and partly for the conversation of the divines and others in this university. He was also about that time minister of St. Botolph’s Aldgate in London, afterwards chaplain in ordinary to his majesty king Charles II. who bestowed on him the deanery of Chester upon the death of Dr. Hen. Bridgman bish. of the isle of Man (who had kept it in commendam with his bishoprick) was installed therein in July 1682. He hath written (1) Directions concerning Matter and Stile of Sermons, Printed in 1671, in tw. (2) Conjectura circa ’Επιτομήν D. Clementis Romani. Cui subjiiciuntur Castigationes in Epiphaniū & Petaviū de Eucharistia, de Cœlibatu Clericorum & de Oratationibus pro Vitâ functis, Lond. 1683, in 4 sh. in qu. In the title of this book he writes himself Jacobus de Ardenna. He hath also published two or more sermons, as The true Christian’s Character and Crown, &c. on Rev. 1. 10. Lond. 1671, qu. As also A Sermon at the Visitation of John Bishop of Chester, at Chester, on 2 Tim. 4. ver. 5. latter part, Lond. 1677, qu. &c. He printed A Speech to his Majesty 27 Aug. 1687, Lond. 1687, in half a sheet. At length, after this doctor had run with the humour of king James II. and therefore did suffer several indignities and affronts from the vulgar of and near Chester, when that king withdrew himself into France in Dec. 1688, he gave way to fate on the 18th of Sept. 1691; whereupon his body was buried in the cathedral church of Chester on the 22d of the said month. By his will he bequeathed his books, and chief part of his estate to provide and maintain a public library in the cathedral church of Chester for the use of the city and clergy.

and afterwards taking to wife a zealous Catholic named Mary Stoner of the family of Stoner near Watlington in Oxfordshire, was, by her endeavours, as I have heard, drawn over to her religion. Soon after they settled in London, but finding not that quiet enjoyment relating to their opinion, which they expected, they went to the city of Roan in Normandy, where this our poet laureat was born, an. 1616 or thereabouts, and had the Christian name, at the font, given him of James Alban, in memory of the great protomartyr of Engl. St. Alban. Thence, at 9 years of age, he was conveyed into England, and spent some time in trivial literature there, his father being then physician to Hen. Maria queen of England. Afterwards he was sent to the English college at St. Omers, where he spent some years, with great advantage, in academical learning: and after he had laid a good foundation there, he travelled through several parts of the Low Countries, Germany, Spain, Italy, &c. and spent some time at Padua under the famous anatomist Joh. Veslingius. In the latter end of 1644 he settled in Rome, in which year pope Urban 8 died, and was there received, especially among the English, with great humanity. Soon after, upon the discovery of the worth of the person, he was entertained by Franc. Atestinus duke of Modena, to be tutor to Almeric his son, with whom continuing about two years, (in which time he was mostly at Modena) he was taken into the patronage and family of Bernardin cardinal Spada bishop of Fraschatie, called by some Tusculan, with whom living in the quality of physician till that cardinal died, he was taken into the protection of prince Justinian, in whose palace he continued till the time of that prince's death. In 1657 pope Alexander 7, an encourager of all good arts, advanced him to the lectureship of rhetoric, in the school called Sapienza at Rome, in the place of Hen. Chiffilius (a person of great name and learning) deceased: which being worth about 60l. per an. was a great help to his poetical muse. About that time he had also a canonry of St. Celsus bestowed upon him by the said pope, who having published a book of verses, our poet Ghibbesius had a copy commendatory set before them.^a In the year 1667 Leopold the emperor of Germany, did, by his diploma dated 2 May, constitute and create him his poet laureat, and at the same time gave him a gold chain with a medal hanging thereunto, to be always worn by him, especially at public and solemn times and in public places. Which great honour being made known to pope Clement IX. he was admitted into his presence, kissed his foot, and was congratulated by him. In 1668 he published his Carminum Pars Lyrica ad Exemplum Q. Horatii Flacci quam-proximè concinnata, printed at Rome in 4 books in oct. They are dedicated to the said pope Clement IX. and have before them the author's picture, (shewing him to be a handsome person, as indeed he was) which is supported by the Roman eagle, with a laurel in its beak hanging over the author's head, and under it two verses, made by the famous Athanas. Kircherus (who well knew the vain humour of the poet) running thus:

Tot pro Ghibbesio certabunt regna, quot urbes
Civem Mæoniden asservire suum.

At the end of the said four books, is one of epods dedicated to his dear mother the English college at St. Omers, and at the end of that is Symphonia Clarorum Virorum ad Ghibbesii Lyram, wherein his humour, which was much addicted to flattery and applause, is exactly hit by the pens of cardinal

Spada, Thomas Farnabie of England, (mentioned among the writers) Joseph Maria Suares bishop of Vaison in France, Leo Allatius the famous Jesuite, Claudius Grattus, Thomas the son of Casper Bartholin, Joh. Veslingius a physician of Padua, Franc. Angelus cardinal of Rapacciol, &c. In the year 1670 he being minded to make a present of his gold chain and medal to the famous university of Oxon, he wrote a letter to Dr. Peter Mews the vice-chancellor hereof, dated at Rome 5 Apr. the same year, which verbatim runs thus:

'Having received sundry literary honours from princes abroad in the space of these last 30 years of my being out of England, but especially from his sacred imperial majesty a glorious diploma, characterizing me his poet laureat, sent me to Rome with a rich chain and medal of gold, I have thought to make a solemn consecration of this Cæsarean present to the altar of memory and posterity, in the worthiest temple I could in any place think upon. In this resolution I was not long to make a choice, where the head-stone of gratitude like the Chrysomagenes naturalists speak of, draw to it self, and fix my golden fleece. In Britain's Athenarum then, Oxford, that general mart of sciences, as in a treasury or cabinet of fame, I desire to deposite with an eternal do, dico, dedico, this dear pledge with all my hopes of future renown. What I said of gratitude I would have understood doubly, for my father's concern of good memory, and mine own particular interest. He having received, being a student, his virtuous education in Brasen-n. college, and transfused part of it into me, it would seem an act of omission unpardonable, did I not profess openly, and correspond in some measure to the great obligations I owe in both our names to such an alma mater, that famous university, from whose abundant streams I had the good fortune to draw some milk. I have been of late in a strange anxiety how to bring my purpose happily to effect. I consulted finally with some gentlemen, Oxford scholars, that now are in this city, who unanimously speak your worth and great learning, congratulating with me the good luck I have now to send the present, in your time of vice-chancellor, under whose conduct the matter might find its wished issue. Wherefore, most rev. doctor, be pleased to think upon a way to inform us particularly, how I am to consign and convey a donative I so much esteem. I hear there is a fair large gallery, wherein are kept rarities of antiquity, medals and things of that nature, I shall be ambitious of a corner among them.—Mr. Scawen³ my lord of Northumberland's secretary, hath been pleased to take upon him the conveyance of these lines, who will likewise accompany them with his letter to you. When you shall honour me with an answer, I shall send jointly my book of Lyrics newly printed here, and make an oblation of it to the library. Now I begin henceforth to wait your commands, accordingly to govern my self, which I doubt not with your best convenience shortly to receive. In the mean while with low veneration due unto your grand deserts, I kiss your hands, as most reverend and learned sir, your, &c.'

This letter being received by the vice-chancellor, a return of thanks for the present time was made soon after, with direction how to send his present. Afterwards the gold chain, medal, diploma (whereby he was created poet laureat) were conveyed by the hands of the steward belonging to Jocelin earl of Northumberland, (I mean that earl who died in his travels at Turin in Savoy, in May an. 1670) who, when he came to London, sending them to Dr. H. Compton canon of Ch. Ch. in Oxon, he thereupon presented them to the vice-chancellor: at which time the most noble James duke of Ormond, chancellor of the university, having received an account of this generous gift, he thereupon sent his letters to the vice-chancellor to make some handsome return for it. Whereupon a convocation being called, he was declared by a diploma doct. of phys. in the latter end of Feb. 1670. See more among the creations in these FASTI under that year. But so it was, that the poet having received little or no notice, especially by writing, how, and with what honour his gift was received, which did much perplex him, (for tho' the diploma then passed, yet it was not sealed, much less sent to Rome) he thereupon wrote a letter to the said Dr. Compton to know the full proceeding of the matter, and what he was to trust to: whereupon that worthy person, did by his letter dated 17 Sept. 1672 tell him that 'The whole university in convocation, nemine contradicente, in answer to your noble present, but more to your worth, did vote a diploma under the university seal to confer the degree of doct. of this place upon you, and there is order taken that the best poets we have, shall endeavour to shew how much right they would do you, had they your pen. These things with the vice-chancellor's letter of thanks to you, have been all (except the verses which were lately finished) about these six months ready to send you. We expect daily from London to have some ships, &c.'

But notwithstanding all this, the letter, and diploma for his creation of doct. of physic being very slow in coming, he wrote another letter to the truly noble and generous Ralph Sheldon of Beoley esq; (with whom he had been well acquainted when at Rome, and had received of his benevolence) dated 12 Aug. 1673, which partly runs thus.—'Be pleased to consider what perplexity I am now in, attending this glory from that famous university of Oxford. For now I am setting out a new book, the second part of my verses, which I dedicate to the emperor: and had I that diploma and verses promised me, I would insert them conveniently in the Cæsarean volume, to be seen and read by the emperor's majesty, as I have put his diploma in my book of Lyricks, which I hope makes you sometime think of your humble obliged servant. The title of the book is to be this, Carminum Jacobi Albani Ghibbesii Poet. Laur. Cæs. altera Pars: exhibens, post Lyram Horatii jam vulgatam, Cathurnum & Soccum aliorum Poetarum in utraque Lingua. When this book is printed with all my honours, then will I send it away with my Lyricks to the university, and accompany it with my picture in a frame, by the hand of the late great master Pietro di Cortono for a perpetual monument of my observancy to the place.—You see now, sir, in what a posture I stand, ready to fall, unless you'll vouchsafe me with your propping hand, as you have already lent it me with all benignity before, &c. I have had lately another thwart from my lady Fortune that doth not a little trouble me. I have made an heroic poem of some thousand verses for an epithalamium upon his royal highness James duke of York his marriage with the dutchess of Inspruck, with a large comment, and you see what it is come to. I will print it for all that, and dedicate it to an eminent person. Mean time be pleased to receive this

'inclosed epigram I last made upon the valiant James duke of Monmouth under Mastricht, &c.'

But by that time Mr. Sheldon had received the said letter, the poet received his diploma and verses, which, as I conceive, were printed with his Altera Pars Carminum, &c. In the diploma he is stiled 'Natione noster, magnum plane Britanniarum suarum & ornamentum & desiderium, Europæiorum principum deliciæ,' &c. He hath written besides those things before-mention'd, these following in prose (1) Orationes & Præfationes, &c. (2) Epistolarum selectarum tres Centuriæ. (3) De Medico Libri 3, in imitation of Cicero de Oratore, &c. (4) Pinacotheca Spadia, sive Pontificum Romanorum Series; besides Miscellanies and other things, as I have been informed by those that knew the author well, who have farther told me that he was as esurient after fame as Tom. Coryate, was a very conceited man, a most compact body of vanity, so great a lover of flatteries (tho' he himself flatter'd none) that he took all whatsoever was said of him to be real, and a great lover of those that sought after, or courted him; to which I may add that he was the greatest mimic of his time, which made therefore his company acceptable among many; "stiling himself Jacobus Albanus Ghibbesius, M.D. Oxon. Romanæ Acad. prætor & Poet. Laur. Cæsar. He printed Carmina Marmoribus Arundelianis fortasse pereuniora in Promotionem ad sacram Purpuram eminentiss. & reverendissimi Principis, Philippi Thomæ Howard ex Norfolciæ Ducibus, & Comitibus Arundeliæ, &c. S. R. E. Cardinalis, decantata. Romæ 1676. qu. in three sheets, dedicated to the duke of Norfolk ex ædibus Justinianis." He was buried in the Pantheon at Rome, now called St. Maria Rotunda, dedicated to all the gods; and soon after was his bust or effigies or proportion to the middle, set over his grave with this inscription following, D. O. M. Jacobus Albanus Ghibbesius Doctor Oxoniensis, Mirum! & unâ Catholicus Poeta Laureatus Cæsareus, pontificius eloquentiæ professor emeritus. Anglus origine, natione Gallus, in Urbe omnium Patria mori, in omnium Sanctorum æde condi voluit, expectans cum eis non tam memoriæ quam vitæ perennitatem. Obiit sexto Cal. Julii An. Dom. MDCLXXVII, ætatis suæ LXVI. Benedictus Ghibbesius Hæres mœstissimus posuit.

In the month of June this year came to the university of Oxon from London, an Irish man called ANTHONY EGAN a Franciscan friar, and in the beginning of July following he was entred a student in the public library.—[195] This person had lately left the R. Catholic religion wherein he had been educated and profess'd, and under pretence of suffering for what he had done relating thereunto, came to the university more for the sake of relief than study. And after he had continued there about 4 months, in which time he obtained the charity of 60*l.* or more from several colleges and private persons, he went to Cambridge thinking to obtain there the like sum, and when that was done, to return, as 'twas commonly then reported, to his former religion. Among several things that he hath published are these (1) The Franciscan Convert, or a Recantation Sermon at St. Maudlin's in Old Fish street Lond. 6 Apr. 1673, on Luke 22, 32. Lond. 1673. qu. In the title of this sermon, he writes himself confessor general of the kingdom of Ireland, and guardian of the friary of Monasterioris in the province of Leinster, and chaplain to several persons of quality of the popish religion there. 17. HENRY SMITH of Ch. Ch. a compounder.—In the month of Feb. 1675 he was installed canon of Ch. Ch. upon the translation of Dr. Henry Compton from the see of Oxon to that of London; who while he was bishop of Oxon, held his canonry in commendam with it.

17. TIMOTHY HALTON of Queen's coll. a comp. archdeacon of Brecknock and canon of St. David's—In 1675 he became archdeacon of Oxford,⁸ on the promotion of Dr. Thom. Barlow to the see of Linc. and on the 7th of April 1677 he was elected provost of Queen's coll. which place Dr. Barlow had kept in commendam with his bishoprick two years.

July 9. OBAD. HOWE of Magd. hall—He accumulated the degrees in div.

Incorporations.

From the 5th of May, to the 14th of July, were 12 Cambridge masters of arts incorporated, whereof 9 of them were received into the bosom of this university on the said 14th of July, being the next day after Act Monday, but not one of them was afterwards a writer or bishop.

July 18. MICHAEL WARD doct. of div. of Dublin and Cambridge, was incorporated in the said degree, with liberty given him to suffragate in congreg. and convoc.—He was afterwards provost of Trinity coll. near to, and the king's professor of the univ. of Dublin, afterwards bishop of Ossory, and at length of London-Derry, in which last he was succeeded by Ezek. Hopkins, an. 1681.

Creations.

In the month of June, the Swedish ambassador with other foreigners, accompanied by some English men, coming to the university were creations made in the two faculties of arts and civil law.

Masters of Arts.

[197]

June 27. DAVID MACKLIER captain of a prefectorian company belonging to the king of Sweden.

SAM. MONSSON AGRICONIUS, secretary to the extraordinary embassy from the king of Sweden, was created the same day.

CHRISTIANUS FREDERICUS, secretary to the ambassador or envoy extraord. from the elector of Brandenburg was also created at the same time.

Doctors of Law.

June 27. The most illustrious and excellent LORD PETER SPARRE free baron in Corneberge, lord of Nynas, Peuteberg and Tulgarne, general of the army of foot belonging to the king of Sweden, governour of Elfborghen and Daal, and extraordinary ambassador to the king of Great Britain from the said king of Sweden, was with solemnity actually created doct. of the civil law.

The illustrious LORD OTTO free baron of Schwerin, counsellor of the state of the elector of Brandenburg, as also of the hall and judicial chamber, chamberlain and chieftain of the province or county of Ruppin, knight of the order of Johamites, and envoy extraordinary to the king of Great Britain from the said elector of Brandenburg, was created the same day.

Sir JOSEPH WILLIAMSON kt. master of arts and fellow of Qu. coll.—This person, who was a minister's son of the county of Cumberland, had been secretary under Sir Edw. Nicholas, and afterwards under Hen. earl of Arlington while they were principal secretaries of state, and on the 24th of Jan. 1671 he was sworn one of the clerks of the council in ordinary, and knighted. About that time he was clerk of the papers, or keeper of the Paper office at Whitehall, and a recruiter for Thetford in Norfolk, to sit in that parliament which began at Westm. 8 May 1661. Afterwards he was sent twice in the quality of a plenipotentiary, once to Holland, and another time to Cologne in Germany, and after his return, he was sworn principal secretary of state (upon the promotion of Henry earl of Arlington to be lord chamberlain of his majesty's household) and a privy counsellor, on the eleventh of Sept. 1674. Both which offices he keeping till Feb. 1678, did, on the 9th of the same month, resign the seals of his secretaryship into the hands of his majesty, who forthwith giving them to Rob. earl of Sunderland, he was sworn the next day secretary and privy counsellor. This sir Jos. Williamson (who was then president of the Royal Society) hath been a great benefactor to his coll. and may be greater hereafter, if he think fit.

The illustrious lord IGNATIUS VITUS baron of Vicque, a colonel of a regiment of horse under his catholic majesty in Flanders, was created the same day, June 27.—One Ignatius Vitus alias White, second son of sir Dominick White of Limerick in Ireland, was created a baronet on the 29th of June 1677, and, for want of issue male, that title was to descend to his nephew Ignatius Maximilian Vitus, and to the heirs male of his body. This sir Ignatius White, is the same, as I conceive, with him that was baron of Vicque, "and created marquiss of Abbeville by king James II."

D. CAR. GABR. DE LA SALLE eq. groom of the chamber to the king of Sweden, was also then created.

In a convocation held 30 of May this year, were the chancellor's letters read in behalf of SAM. SPEED formerly a student, now canon, of Ch. Ch. to have the degree of doct. of div. confer'd on him; but whether he was created or admitted, notwithstanding he had formerly suffer'd for his loyalty, it appears not. On the sixth of the said month of May, this year, he was installed canon of Ch. Ch. in the place of Dr. Seb. Smith deceased, and dying at Godalming in Surrey,⁹ of which he was vicar, about the 22d of January 1681, Henry Aldrich M. A. and student of Ch. Ch. was installed canon in his place, on the 15th of Febr. following. One Sam. Speed a pretender to poetry, hath written Prison-Piety: or Meditations divine and moral, &c. Lond. 1677. in tw. and other trivial things, but he is not to be understood to be the same with the former.

In the month of January this year, came to this university, J. SEOBALDUS FABRICIUS an old professor of Heidelberg, born at Spires, who was forced to leave his country because of the wars between the emperor and the king of France. He lived for some time here in a studious condition, had a collection of monies made throughout the university to relieve his wants: And while he continued among us, he published De Unitate Eccles. Britannicæ Meditationes Sacrae. Oxon. 1676, oct. and wrote and drew up another book entit. "C. Julii Caesaris Ortum, Dignitates &c. complexa," Dissertatio Historica Dionis Cassii Scriptoris Græc. Selectiora Comata, &c. Lond. 1678. oct.

Nov. 23. JAM. PARKINSON of Linc. coll.

Jan. 29. JOH. MASSEY or MEASEY of Mert. coll.—This person, who was originally of Univ. coll. was one of the proctors of the university in 1684, and then, and after, did not look for or expect preferment. At length, after king James II. came to the crown, he was, by the endeavours of Mr. Obad. Walker master of Univ. coll. advanced by his majesty (on the death of Dr. Fell) to the deanery of Ch. Ch. in Oxon, about the middle of Octob. 1686. Whereupon renouncing his religion for that of Rome (which he was so to do, before he could be settled in it) he received the patent for it on his bended knees from his majesty on the 19th of Decemb. and on the 29th of the same month 1686 he was installed in that dignity in his own person. Afterwards he set up and furnished a chappel for the Roman Cath. use in Canterbury quadrangle within the precincts of Ch. Ch. and was put into the commission of peace for the county of Oxford. At length upon the arrival of the prince of Orange in the West parts of England, and the committing thereupon by the mobile great outrages in several parts of the nation on Roman Catholics and their houses, the said Mr. Massey did, to avoid them, (together with Mr. Thom. Deane, a R. C. fellow of Univ. coll.) withdraw himself privately, before break of day, on the 30th of Nov. 1688, went to London, and there continued privately till an opportunity carried him over the sea to France, where, I think, we may now leave him.

Doctors of Divinity.

July 6. LANCELOT ADDISON of Qu. coll.
 8. JOHN NICHOLAS of New coll.
 The last, who was a compounder, was now warden of his coll. to which he was elected (on the death of Dr. Mich. Woodward) 30 of June 1675, being then fellow of Wykeham's coll. near Winchester, and master of St. Nich. hospital in Salisbury. On the 17th of July 1679, he was elected warden of the said coll. of Wykeham, on the death of Dr. Will. Burt, and on the second of Apr. 1684, he was installed preb. of Winchester.⁴

Incorporations.

On the 13th of July, just after the finishing of the act, were seven batch. of arts, one batch. of law, 24 mast. of arts, one batch. of div. and one doct. of physic of Cambridge incorporated, but not one of them can I yet find to be a writer, only,

JOH. TURNER M. A. and fellow of Christ's coll. who was afterwards hospitaller of St. Thomas in Southwark, and author of several sermons and discourses; which being too many to be here set down, shall for brevity's sake be omitted.

THOMAS ALLEN doct. of physic of Gonvill and Caius coll. was also then (July 13.) incorporated—He was one of the coll. of phys. at London, and lived to the year 1685, but hath written nothing. Quære.

Besides the said Cambridge men, was one JOHN OUCHTERLON M. A. of St. Salvator's coll. in the university of St. Andrew's in Scotland incorporated, which is all I know of him.

Creations.

June 2. The most illustrious prince JOHN WILLIAM PRINCE OF NEWBURG (son of the duke of Newburg) count palatin of the Rhine, duke of Bavaria, Giuliers, Cleve, and of Mons, count or earl of Valdentia, Spinheim la Mark, Ravensberg and Moërs, lord in Ravenstein, &c. was actually created doctor of the civil law—He was conducted bare-headed in his doctor's robes, from the apodyterium into the convocation house; with the beadles marching before, and the king's professor of law with him, the vicechanc. then, with the doctors and masters standing bare: And being come to the middle of the area, the said professor presented him with a short speech, which being done, the vicech. created him with another. Afterwards he was conducted to his seat of state on the right hand of the vicechancellor, and then the dep. orator, who stood on the other side near to the registry's desk, complemented him with another speech in the name of the university. All which being done, he was conducted by the vicechancellor, doctors, and masters to the Theatre, where being placed in another seat of state on the right hand of the vicechancellor's chair, he was entertained by the music professor with vocal and instrumental music, from the music gallery. This prince was then about 18 years of age, and had taken a journey into England, purposely to pay his respects to the lady Mary, the eldest daughter of James duke of York: And after he had seen most of the rarities in the public library, several of the colleges, physic garden, &c. the vicechancellor Dr. Bathurst, Dr. Fell, and other doctors, made a present to him at his departure of Hist. & Antiquitates Univ. Oxon. with cuts, in two volumes, very fairly bound.

June 23. HENRY JUSTELL secret. and counsellor to the most Christian king, was diplomated doctor of the civil law.—He was a most noted and learned man, and as the public regist. saith non modo omni scientiarum & virtutum genere per se excelluit, verum etiam parentis optimi & eruditissimi Christop. Justelli doctrinam & merita, ornando atque excolendo, sua fecit. He had given several choice MSS. to the public library, and had sent by Mr. George Hicks of Linc. coll. (who became acquainted with him at Paris) the original MS. in Greek⁵ of the Canones Ecclesiæ Universalis, put out by his father Christopher, which is at this time in the public library. What this eminent author Hen. Justell hath written and published the printed cat. belonging to that library, commonly called Oxford Catalogue, will tell you.

Nov. 10. { THADDEUS LANTMAN } diplomated doct. of div.
 { JOH. WOOLNOVE }

These two persons were ministers at the Hague, and having been represented by the prince of Orange to be persons of good esteem in Holland, for their preaching, learning and prudence, and for the great veneration they had, and have, for the church of England, were upon those accounts recommended to the chanc. of the university, and by Henry earl of Arlington (lately in Holland) to the vicechanc. and convocation for their degrees.

Jan. 26. HIPPOLYTUS DU CHASTLET DE LUZANCY of Ch. Ch. was actually created master of arts.—This divine, who made a great noise in his time, was the son⁶ of a famous common woman named Beauchasteau a player belonging to the Hostel de Burgoyne at Paris, and educated in the university there, as I shall tell you by and by. Afterwards he became⁷ usher, or regent of the fifth form among the fathers of the Christian doctrine at Vitry, then lived among the monks at Vendosme, and a little after in the service of a bishop, then in the abby of Trape, next with another prelate, and at length a preacher errant, here and there, but chiefly at Montdidier in Picardy, where counterfeiting the name of Luzancy, by a bill signed with that name, he cheated the damoizele Cartier of a piece of money. So that by that and other pranks, which expos'd him to the pursuit of justice, he left France, went into England by the⁸ name of De la Marche (which he quitted about a month after his arrival) and at length to London without⁹ clothes, without shooes, without money, and without any recommendation from France. Soon after upon his own word, and at the instance of some who solicited in his behalf, he was permitted to get into the pulpit at the Savoy within the liberty of Westminster, not only to declare the motives of his conversion, but his abjuration from, and abhorrency of the Roman Catholic faith, which was solemnly done on the eleventh of July an. 1675. The discourse he made, and which he delivered with much boldness, gained him the esteem of his auditors, who for the most part charm'd with his eloquence, and full of compassion for his misery, soon cast about to put him into a condition of appearing in a decent habit and subsisting. After this he was much favoured by some, and as much hated by the Roman Catholics, particularly by St. Germaine a Jesuit in London, who pretending to assassinate him, as Luzancy gave out, was a proclamation issued forth for his protection, and the taking of S. Germaine to bring him to condign punishment. After this, Luzancy's advancement being powerfully carried on, the bishop of London took care to have him ordained, with a design of putting him in a condition of becoming one day a great defender of the church of England: All which being done in a hurry, 'twas to little purpose for the pastors and several masters of families of the church at the Savoy to cry out against. But while these things were in doing, a minister of the church of England belonging to the French church at the Savoy named Rich. du Marescq, full of zeal to the truth, printed a sermon which he had preached during these bustles, and in the preface to it doth give a true and just character of Luzancy, not for his goodness, but baseness, lying, dissimulation, &c. Which sermon and pref. as soon as they appeared in public, the bishop of London caused all the copies to be seized, and the author cited to the bish. court, interdicted the function of his charge, because he refused to ask God forgiveness, his neighbour, the church, his superior, and to sign and seal a declaration, and at length openly suspended him for reasons reserved to the bishop and his officers. After he had continued in that condition for some time, he was at the intreaties of Dr. Jo. Durell, and monsieur Ruvigny (who had a mind to oblige the bishop) restored to the exercise of his charge upon a bare acknowledgment that he was in the wrong to print his preface without license from his superior, or any else in authority, &c. After the following Christmas, our author Luzancy went to Oxford; where, by virtue of several letters of commendation, he was received into Ch. Ch. by the dean there, had a chamber allowed to him, and such diet that belongs to master-students, at the charge, I think, of the bishop of London. On the 26th of Jan. following, there was a convocation of doctors and masters celebrated, wherein the letters of the duke of Ormond chanc. of the university (dat. 2 Dec.) were publicly read in his behalf, which partly run thus.—' This gentleman ' monsieur Luzancy was bred in the university of Paris in ' the Romish religion, but having lately professed himself a ' member of the church of England, and given some testi- ' monies of his adherence thereunto, has made it his humble ' request for his encouragement, to be recommended to the ' university for their favour in conferring upon him the ' degree of master of arts.—He has not his testimonials ' from the university of Paris of the degree he took there, ' but I doubt not, when you shall discourse with him, you'll ' find him a person meriting that favour,' &c. After the reading of that letter, Luzancy by the consent of the house was then actually created M. A. as I have before told you. About the time of Easter, in the beginning of Apr. 1676, was spread abroad by certain R. Catholics a pamphlet entit. A Letter from a Gentleman at Lond. to his Friend in the Country, &c. Printed at Lond. in two sheets and an half in qu. wherein are some of Luzancy's actions represented while he was in France, but more while he was in England, the bishop of London and Dr. Franc. Durant de Brevall preb. of Westm. and Rochester, (sometimes a Capuchin fryar) reflected on severely, and many things said, which doth invalidate the king's proclamation before-mentioned. At length some of the dispersers of that pamphlet being discover'd, particularly Will. Rogers of Linc. inn, a zealous proselyte for the Roman Cath. cause, he was seized on by a messenger and brought before the king's council in Aug. following; from whom receiving several checks and threatnings was at length released. In the latter end of 1679, Luzancy left the university, having before borrowed a considerable sum of money of one of the chapl. of Ch. Ch. (P. B.) for whom he pretended kindness, but minding not the payment of it, he was sued for it by law. At the same time he became, by the favour of the bishop of London, vicar of Dover-Court in Essex,¹ to the church of which place the town of Harwich belongs; so that he was vicar of that also, as well as of Dover-Court. Soon after, to prevent an unchast life, he married a gentlewoman in those parts, where he was lately (perhaps still) living.² He hath written and pub. JUSTUS CHRISTOP. SCHOMERUS, and M. MENO REICH, both of Lubec in Saxony, were sojourners and students this year in the university, and afterwards learned men in their own country. The first, who was professor and superintendent at Lubeck, wrote one or more books against the Socinians and other things. Besides them were also sojourners PAUL BAULDAEY a Frenchman of note, and JOH. WANDALINUS of Copenhagen in Denmark, both learned men: the first of which hath written notes on Lactantius de Morte Persecutorum, &c.; and the other (who was afterwards professor of div. nt Copenhagen) De Esu Sanguinis, &c.

These were both compounders, as being dignified in the church. On the 20th of Sept. 1660, the first was installed preb. of Worcester, and on the 15th of Apr. 1661, archdeacon of Norfolk on the death of Philip Tenison: which last dignity was confer'd upon him by his father Dr. Edw. Reyn. bish. of Norwich. The other was preb. of Norwich, and had some other preferment in the church.

July 6. { GEORGE OWEN of All-s. coll.
 { THO. PARGITER of Linc. coll.

The first of these two, who was originally of Mert. coll. was now canon of St. Davids, and afterward archd. of Carmarthen. The other was rector of Greetworth in his native country of Northamptonshire, and published A Sermon preached before the Lord Mayor of Lond. 23 July 1682; on 1 Thess. 4. 6. Lond. 1682. qu.

July 6. WILL. HOWELL, or as he writes himself Hoëlus, doct. of the civil law of Cambridge.³—He was educated in Magd. coll. in the said university, of which he was fellow, was afterwards tutor to John earl of Mulgrave, and at length chancellor of the diocese of Lincoln. He hath written (1) An Institution of general History from the Beginning of the World to the Monarchy of Constantine the Great. Printed 1661. oct. In this work the reader may, without any intervening matters impertinent to his present purpose, read the history of any empire or kingdom contemporary to it, by it self. The principal passages in all of them are linked together by synchronisms, not only placed in the margin, but in the beginning or end of every occurrence. This book, which was afterwards put into Latin by the author, for the use of the said earl, entit. Elementa Historiæ ab Orbe condito usque ad Monarchiam Constantini magni, &c. Lond. 1671. in a thick tw. was increased to two folio's.—Lond. 1680. and afterwards had three remaining parts of it published in 1685-6. (2) Medulla Historiæ Anglicanæ. Being a comprehensive History of the Lives and Reigns of the Monarchs of England. From the Time of the Invasion thereof by Julius Cæsar, to the Death of King Ch. II. with an Abstract of the Lives of the Roman Emperors commanding in Britain. There have been several editions of this book to the great benefit of the bookseller that printed it. One came out in 1679, with the addition of A List of the Names of the H. of Com. then sitting, and a List of his Majesty's Privy Council, &c. And in 1687 the third edit. of it was published in oct. with a continuation from the year 1678, to 1684, by a great favourer of the Roman Catholics. There is no name set to this Medulla Hist. Angl. only report makes Dr. W. Howell the author, and upon that report, I presume here to set it down under his name. He hath without doubt other things extant, but such I have not yet seen, and therefore I can only now say that he died in the beginning of the year 1683. One Will. Howell minister of Tuttleworth in Sussex hath published A Sermon at the Bishop of Chichester's first Visitation. Lond. 1675-6. qu. but whether he was of this, or of the university of Cambridge, I cannot yet tell.

This year were 28 masters of arts of Cambridge incorporated after the act, on the 11th of July, among whom were, THOMAS LYNFORD of Christ's coll.⁴—He had been lately the ingenious prevaricator of Cambridge, was afterwards rector of St. Edm. Lombard-street in London, D. D. chaplain in ordinary to their majesties king Will. III. and queen Mary, &c. author of three or more sermons, and of four discourses against popery in the time of king James 2. &c.

As for the rest that were then incorporated, I cannot yet find one of them to be a writer or bishop.

SIM. DIGBY M. A. of Trin. coll. near Dublin was incorporated the same day, Jul. 11.—He was son of Essex Digby bishop of Dromore. See in the creations under the year 1677. Besides these, were two batch. of div. of Cambr. incorporated, but neither of them was then or afterwards a writer, or afterwards a bishop.

Creations.

Apr. 5. STEPH. LE MOINE one of the ordinary preachers to the reformed congregation of Roan in Normandy, lately advanced by the prince of Orange to the supream chair of the theological faculty in the university of Leyden, was declared in convocation doct. of div. by virtue of the letters of the chancellor of the university, and on the eleventh of the same month he was diplomated, being then in the university, and well known to be one who had upon all occasions testified his great affections and zeal for the church of England. He hath written some things, which I have not yet seen.

JUN. 22. ANDREW SALL lately a Jesuit, was actually created D. D.—He was born in the county of Tipperary in Ireland, educated from his childhood in the Roman faith; and when he was in his riper years, he entred into the society of Jesus. Afterwards he became professor of divinity in the colleges of Pampelona, Polencia, and Tudela in Spain, rector and professor of controversies in the Irish college of the university of Salamanca, professor of moral theology in the college of the society of Jesus in the same university. At length he being sent on the mission into Ireland, he was in his elder years, by the unspeakable constancy and indefatigable charity, as also solid doctrine and example of the pious and upright life of Dr. Tho. Price archbishop of Cashels or Cashels gained to the church of England. In testimony of which he made a public declaration on the 17th of May 1674, before the said archb. Hugh bishop of Waterford, and others, in the church of St. John in the city of Cashel. On the 5th of Jul. following he preached a sermon in Ch. Ch. in Dublin before Arthur earl of Essex lord lieutenant of Ireland and the council there, in detestation of the church of Rome and its doctrine, and about the same time he became chaplain to the said lord lieutenant and had preferment there bestowed on him.⁵ In the latter end of July or thereabouts, an. 1675, he came to Oxon, and, by letters of commendation, was not only received into Wadh. coll. where he continued for some months, but afterwards actually created (not incorporated) D. D. as before I have told you, and in the act following (as in that in 1677) he shewed himself a smart disputant in the theological vespers, being then domestic chaplain to his majesty and dignified in Wales: After he had remained in the said coll. and in an house in Halywell adjoining, for some time, in a weak and sickly condition, he, by the favour of Dr. Fell, removed to convenient lodgings in the cloyster at Ch. Ch. near the chaplain's quadrangle, where he remained about two years. In 1680 he went into Ireland to live upon his preferments there, which were a prebendary of Swords, the rectory of Ard Mulchan, and the chauntorship of Cashels, where he continued in a weak condition till the time of his death. He hath written and published (1) "A Recantation made in St. John's Church Cashell in Ireland, Load. 1674, in one sheet "qu. (2) "Declaration for the Church of England. (3) "Sermon preached at Ch. Ch. in Dubl. before the Lord Lieutenant and Council 5 Jul. 1674; on Matth. 21. 15, 16, 17, 18. Dubl. 1674-5. oct. After these two things were published, came out The doleful Fall of Andrew Sall, a Jesuit of the fourth Vow, printed in oct. 1674, and The un-erring and un-errable Church, in Answer to the said Sermon, "preached by Mr. Andrew Sall, formerly a Jesuit, &c. priated (be- "yond sea") 1675, oct. Dedicated to Arthur earl of Essex lord lieutenant of Ireland, &c. (4) *The Catholic and Apostolic Faith, maintained in the Church of England: being a Reply to several Books published under the Names of J. E. N. N. and J. He paid his last debt to nature on the sixth day of Apr. an. 1682, aged 70 years or thereabouts, and was buried in the cathedral church of St. Patrick near Dublin; leaving then behind him A Body of Philosophy, which he designed, if he had lived, to publish.

July 11. ROB. DIGBY baron of Genshill in Ireland, lately of Magd. coll. now of Coleshill in Warwickshire, was actually created M. A.

The reader may be pleased now to know that whereas FRANCIS JUNIUS had spent much time in Oxon in his younger years for the sake of study, libraries and conversation of learned men, as also in his elderly years in 1658 and 59; he did retire to Oxon in the month of Oct. this year, purposely to dye there, give his MSS. and collections to the public library where he had spent much time, and to have his bones laid in some church or chappel in Oxon. He came for the sake of Dr. Thom. Marshall rector of Linc. coll. a great critic in the Gothic and Saxon languages, as [204] Junius was, from whom Marshall had formerly received instruction as to those studies, and taking up his lodgings against the said coll. he began to put his collections in order; but being troubled by often visits, he removed his quarters to an obscure house in Beef-hall-lane in St. Ebbes parish, where he digested some notes for the press, and made a deed of gift of his MSS. and collections to the public library. He continued there till Aug. 1677, at which time he went, upon the earnest invitation of his nephew Dr. Is. Vossius, to Windsor, and continued for a time in good health and cheerfulness there and near it. At length being overtaken with a fever, died of it in his said nephew's house near Windsor, on Monday the 19th of Nov. 1677; whereupon his body was conveyed to Windsor and buried in the chappel or church of St. George within the castle there. In the year following was a table of white marble fixed to the wall near his grave, with this inscription thereon. M. S. Francisco Junio, Francisci Junii Biturigis filio, nobilitate generis, integritate morum & omnigenâ doctrinâ conspicuo viro; nato Heidelbergæ anno salutis MDLXXXIX, qui per omniem ætatem, sine quærelâ aut injuriâ cujusquam Musis tantum & sibi vacavit. Universitas Oxoniensis, cui scripta & monumenta laboris sui moriens pene nonagearius commisit, in grati animi significationem lubens meritoque titulum posuit, an. MDCLXXVIII. The titles of some of the books that he published you may see in the Bodleian or Oxford Catalogue. Konigius saith that Junius condidit tres libros De Picturâ Veterum, an. 1637. Item duas versiones Evangeliorum per antiquas, Gothicam & Angl. &c. an. 1635. una cum Glossario Gothico edi curavit.

To this learned person I must add another of less name (much noted in his time, but since not, for the art and faculty of poetry) who had spent about eight years in Oxon, partly in custody, but mostly in liberty and freedom in the public library, and conversation with ingenious scholars. The anagram of his surname is Benevolus, given to him by flatterers and pretenders to poetry for his benevolence to them. His Christian name was EDWARD BENDLOWES son and heir of Andrew Bendlowes esq; son of Will. Bendlowes esq;⁷ son and heir of Andrew Bendlowes, serjeant at law. &c. all lords of Brent Hall and of other lands in Essex, but descended from those of their name of Benilowes in Yorkshire. When he was young he was very carefully educated in grammar learning, and when at about 16 years of age he became a gentleman commoner of St. Joh. college in Cambridge, to which he was afterwards a benefactor.⁸ Thence he was sent to travel with a tutor or guide, and having rambled through several countries and visited seven courts of princes, he returned a most accomplished person as to behaviour and discourse, yet tinged with romanism: but being a very imprudent man in matters of worldly concern, and ignorant as to the value or want of money, he did, after he was invested in his estate at Brent hall and elsewhere, which amounted to seven hundred, some say a thousand, pounds per an. make a shift, though never married, to squander it mostly away on poets, flatterers, (which he loved) in buying of curiosities (which some called baubles) on musicians, buffoons, &c. He also gave from his said estate a large portion with a niece "named Philippa," who was married to one Blount of Maple-durham in Oxfordshire esq; supposing thereby that so long as they lived he should not want, but the case being otherwise, he lived afterwards in a mean condition. He also very imprudently entred himself into bonds for the payment of other men's debts; which he being not able to do, he was committed to prison in Oxford, which was the matter that first brought him thither; but being soon after released, he spent the remainder of his days there in studies, till the time of his death. This person, who was esteemed in his younger days a great patron of poets, especially of Franc. Quarles, Will. D'avenant, Payne Fisher, &c. who had either dedicated books, or had written epigrams and poems on him, hath several things (whereby he hath obtained the name of a divine author) extant; among which are these (1) Sphinx Theologica, seu Musica

A divine Poem*, Lond. 1652, fol. with his picture before it. Several parts thereof had ayres set to them, or were fitted for ayres by the incomparable musician John Jenkyns, who had been favoured much and patronized by Benevolus. A whole canto of this Theophila, consisting of above 300 verses, was turned into elegant Latin verse in the space of one day by that great prodigy of early parts John Hall of Durham (mentioned in the second volume) having had his tender affections ravished with that divine piece. (4) Summary of divine Wisdom, Lond. 1657, qu. (5) "A Glance at the Glories of sacred Friendship, Lond. 1657, printed "on one side of a large sheet of paper. (6) "De sacra Amicitia. Printed with the former in Latin verse and prose. (7) Threnothriambeuticon. Or Latin Poems on King Ch. II. his Restoration, Lond. 1660, printed on a side of a large sheet of paper. Some he caused to be printed on white sattin, a copy of which, in a frame suitable to it, he gave to the public library at Oxon. (8) Oxonii Encomium, Ox. 1672, in 4 sheets in fol. It is mostly in Latin verse. (9) Oxonii Elogia, Oxon, 1673, on one side of a large sheet of paper. They consist of 12 stanzas, and afterwards follow 1. Oxonii Elegia. 2. Academicis Serenitas. 3. Academ. Temperantia. 4. Studiosis Cautela, and other things. (10) Magia Caelestis, Oxon, 1673. 'Tis a Latin poem printed on one side of a large sheet of paper. These three last, under the 8th 9th and 10th heads, were, with other things, composed at Oxon, while he was conversant there. (11) "Echo Veridica Joco seria, Oxon. 1673, printed on one side of a "long sheet of paper—"Tis a large Latin poem mostly "against the pope, papists, Jesuits, &c." He hath also a Mantissa to Rich. Fenn's Panegyricon inaugurale, entit. De celeberrima & florentiss. Trinobantiados Augusta Civ. Pratori Reg. Senatui Populoq; Lond. 1637, qu. In the title of which Mr. Bendl. stiles himself 'turmæ equestris in com. Essex præfectus.' (12) "Truth's Touchstone, printed on one side "of a long sheet of paper written in 100 distichs, ded. to his "niece Mrs. Philippa Blount. (13) Annotations for the "better confirming the several Truths in the said Poem.—" 'Tis not mentioned when this poem and annotations were "printed." He hath other things extant, which I have not yet seen, and therefore I shall only tell you, that after he had been courted and admired for his antient extraction, education and parts by great men of this nation, and had been a patron to several ingenious men in their necessities, and by his generous mind, void of a prudential foresight, had spent a very fair estate without keeping little or any thing to support him, did spend his last days at Oxon, but little better than in obscure condition: in which, for want of conveniencies required fit for old age, as clothes, fewel, and warm things to refresh the body, he marched off in a cold season, on the 18th of Dec. at eight of the clock at night, an. 1676, aged 73 years or more: whereupon, by a collection of money among certain scholars, who knew what he had been, he was decently buried with escutcheons in the north isle or alley joyning to the body of St. Mary's church in Oxon, near to the door that leads thence into Adam Broms's chapel. In his younger years he was esteemed a papist, or at least popishly affected; but being drawn off from that opinion in his elderly years, he would take occasion oftentimes to dispute against papists and their opinions, (which was not at all acceptable to his nephew and niece Blount before-mentioned, which was the cause that his room, rather than company, was desired by them) and could not endure any person that seemed to favour the opinions of Arminius or Socinus. His picture now hangs in the gallery belonging to the public library at Oxon.

This year one JOHN WULFERUS of Nuremberg became a sojourner in Oxon for the sake of the public library, went to his own country, became a professor, and published Secalin and other Talmudical authors in Hebrew and Latin.

An account of this book is in the Philosophical Transactions, numb. 124. p. 596. wherein though the author of them Mr. Oldenburg doth stile Mr. Sams the learned and curious undertaker of that great work, yet the common report then was, that not he, but his quondam uncle was the author; and to confirm it, was his great ignorance in matters and books of antiquity. I was several times in his company when he spent some weeks this year in Oxon, and found him to be an impertinent, grining and pedantical coxcomb, and so ignorant of authors, that he never heard before I mentioned it to him, of the great antiquary John Leland, or of his printed or manuscript works, nor any thing of Baleus, nor could he give any account of authors that are quoted in the said Britannia antiqua illustrata, &c. He died in the year 1679 or thereabouts, perhaps in the Inner Temple where he had a chamber, but where buried I know not, nor is it material to be informed. I find one Rob. Aylett mast. of arts of Cambr. to be incorporated at Oxon, an. 1608. Quære whether he was his uncle.

Creations.

The most noble JAMES DUKE OF ORMOND chancellor of the university coming to Oxon in the beginning of Aug. this year, where he was splendidly entertained by the academians with treats in several colleges and speeches in the Theatre, it was his desire that there should be a creation of doctors of the civil law, and a creation of two persons in divinity. Those that were created in the former faculty, which was on the sixth day of Aug. in the Theatre, were these,

Doctors of Law.

RICHARD BOTELER earl of Arran in Ireland, and baron Boteler of Weston in Huntingdonshire in England, second son of James duke of Ormond.—This noble and courageous person, who had done good service against the rebels at Carickfergus in Ireland, and in that perilous sea-fight against the Dutch, when James duke of York was general at sea (for which and other services he was made baron of Weston,) died on the 26th of Jan. 1685. Whereupon his body was deposited in the same vault in the abby church at Westminster, where that of his elder brother Thomas earl of Ossory, and their mother Elizab. dutchess of Ormond had been laid: which dutchess died in her house in St. James's square within the liberty of Westminster, on the 21st of July 1684. But whether their bodies were afterwards removed to Kilkenny in Ireland, there to be deposited in the vault among the bodies of the Ormondian family, I know not as yet. [208]

PIERCE BOTELER viscount Galmoy in Ireland of the Ormondian family.

FRANCIS AUNGIER viscount, afterwards earl, of Longford in the same kingdom.

Sir THOM. ERSKOTT knt.

Sir JAMES BOTELER knt.—He was natural son of James duke of Ormond, by Isabel daughter of Henry earl of Holland, and wife of sir James Thynne of Langleate in Wiltshire. This person, who was bred up to the common law in Linc. inn, succeeded Will. lord Brouncker in the mastership of St. Katharine's hospital near the Tower of London, &c. "Pain Fisher in his del. of the epitaph of Tho. earl of Ossory to his kinsman sir James Butler, entitles the said sir James thus, 1680, 81. Sir James Butler of Linc. inn knt. a bencher, lately a read. there, à sanctiori consilio regis Car. 2. ad leges consultus—pro hospitio regis antiquissimæ curiæ marischalliæ diu senescallus—Curia dom. regis pro palatio suo Westmonast. judex; omnium regis forrestarum, vivariorum, saltuumque citra Trentum deputatus justiciarius, attorney general to queen Katharine, justice of the peace for Middlesex and Surry, alterique pro-prefecto; recorder of Tavistock in Devonsh."

Sir EDW. SCOTT knt.

Sir ROB. SOUTHWELL knt.—This most worthy and accomplished person, who was son of Rob. Southwell of Kingsale in the county of Cork in Ireland esq; vice-admiral of Munster and of the privy council there, (descended from the antient family of his name in Norfolk) was born in Kingsale, educated in Queen's coll. in this university (where he was batch. of arts) and afterwards became a barrister of Linc. inn. On the 27th of Sept. 1664 he was sworn one of the clerks of his majesty's privy council, on the 20th of Nov. 1665 he received the honour of knighthood from his majesty, being then accounted a gentleman of known worth and abilities, and fitted every way for the service of his majesty, who then thought good to give him the character of his envoy-extraordinary to the king of Portugal, whither he was to go in few days after. In the latter end of Oct. 1671 he was sent envoy-extraordinary to count de Monterey governor or vice-roy for his catholic maj. of the Spanish Netherlands; "was a recruiter in the parliament that began 1661, for Penryn in Cornwall before 1673,"⁴ and in the beginning of Dec. 1679 (the presbyterians and fanatics being then rampant upon the account of the popish plot) he resigned his clerkship of the council. In Feb. following he was sent envoy-extraordinary to the elector of Brandenburg, and after his return was much respected for the services he had done for the crown. Afterwards he was one of the commissioners of the customs for England, secretary of state for Ireland, and one of the privy council for that realm; and in the latter end of Nov. 1691 he was chosen president of the Royal Society, in the room of Dr. Walt. Charlton, having been fellow thereof several years before, &c. He hath a very hopeful son named Edward Southwell lately a gentleman commoner of Mert. coll. who hath translated into English An Account of Virtue: or, Dr. Hen. More's Abridgment of Morals, Lond. 1690, oct. It is done so well, and the style is so masculine and noble, that I know not as yet any book written in better English.

JOHN FITZ-PATRICK

EDW. VERNON of N. Aston in Oxfordsh. } colonels.

GARRET MOORE

THOM. FAIRFAX, a major.

GUSTAVUS HAMILTON, a capt. &c.

And among the gentlemen that were created, was JAMES THYNNE of Buckland in Gloucestershire, son of Sir Hen. Frederick Thynne of Kempsford in the said county bart. which James was younger brother to Thom. visc. Weymouth, and elder to Hen. Frederick Thynne keeper of his majesty's library at St. James's, in the place of Thom: Rosse deceased, and afterwards treasurer and receiver-general to Katharine the qu. dowager.

Doctors of Divinity.

Dec. 12. WILL. MORETON of Ch. Ch. domestic chaplain to James duke of Ormond was then declared D. D. and on the 29th of Jan. following was diplomated.—He was afterwards bishop of Kildare.

SIM. DIGBY another domestic chaplain to the said duke, was declared D. D. the same day, and afterwards diplomated with Moreton.

The said two doctors were nominated by the chancellor of the university, who then thought it not fit to have them created when he was in Oxon, least a gap thereby should be made for others. As for Dr. Digby (son of Essex Digby bishop of Dromore) who had been incorp. M. A. in 1676, he became bish. of Limerick an. 1681, where sitting till 1690, was, in Dec. the same year, nominated by his majesty king Will. III. bish. of Elphine, to which soon after he was translated.

This year was a sojourner in Oxon for the sake of the public library THEOD. DASSOVIVS of Hamburgh, who was afterwards professor of poetry and of the Hebrew tongue in the univ. of Wittemberg and a publisher of certain Talmudical matters. "One is Eccussio Sententiarum Rabbiorum de Resurrectione Mortuorum."

Chancellor.

JAMES DUKE OF ORMOND.

Vice-chancellor.

Dr. NICHOLAS warden of New coll. nominated by the delegated power of the chancellor, confirmed by convocation and thereupon re-admitted 26 Aug. He continued in his office till after he was elected warden of Wykeham's coll. near Winchester, (an account of which I have given you among the D. of D. an. 1675) otherwise, 'tis very probable, he would have served a third year, rather than be out of authority, which he loved.

Proctors.

Apr. 10. { JAMES HULET of Ch. Ch.

Batchelors of Arts.

May 2. JO. HAMMATT of St. Edm. hall.—This batch, who was the son of a father of both his names of Taunton in Somersetshire, became afterwards the snivling, non-conforming, conforming vicar of Stanton-Bury in Bucks, and author of A burning and a shining Light, Sermon preached at the Funeral of the late reverend Mr. James Wrexham Minister of Haversham in Bucks; on Joh. 5. 35. Lond. 1685, qu. In the title of this sermon (a pitiful, canting and silly discourse) the author entitles himself M. A. which degree, I presume (if he speaks truth) was taken at Cambridge, for I am sure he did not take it here.

Jun. 25. THOM. SAWYER of Magd. coll.

Oct. 15. THOM. BENT of Line. coll.

Of the first of these two you may see among the Masters 1680, and of the other among those in 1681.

Admitted 212.

Batchelors of Law.

Five were admitted this year, but not one of them is a writer.

Masters of Arts.

May 12. GEORGE ROYSE of Or. coll.

Jun. 4. THOM. TULLY of St. Edm. hall.—He was afterwards chaplain to Dr. Edw. Rainbow bish. of Carlisle, chancellor of the diocese of Carlisle in the place of Rowl. Nicols batch. of div. and author of A Sermon preached at the Funeral of Dr. Edw. Rainbow late Bishop of Carlisle; on Rev. 14. 13. Lond. 1688, oct. It is added to the life of the said bishop, written, by another person, as I have told you among the bishops in Edw. Rainbow.

Jul. 1. GEORGE TULLY of Qu. coll.

Oct. 15. JOH. BAGLEY of Bal. coll.

The last of these two did afterwards take the degree of D. of phys. at Utrecht, and published his theses after he had taken it, entit. Disputatio medica inauguralis, continens Considerationes quasdam Theoretico-practicas circa Factum Humanum, &c. 27 Jul. 1682, Ultr. 1682, qu.

Oct. 17. THOM. PIGOTT of Wadh. coll.—This person, who was son of Hen. Pigott mentioned among the created batch. of div. in these FASTI; an. 1660, was born at Brindle in Lancashire, became vicar of Yarnton near Oxon, 1679, which he kept with his fellowship of Wadh. coll. and afterwards chaplain to James earl of Ossory. He hath written, An Account of the Earthquake that hapned at Oxford, and the Parts adjacent, 17 Sept. 1683. Printed in one sheet and a half in the Philosophical Transactions, numb. 151. He also made a new discovery or certain phænomenas in music; an account of which was drawn up in a letter by Dr. Wallis dat. Mar. 14. an. 1676, which was remitted into the said Phil. Trans. numb. 134. p. 839. But before that time, viz. an. 1673, the very same discovery was made by Will. Noble M. A. of Mert. coll. very well skill'd in the practic part of music, far beyond Pigott, which he keeping to himself, only imparting it to one or more friends, Pigott being a more forward and mercurial man got the glory of it among most scholars. See in Dr. Wallis his letter before-mentioned, and in Dr. R. Plot's book entit. The natural History of Oxfordshire, cap. 9. par. 199, 200. Mr. Pigott died in the earl of Ossory's house in St. James's square, within the liberty of Westm. on the 14th of Aug. 1686, being then fellow of the Royal Society, and was buried in the chancel of the new church of St. James's near the said square. As for Mr. Noble, who had proceeded in arts 1673, he died in Ch. Ch. on the 4th of Sept. 1681, being then one of the chapl. of that house, and was buried in the cathedral there.

Feb. 22. NATHAN. ELLISON of C. C. coll.—He was afterwards chaplain to Thomas bishop of Litchfield, who gave him the archdeaconry of Stafford, installed therein on the 14th of Jul. 1682.⁵

[210] Mar. 13. THOMAS LINDESEY of Wadham coll.—He was afterwards chaplain to the earl of Essex, minister of Woolwich in Kent, and author of A Sermon preached at the Anniversary Meeting of the Dorsetshire Gentlemen in the Church of St. Mary le Bow on the 1st of Dec. 1691; on Gal. 6. 10. Lond. 1692, qu.

Admitted 103.

Batchelors of Physic.

Four were admitted, but not one of them is yet a writer.

In a convocation held on the 10th of Apr. was a letter read from the delegated power of the chanc. of the university in behalf of HEN. FOWLER formerly of Or. coll. who, after he had been a graduate, served very faithfully in his majesty's army during the grand rebellion began by the godly party; and afterwards having not an opportunity of returning to the university to prosecute his studies and take his degrees in the usual way, he chiefly betook himself to the study of physick, wherein he made so laudable a progress that he was well qualified to be a licentiate in the said faculty, &c. This order being read, and thereupon proposed to the house, whether he should be licensed to practise, or not, the nons made so much noise that the proctors were put to the trouble of taking suffrages in the crowd; (which might have disordered a man to speak a speech presently after, I mean Mr. Wight the sen. proct. who was then to surrender up the badges of his authority, but he came off well enough notwithstanding.) At length it was carried by 145, against 63, votes; whereupon Mr. Fowler was licensed to practise phys. 2 May following, which afterwards he did with good success in his own country, but hath not published any thing that I know.

Doctor of Physic.

May 10. THOM. MAYOW of Ch. Ch.

☞ Not one doct. of div. was admitted this year.

Incorporations.

Jun. 25. RICH. SMITH, who had taken the degree of doct. of physick at Utrecht in Jan. 1675, was incorporated in this university.—He was mast. of arts of this university, and gent. com. of Mert. coll. and is now of the coll. of phys. at Lond.

A little before the act time and after, were several Cambr. mast. of arts incorporated, but not one of them was afterwards a writer, as I can yet find.

Oct. 10. THOM. LANE batchelor of arts of Cambridge.—He had been of St. John's college there,⁶ was now of Ch. Ch. and afterwards fellow of Merton college. He hath written certain matters, but whether he'll own them you may enquire of him.

HEN. EVE of Cambr. who was created D. D. 12 Sept. 1661, as I have before told you, had letters test. of it dated 21 Jan. this year.

Creations.

May 28. CHARLES FITZ-ROY of Ch. Ch. duke of Southampton and one of the nat. sons of king Charles 2. was actually created M. A.—See more of him in these FASTI among the incorporations an. 1663.

Dec. 3. EDMUND HALLEY of Qu. coll. was actually created M. A. by virtue of the king's letters dated 18 Nov. going before, which say that he had received a good account of his learning as to the mathematics and astronomy, whereof he hath gotten a good testimony by the observations he hath made during his abode in the island of St. Helena, &c.—This person hath written and published divers things of great curiosity, and therefore he is hereafter to be numbred among the Oxford writers.

This year was a sojourner in the university and a student in the public library PAUL, VINDIGIUS son of Eras. Vind. of Copenhagen in Denmark.—He was afterwards a professor in the said univ. of Copenhagen, and author of several theol. and philosoph. books.

THOM. BARTHOLIN a Dane, son of a father of both his names, was also this year a student in the same libr. and afterwards author of several medicinal and theological books, &c.

WRIGHT another, one of both whose names of St. Peter's coll. in Cambr. hath published The Glory of God's Revenge against the bloody and detestable Sin of Murder and Adultery, &c. printed in 1685, and other things.

Creations.

Dec. 17. GEORGE HICKES batch. of div. of Linc. coll. was created doct. of div. by virtue of the letters of the delegated power of the chanc. which say that he hath been several years attendant upon the duke of Lauderdale in his majesty's service in the kingdom of Scotland, as well as in England—that he hath done remarkable service to the church of England during his abode in that other kingdom, and hath received several marks of honour from the late archb. of St. Andrew's, and the clergy of Scotland, &c.

JOHN SNELL born at Comonell in Carrick, in the sherriff-dome of Ayre in Scotland, bred in the university of Glasgow under Jam. Darumpley prof. of philosophy, of which he was afterwards diplomated mast. of arts, died in the house of Mr. Benj. Cooper in Halywell in the suburb of Oxon on the sixth day of Aug. this year, aged 50 years (after he had spent some time there) and was buried at the upper end of the chancel (under the north wall) of the chap. or church of St. Cross of Halywell. This I mention, because that in his last will and testament he bequeathed the manor of Uffeton alias Olufeton alias Ulveton in the county of Warwick, worth about 450^l. per an. to be employed (after certain years spent, and moneys rais'd and paid thence) for the maintenance of certain Scotch scholars in such coll. or hall in Oxon, that the vicechancellor of the univ. of Oxon. provost of Qu. coll. master of Bal. coll. and president of St. John's coll. for the time being, shall think fit. Their number is not to be above twelve, or under five, to be chosen from Glasgow coll. from the number of such that had spent 3 years, or two at the least, there, or one or two in some other coll. in Scotland, &c. They are to enjoy the said exhibition about ten or eleven years, and then they are to return into their own country to get preferment there, &c. This estate Mr. Snell got by being first a clerk under sir Orlando Bridgman, while he had chamber-practice in the time of usurpation. Secondly by being cryer of the court of exchequer while the said sir Orl. was lord chief baron thereof, and of the common-pleas when sir Orl. was ch. justice of that court, and lastly by being seal-bearer when he was lord keeper. Afterwards, being much esteemed for his great diligence and understanding, he was employed sometime into Scotland for James duke of Monmouth, and bore the seal again when Anth. earl of Shaftesbury was lord chancellor of England, &c.

Davenant is Charles, who became a gent. com. of Bal. coll. in 1671, but receding without the taking a degree here, had the degree of doct. of the civ. law confer'd upon him elsewhere. He is author of Circe a Tragedy. Lond. 1677. qu. The prologue to it was written by Mr. Jo. Dryden, and the epilogue by John late earl of Rochester. The songs in this tragedy were printed by themselves in two sh. in qu. In 1685 he was elected burgess for St. Ives in Cornwall, to sit in that parl. that met at Westm. 19 May the same year, being the first of king James II. &c.

July 5. {THO. WILLIAMS
THOM. WALTER} of Jesus coll.

The former of these two, who is son of Will. Williams who was adm. M. of A. 1676, hath translated into the Welsh tongue, Dr. W. Sherlock's book entit. A practical Discourse of Death. Oxon. 1691. oct. The other, who was son of Joh. Walter of Percefield in Monmouthshire, wrote The excommunicated Prince, or the false Relique; a Tragedy, &c. Lond. 1679. in a thin fol. To which trag. tho' the name of capt. Will. Bedloe is put as author, yet this Mr. Walter wrote all, or the most part of it. See more in a book entit. An Account of the English Dramatic Poets, &c. Oxon. 1691. oct. Written by Gerard Langbaine (son of the learned Dr. Ger. Langbaine sometimes provost of Qu. coll.) lately a gent. com. of Qu. coll. now superior beadle of law in the univ. of Oxon, wherein p. 15. he ascribes it to the said captain, without any notice at all of Tho. Walter.

Oct. 27. JOHN HOWELL of Trin. coll.—He hath written and published A Discourse of Persecution, or Suffering for Christ's Sake, &c. Lond. 1685. qu. and many other things hereafter.

Mar. 11. THOM. SAWYER of Magd. coll.—This person, who was nephew to sir Rob. Sawyer attorney general, was music reader in the act 1681, and author of a poem called—Antigamus, Or a Satyr against Marriage. Oxon. 1681, in 1 sh. qu. Written upon the denial of a certain gentlewoman, to whom he was a suiter for marriage, &c.

Admitted 127.

Batchelors of Physic.

Three were admitted, of whom FRANCIS SMITH M. A. and fellow of Magd. coll. was one.—I set him down here, not that he was a writer, but upon this account following, viz. that after the death of Dr. James Hyde principal of Magd. hall, which hapned on the 7th of May 1681, the fellows of Magd. coll. calling into question the power of the chanc. of the university of putting in a principal of the said hall, did thereupon (the president being then absent) elect to be principal the said Francis Smith, 21 May 1681, and did intend to seal up the hall gates against the vicechancellor, in case he should come to admit a principal of the chancellor's nomination. But the president in the mean time returning, and the fellows desir'd by the bishop of Winchester to desist from these their proceedings, the matter came to nothing. So that the vicechancellor finding no opposition, he did forthwith admit Dr. Will. Levett of the chancellor's nomination, as I shall tell you among the D. of D. following. This Mr. Smith was afterwards Dr. of his faculty, and physician in the army of king William III. in Ireland, where he died about the beginning of June 1691.

Batchelors of Divinity.

Incorporations.

On the 13th of July, being the next day after the solemnity of the act, were 23 masters, one batch. of div. one doct. of law, and one doct. of physic, of the university of Cambridge incorporated: Among the masters I find only one, as yet a writer, viz.

STEPH. KAY of Magd. coll.—He was afterwards rector of Manton in Lincolnsh. and author of A Discourse teaching the Excellency and Usefulness of Christian Religion, both in Principles and Practices, chiefly designed by the Author for the Benefit of his Parishioners. Printed at York 1686. qu. It is dedicated to sir Joh. Kay of Woodsome bt. one of the dep. lieutenants of the West-Riding in Yorkshire, who, as it seems, was a favourer of his studies. The batch. of div. and doctors were these following.

NATHAN. SHUTE batch. of div. of King's coll.—He hath one or more serm. extant.

HENRY HITCH doct. of law of Jes. coll.

ROB. WITTIE doct. of phys. of King's coll.⁴—This learned person, hath written (1) Scarborough Spaw: or a Description of the Nature and Virtue of the Spaw at Scarborough in Yorkshire. (2) Treatise of the Nature and Use of Waters in general, and the several Sorts thereof, as Sea, Rain, Snow, Pond, &c. with their original Causes and Qualities, &c. (3) A short Discourse concerning Mineral Waters, especially that of the Spaw. These three, which go and are bound together, were several times printed in oct. and all, or most of them, (which go under the general name of Scarborough Spaw) were put into Latin by the author, with this tit. Fons Scarburgensis: sive Tractatus de omnis Aquarum Generis Origine & Usu, &c. Lond. 1678. oct. Dedic. to sir Joh. Micklethwait, president of the coll. of physicians, a Yorkshire man born, and bred in the same school with Dr. Wittie. (4) Pyrologia Mimica: or an Answer to Hydrologia Chymica of Will. Sympton in the Defence of Scarborough Spaw: Wherein the five mineral Principles of the said Spaw are defended against all his Objections, &c. Lond. 1669, oct. with which is printed (5) A Vindication of the rational Method and Practice of Physic called Galenical, and a Reconciliation between that and Chymical: As also: (6) A further Discourse about the Original of Springs. Besides the answer of Dr. Will. Sympton, made to the aforesaid book called Scarborough Spaw, came out another answer entit. Scarborough Spaw spagirically anatomized: together with a New-years Gift for Dr. Wittie. Lond. 1672. oct. written by George Tonstall doct. of phys. sometime batch. of phys. of Magd. hall in Oxon, as I have told you in these FASTI, an. 1647. Dr. Wittie hath also written (7) Gout Raptures: or an historical Fiction of a War among the Stars; wherein are mention'd the 7 Planets, the 12 Signs of the Zodiac, and the 50 Constellations of Heaven mention'd by the Antients, &c. Lond. 1677. oct. and afterward improv'd, Lond. 1685. oct. written in Engl. Greek and Latin lyric verse. (8) A Survey of the Heavens: a plain Description of the admirable Fabric and Motions of Heavenly Bodies, as they are dis- wich, 8vo. p. 65.) but a copy of the inscription, as altered and approved of by several judicious persons, is there inserted, p. 72. KENNET.]

covered to the Eye, by the Telescope, and several eminent Consequences illustrated thereby. 1. The infinite Wisdom &c. of God in the Creation. 2. The verifying, &c. Lond. 1680. 81. oct. To which is added the Gout Raptures in English, Latin and Greek, lyric verse, by the author Dr. Wittie, who hath also done another work mentioned in the first part of these FASTI, an. 1628. col. 450. This Dr. Wittie, who was always esteemed an ingenious and learned man, was fellow of the coll. of phys. at London, had practised physic for 18 years together with Dr. James Primerose at Kingston upon Hull in Yorkshire, and after the said Primerose's death, carried on his practice there, and in the neighbourhood, for several years after with good success. At length retiring to London in his old age, died in Basingshaw-street about the latter end of Nov. 1684.⁵

The before-mention'd Cambridge men, viz. STEPH. KAY, N. SHUTE, H. HITCH and R. WITTIE, were incorporated on the 13th of July.

Oct. 2. ADAM SAMUEL HARTMAN doct. of div. of the university of Franckfort upon Oder, bishop of the reformed churches through Great Poland and Prussia.

Oct. 19. JOH. PRICE doct. of div. of Cambr.⁶—This worthy doctor was born in the isle of Wight in Hampshire, educated in Eaton school, elected thence into King's coll. in Cambr. 1645, (of which he was afterwards fellow) left it when he was master of arts and became chaplain to George Monk, when he was chief governour or general of Scotland, and afterwards was privy to all the secret passages and particularities in order to the restoration of king Charles II. made by the said most noble and generous Monk: After which time he came with him into England when he effected the matter, and as a reward for his services done in that affair, he had first confer'd upon him, by the intercession of James earl of Northampton, a fellowship in Eaton coll. in the place of the learned Joh. Hales some years before dead, a prebendship in the church of Salisbury, and the rich rectory of Petworth in Sussex. He hath published (1) A Sermon preached before the H. of Com. at St. Margaret's in West. 10 May 1660; on 1 Sam. 2. ver. 9. Lond. 1660. qu. (2) The Mystery and Method of his Majesty's happy Restoration, &c. Lond. 1680. oct. ⁵ [Robert Wittie M. D. described himself of York, aged 55, 1665, when he entered his descent at sir Wm. Dugdale's visitation. He was son to George Wittie of Beverley, c. 40. f. 161. b. in Coll. Arm. The dedication of his Scarborough Spaw, 12mo. 1660. is dated 'Eboraci, ex musæo meo, Maii 29, 1660.'

Dr. Tonstall, who also wrote on the Scarborough water, was a friend of that Mr. Ambrose Barnes whose memoirs I have before mentioned. He is described in them as a gentleman 'of an antient house, and of great strictness in religion, if his scruples by a tincture of melancholy that darkened his constitution had not, in room of his humours, carried him into excess.' He was much addicted to alchemy. 'But this mention of Dr. Tonstall minds me of a treatise concerning Scarboro' Spaw which he had composed, desiring our author (Ambrose Barnes) to peruse it, before it went to the press, excusing the flatness of the style. As to stile, Mr. Barnes told him the gravity of the subject needed not the trifling embellishment of words, and language, for Ager non querit medicum eloquentem sed sanantem. 'Nothing would serve the doctor but he must know from what book Mr. Barnes had that Latin sentence, that he might place it for a motto in the title page of his manuscript. Mr. Barnes would have put him off, saying it was too trite and vulgar a sentence to stand in the front of a learned work. But the honest Doctor, growing impatient, protested if his friend did not tell him where he had it, he would quote that sentence, and set down Ambrose for the author of it; so to satisfy the good doctor's importunity, he told him Seneca was the author of it.' Memoirs, p. 59. Creations.

The creations of this year were in all faculties, occasion'd mostly by the coming to the university of certain noble foreigners.

Batchelor of Arts.

May 21. RICH. BULKLEY of Ch. Ch. son of sir Rich. Bulkley of the kingdom of Ireland, four years standing in the condition of fellow com. of Trin. coll. near Dublin, &c. was actually created batch. of arts.

Master of Arts.

Sept. 6. JAMES BOTELER earl of Ossory of Ch. Ch. son of Tho. late earl of Ossory, and grandson to James duke of Ormond, was presented by the orator with a little speech to the vicechancellor, which done he was created M. A.—He became, after the death of his grandfather, duke of Ormond, and chancellor of this university.

Batchelor of Divinity.

June 14. RICH. BRAVELL of Exet. coll. chaplain to the garrison of Tangier within the kingdom of Fezz in Africa (where he had shew'd himself so useful to the public, that upon his desire of return, the bishop of Lond. and other eminent persons required his continuance there) was diplomated batch. of div.

Doctors of Law.

Charles the Electoral prince Palatine being entertained at Oxon in Septemb. this year, some of his retinue were created doctors of law, viz.

Sept. 9. JOHAN. PHILIPPUS AB ADELSHEIM, Franco-Germanus, master of the horse to the electoral prince.

GUSTAVUS GEORGIUS D'HALEKE of Brandenburg in Germany.

PAULUS HACKENBERGH of Westphalia in Germany, professor of eloquence and histories in the univ. of Heidelberg. The said four persons were created on the 9th of Sept.

Feb. 25. GEORGE LEWIS duke of Brunswick and Lunenburg, was then created with solemnity.—This person, who was now commonly called prince of Hannover, and had come to Whitehall on the 16th of Decemb. going before, purposely to pay his respects to the lady Anne daughter of James duke of York, was, the day before he was created, received in the university with solemnity at his coming thereunto, and being lodg'd in Ch. Ch. he with his retinue were conducted the next day by the bishop, Dr. Fell, to the public schools, and being habited in scarlet in the apodyterium, was thence conducted by three of the beadles with the king's professor of law to the Theatre, (where the convocation was then held) and coming near to the vicechancellor's seat, the professor presented him, (the prince being then bare) which done, the vicechancellor standing bare, as the doctors and masters did, he created him doctor of law. That also being done, he went up to his chair of state provided for him on the right hand of the vicechancellor's seat, and when three of his retinue were created doctors (as I am now about to tell you) the orator complemented him in a speech in the name of the university. The next day he left the university, at which time was presented to him, in the name thereof, Hist. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon. with the cuts belonging thereto.

The noble JOHN free baron of REEK of the retinue of the said prince of Hannover, was created at the same time.

Doctors of Physic.

Sept. 9. The electoral prince CHARLES count palatine of the Rhine, was with solemnity created doctor of phys.—This most noble person, who was son of Charles Lovys count pal. of the Rhine, and prince elector of the empire (elder brother to prince Rupert) and he the son of Frederick count palatine of the Rhine, prince elect. of the empire and king of Bohemia by the princess Elizabeth his wife daughter of king James I. of England, was received with solemnity the day before in the university, and took up his lodgings in the dean's apartment in Ch. Ch. The next day being conducted to the public schools by the bishop and others, and thence to the apodyterium, he was there habited in scarlet with some of his retinue: Thence he was conducted by the beadles and Dr. Morison the botanic professor (who at that time executed the office of the king's professor of phys. then absent) to the Theatre where the convocation was solemnized: And coming near to the vicech. seat, the said doctor presented him with a little speech; which being done the vicech. created him with another, and then was conducted to his seat of state on the right hand of the vicechancellor. All which, with the creation of some of his retinue being finish'd, the orator complemented him with another speech in the name of the university. The next day his highness left Oxon, went to Hampton-court, and just at his arrival there (Sept. 12.) news was brought him that his father died suddenly at Edingen between Mannheim and Frankendale on the 7th of the said month according to the account there followed.

PHILIP CHRISTOPHER DE KONINGSMARCK count or earl of Westervick and Stegholme, lord in Rotenburg and Newhouse, created doct. of physic the same day (Sept. 9.) as one of the retinue of the aforesaid electoral prince:—He was brother, if I mistake not, to Charles John count of Koningsmarck, who in the latter end of 1681 was committed to Newgate, and brought to a public trial for his life for a deep suspicion of having a signal hand in the murder of Tho. Thynne of Longleat in Wilts. esq; in revenge, as 'twas then said, for depriving him of his mistress called Elizabeth countess of Ogle, dau. and heir of the antient and illustrious family of Piercy earl of Northumberland.

WILLIAM DUTTON COLT an Engl. man, master of the horse to prince Rupert, uncle to the elect. prince.—He is now, or else was lately, his majesty's resident at Lunenburg and Brunswick. "He was son of George Colt of Colt-hall in Suffolk esq; by Elizabeth daughter and coheir of John Dutton of Sherburne in Gloucestershire esq; He was afterwards knighted, and died in 1693."⁷

EBERHARDUS FREDERIC A VENNINGEN of Alsatia in Germany, master of the game or hunting to the elect. prince.

ABRAHAM DORR a German of Hanaw.

JOH. BERNHARDUS FERBER a Saxon.

These four last were of the retinue of his electoral highness.

Feb. 25. { ANDR. DE MELLEUIL a knight and colonel.
ANTON. DE SAICTOT.

The last two, who were of the retinue of the prince of Hannover, were created doct. of phys. after the said prince had been created doct. of the civil law.

Doctors of Divinity.

Sept. 9. FRED. CHRISTIAN. WINCHERUS professor of medicine in Heidelberg (as in the pub. reg. 'tis said) was created in the same convocation wherein the electoral prince was created, being one of his retinue.

[217] Oct. 21. THOM. HINDE batch. of div. of Brasen. coll. and chaplain to James duke of Ormond.—He succeeded in the deanery of Limrick in Ireland one Dr. Will. Smith^a promoted to the see of Killalow, and died in his house in Limerick in the month of Nov. 1689.

AN. DOM. 1681. 33 CAR. II.

BENT of Linc. coll.—This gentleman, who was son of a father of both his names, was born in, or near, Fridaystreet in London, bred in the quality of a com. in the said coll. and afterwards travelled, but died before he had consummated his intended journey. He hath translated from French into English An historical Defence of the Reformation: in Answer to a Book entit. Just Prejudices against the Calvinists. Lond. 1683. in a pretty large qu. originally written by monsieur Claud, minister of the reformed church at Charenton. The translator hath a preface to this book, wherein he saith that the Romanists caused the said book of Claud to be burned in France. This Mr. Bent died at Geneva, 21st of May 1683, aged 23 years, and was buried in the cemetery or yard on the south side of the church of St. Gervaise there. Soon after was a monument fixed on the wall of that church near his grave, with an epitaph thereon made by Richard Blackmore M. A. of St. Edm. hall, which being too large for this place, shall be now omitted.

20. FRANC. CARSWELL of Exet. coll.—This divine, who is now vicar of Bray in Berks,⁹ and had been chaplain in ordinary to his majesty king Charles II. hath published (1) The State Informer inquired into, Sermon before the Judges at Aylesbury Assizes in Bucks 3 Mar. 1683; on 2 Sam. 15, Part of the 3d and 4th Verses. Lond. 1684. qu. (2) England's Restoration parallel'd in Judah's: or the Primitive Judge and Counsellor, Sermon at Abingdon Assizes for Berks 6 Aug. 1689; on Isa. 1. 26, 27. Lond. 1689. qu.

July 8. ANTH. RADCLIFF of Ch. Ch.—He had been chapl. to Hen. earl of Arlington, and, after the death of Dr. Rich. Allestree, was installed canon of Ch. Ch. on the eleventh of Feb. 1680.

Dec. 8. JOH. MILL of Qu. coll.—This learned divine, who is now principal of St. Edm. hall, hath in the press at Oxon the New Testament in a Greek fol. according to Rob. Stephens his fair fol. edition, an. 1550, wherein he gives an account of the various lections of all the MSS. that could be met with, both at home and abroad: Also the readings of the fathers Greek and Latin, with a judgment upon such lections, as are more considerable, with large annotations upon them; together with a very full collection of parallel places of holy Scripture, and other places illustrative of particular words, or passages in each verse, placed at the foot of the Greek text in each page, with distinct asteristics and marks of reference; by which, in every verse, may be seen what part of each verse, the said places of scripture do refer to. This most elaborate work was begun above 15 years since, and without intermission carried on with great industry and care. He hath consulted all the antient MSS. of the whole, or any part of the New Test. now reposit in England, and has procured a collation of the most authentic MS. copies at Rome, Paris and Vienna. The work was attempted by the advice and countenance of Dr. Joh. Fell bishop of Oxon, and the impression began at his charge in his lordship's printing-house near the Theatre. After the said bishop's death, his executors being not willing to carry on the undertaking, the author (Dr. Mill) refunded the prime costs, and took the impression on himself, and at his proper expence it is now so near finish'd, that the publication is expected within a year, with very learned prolegomena, that will give an historical account of the tradition or conveyance of the New Test. and other most early records of the church.

Mar. 2. HENRY ALDRICH can. of Ch. Ch.—He accumulated the degrees in divinity, and on the 17th of June 1689 was installed dean of Ch. Ch. in the place of Mr. Joh. Massey, who withdrew himself from that office in the latter end of Nov. going before.

In a convocation held in the beginning of July this year, were letters of the delegated power of the chanc. of the university read in behalf of WILL. HORE M. A. of Exet. coll. chapl. in ord. to his majesty and preb. of Worcester, that he might accumulate the degrees of batch. and doct. of div. but whether he did so, it appears not.

Incorporations.

Thirteen masters of arts of Cambr. were incorporated this year (mostly after the act) but none of them is yet a writer, as I can yet find. Among them was BYRON NEEDHAM, brother to Tho. visc. Kilmurrey in Ireland.

July 12. WILLIAM CAVE D. D. of St. John's coll. in Cambridge.¹—This person, who was now rector of Great Alhallows in London, and in 1684 had succeeded Mr. Joh. Rosewell in his canonry of Windsor, (about which time he became rector of Haseley in Oxfordsh. as it seems) is a learned man, as divers books published by him in English and Lat. shew, the titles of which are now too many to be here set down. See in Jer. Taylor among the writers, an. 1667, vol. iii. col. 789.

LIVELEY MODY or MOODY doct. of div. of the said coll. of St. Joh. was also incorporated this year, May 2, he being then a master com. of St. Alb. hall, and beneficed in Northamptonshire.

Creations.

Feb. 18. GEORGE COMPTON earl of Northampton, of Ch. Ch. being about to leave the university, was actually created mast. of arts.

CHARLES SOMERSET lord Herbert of Ragland, of Ch. Ch. [219] the eldest son of Henry marquess and earl of Worcester, was then also actually created M. of A. The said marquess is now duke of Beaufort.

These two young noblemen were presented by the public orator, each with a little speech.

This year was a sojourner in the university, and a student in the public library, one ANDREAS ARNOLDUS of Nuremberg, who published the Sermon of Athanasius to the Monks and other things; and afterwards became professor of divinity in the university of Altorf, rector of a church in Nuremberg, &c.

The first of these two, who was son of Jam. Simpson senior alderman of the corporation of Kendal in Westmorland, was born, and bred in the free-school, there, and being put aside from being tabarder of his coll. when batch. of arts, he retired to his native place in discontent, and there concluded his last day. He hath written Moral Considerations touching the Duty of Contentedness under Afflictions. Oxon. 1686, in 6 sh. in oct. Written by way of letter to the most affectionate and best of fathers Mr. Jam. Simpson. To this letter are added Two Prayers, one for Submission to the divine Will, another for Contentment. This ingenious and religious young man died in his father's house, 20 Decemb. 1684, and was buried the day following in the middle isle of the parish church of Kendal before mentioned, on the west side of the pulpit. The other, Rob. Harrison, who was the son of Joh. Har. of the said corporation of Kendal, and who became a student of Queen's coll. 1678, aged 15 years, hath written A strange Relation of the sudden and violent Tempest, which hapned at Oxford May 31. An. 1682. Together with an Enquiry into the probable Cause and usual Consequences of such like Tempests and Storms. Oxon 1682, in two sheets in qu. He hath also written another book, which is not yet extant, entit. Mercurius Oxonio-Academicus, &c. taken mostly from Hist. & Antiq. Univ. Oxon. and said to be written by a well-wisher to astron. and astrology. He is now schoolmaster of Carlisle.

THO. BROWNE of St. John's coll. was incorporated also the same day.⁵—He was afterwards batch. of div. and published Concio ad Clerum habita coram Acad. Cantab. 11 Junii 1687, pro Gradu Bac. in S. Theol. ubi vindicatur vera & valida Cleri Anglicani, ineunte Reformatione, Ordinatio. Lond. 1688. qu. To which is added an English sermon of the same author, turn'd by him into Latin entit. Concio habita 3 Julii 1687, de Canonica Cleri Anglicani Ordinatione, as also the instruments of the consecration of Matthew Parker archbishop of Canterbury.

Besides the said masters were also incorporated these persons following:

July 11. JAMES FULWOOD doct. of the laws of Queen's coll. in Cambr.

JOHN WORTH doct. of divinity of Dublin and dean of the cathedral church of St. Patrick there, was incorporated the same day, &c.

Creations.

Jul. 11. JOHN POOLEY M. A. chapl. to James duke of Ormond, and dean of the cath. ch. of Kilkenny in Ireland, was actually created doct. of divinity by virtue of the letters of the said duke, chanc. of this univ. "and afterwards made "bishop of Killalow."⁶

HUGH DRYSDALE of the university of Dublin, preacher in the cathedral church at Kilkenny, chaplain to the said duke and archdeacon of Ossory, was actually created D. D. on the same day by virtue of the letters of the said duke.

Feb. 12. SAMUEL DE LANGLE or DE L'ANGLE was actually created D. D. without paying any fees, by virtue of the chancellor's letters written in his behalf, which partly run thus,—Mr. Sam. De Langle minister of the reformed church at Paris is retired into England with his whole family, with intentions to live here the remainder of his time.—He hath exercised his function 35 years, partly at Roven and partly at Paris.—He is only mast. of arts, which the Protestant divines usually take and no farther, &c. When he was conducted into the house of convoc. by a beadle and the king's professor of div. all the masters stood up in reverence to him, and when the professor presented him, he did it with an harangue: which being done, and Mr. De Langle had taken his place among the doctors, he spoke a polite oration containing thanks for the honour that the most famous university of Oxon had done unto him, &c. He had been preacher of the chief church of the reformed religion in France called Charenton near Paris, and was afterwards made prebendary of Canterbury⁷ "and Westminster. "He died 20 Jun. 1693."⁸

Incorporations.

Eighteen masters of arts of Cambr. were incorporated after the act, Jul. 10, among whom were ADAM OATLEY of Trin. hall,³ as also one JOHN LOWTHORPE of St. Joh. coll. in that university, afterwards author of A Letter to the Lord Bishop of Salisbury (Dr. Burnet) in Answer to his Lordship's pastoral Letter, printed in 5 sh. and an half in qu. in July 1690: which being esteemed a pernicious, scandalous, seditious and notorious libel against the king and government,⁴ &c. he the said Mr. Lowthorpe was indicted for high misdemeanour in Sept. following, at the sessions in the Old Bayly in London: and the matter being fully proved against him, he was fined 500 marks, and condemned to be degraded of his ministerial function; the 400 copies also of the said Letter to the L. B. of Salisbury, &c. that were found in his custody, were then ordered to be burnt by the common hangman in the palace-yard at Westminster, at Charing-cross, and without Temple-bar.⁵

Jul. 11. JOH. ELIOT doct. of phys. of Cath. hall in Cambr.
Mar. 4. EDW. GEE M. A. of St. Joh. coll. in the said univ.⁶ was then incorporated.—This learned divine, who is of the Gees of Manchester in Lancash. is now rector of St. Benedict's church near Paul's Wharf in London, and chapl. in ord. to their majesties king William 3. and queen Mary. He hath written and published several books, mostly against popery, which came out in the reign of king James II. the titles of which I shall now, for brevity's sake, omit.

Creations.

'son of great integrity and affection to the interests of learning and the church.—That he had spent several years in travel in the eastern parts, and had brought back with him divers pieces of antiquity, and as a testimony of his respects and kindness to his mother the university, hath deposited them in this place, &c.' This gent. who about the same time took holy orders, was in the month of Dec. 1684 installed preb. of Durham upon the promotion of Dr. Dennis Greavill to the deanery thereof, and is hereafter to be numbered among the Oxford writers.

In the month of May his royal highness JAMES DUKE OF YORK with his royal consort JOSEPHA MARIA or BEATRICIA MARIA, with the LADY ANNE his daughter, were entertained by the university of Oxon; and it being the duke's pleasure that some of his retinue should be created doctors of the civil law, there was a convocation celebrated in the morning of that day (May 22.) of his departure, wherein these following persons were created doctors of that faculty, viz.

Doctors of Law.

JOHN FITZ-GERALD earl of Kildare and baron of Ophalia in Ireland.

CHRISTOPHER LORD HATTON, visc. Gretton, governour of Garnsey or Guernsey.—I have made mention of his father in these FASTI among the created doctors of law in 1642.

HENEAGE FINCH eldest son of Heneage earl of Winchelsea, captain of the king's halberdiers and one of the gent. of the bedchamber to the duke of York.

JOH. WORDEN bart. secretary to the said duke, "and parliament man."

JOH. CONWAY bart.

HUGH GROSVENER esq;

THO. CHOLMONDELEY esq;

JOH. EGERTON esq;

The second of these last three, was afterwards a knight for Cheshire to serve in that parl. that began at Westm. 19 May 1685, 1 Jac. 2.

May 23. ROB. BULKLEY second son of Rob. lord Bulkley visc. Cashels in Ireland.—He was nominated the day before to be created, but did not then appear, as others then nominated did not at that time or afterwards: among such were HENRY MORDANT earl of Peterborough, and WENTWORTH DILLON earl of Roscommon; which last, who was son of James earl of Roscommon, was educated from his youth in all kind of polite learning; but whether he had spent any time in this university, unless in the condition of a sojourner, I cannot tell. Much about the time that James duke of York was married to Josepha Maria the princess of Modena, he became, by his endeavours, captain of the band of pensioners belonging to his majesty king Charles II. and afterwards master of the horse to the said Josepha Maria duchess of York; both which places he quitted some time before his death. This worthy person, who was accounted most excellent in the art of poetry, hath written and published (1) An Essay on translated Verse, Lond. 1680, 1684, &c. in 4 sheets in qu. Before which, John Dryden⁷ the poet laureat hath a copy of verses in praise of it, as also Charles Dryden his son of Trin. coll. in Cambr. and others. The second edit. of this essay was published two years after the pamphlet entit. An Essay upon Poetry, written by John earl of Mulgrave knight of the most noble order of the Garter. To one of the editions of the said Essay on translated Verse, is added by the said earl of Rosecommon, A Specimen of blank Verse, being the fight between the angels, taken out of John Milton's book called Paradise Lost. (2) Several prologues and epilogues to plays, as also divers copies of verses and translations; which are published with the respective plays themselves, and in the Miscellany Poems, &c. printed at London by Jacob Tonson 1684, and in the Collections of Poems printed at Lond. 1693 and 1694, oct. He hath also translated into English, Horace's Art of Poetry, Lond. 1680, qu. Before which Edm. Waller esq; hath a copy of verses on that translation and of the use of poetry: As also into French The Case of Resistance of Supreme Powers, Lond. in oct. written by Dr. Will. Sherlock. At length this most noble and ingenious count paying his last debt to nature in his house near that of St. James's, within the liberty of Westminster on the 17th of Jan. or thereabouts, an. 1684, was buried in the church of St. Peter, commonly called the abby church within the city of Westminster. He was succeeded in his honours by his uncle Cary Dillon a colonel of a regiment in Ireland in the war between king James II. and king William III. from which place going into England, was overtaken by a violent disease which brought him to his grave in the city of Chester, in the month of Nov. 1689. James earl of Roscommon before-mentioned, father to Wentworth the poet, was, when young, reclaimed from the superstition of the Romish church by the learned and religious Dr. Usher primate of Ireland, and thereupon was sent by him into England, as a jewel of price, to be committed to the care and trust of Dr. George Hakewill, who finding him to be a young man of pregnant parts, placed him in Exeter coll. under the tuition of Laurence Bodley batch. of div. nephew to the great sir Tho. Bodley, in the beginning of the year 1628; in which coll. continuing some years, became a person of several accomplishments, and afterwards earl of Roscommon in his own country of Ireland. The next persons who were nominated to be created doctors of the civ. law, but were not, were James Boteler earl of Ossory, Franc. visc. Newport, George Savile lord Eland, eldest son of George marquiss of Halifax, Robert lord Lexington, (who with Anth. visc. Falkland were sworn of their majesties privy council 17 Mar. 1691.) col. Rob. Worden one of the grooms of the bedchamber to the duke, who afterwards did good service for his master when he was king, being then a major general. He died in Red-lyon-square near London, on St. James's day or thereabouts, 1690. The next who was in Oxon, but not created, was major Rich. Bagot a retainer to the said duke, and after him James Graham esq; younger brother to Rich. visc. Preston; which James was afterwards privy purse to, and a colonel under, king James II. to whom afterwards he closely adhered when he fled, to avoid imminent danger in England, into France, &c.

In the afternoon of that day wherein the aforesaid creation was made, the said duke, dutchess and lady Anne being about to leave Oxon, the vice-chancellor with other doctors went to take their leave of them, at which time the vice-chancellor did in the name of the university present to the duke the Hist. and Antiq. of the Univ. of Oxon, with the cuts belonging thereunto, to the duchess the said cuts by themselves, and the Natural History of Oxfordshire, written by Dr. Plot; and a fair English Bible to the lady Anne. All which books were richly bound.

On the 13th of June ADOLPHUS JOHANNES count-palatine of the Rhine and duke of Bavaria, aged 20 years or thereabouts (son to prince Adolphus uncle to the present king of Sweedland) came to Oxon under the conduct of sir Charles Cotterel master of the ceremonies, and lodged that night in

The next day, after he had viewed most places in the university, and the theatre, he went thence to the apodyterium, where he with such of his retinue that were to be created doctors, being habited in scarlet, were conducted into the convocation house, and created, as now I am about to tell you.

[224] Jun. 14. The most illustrious prince ADOLPHUS JOHAN. count pal. of the Rhine, duke of Bavaria, &c. was presented with an encomiastical speech by the deputy orator: which being done, the vice-chancellor created him with another, doct. of the civil law, and then was conducted to his chair of state on the right hand of the vice-chancellor. Afterwards were these following presented,

D. RUDOLPHUS	} counts of Lipstat	} Created doctors
D. OTTO
D. FRED. HARDER a noble German
ANDR. FLEMAN secret. to prince Adolphus		of the civ. law.

It was then the common report that the said prince came into England with his uncle to break off the match to be between prince George of Denmark and the lady Anne.

Jun. 14. LAURENCE CRONYNG tutor to prince Adolphus before-mentioned, was created doctor, while the said prince sate in his chair of state.

Mar. 5. MARTIN LISTER esq; was declared doctor of phys. by virtue of the chancellor's letters sent to the members of the ven. convocation then assembled, partly running thus—'He was lately a practitioner of physic at York, now here in London, a person of exemplary loyalty, and of high esteem amongst the most eminent of his profession for his excellent skill and success therein, and hath given farther proof of his worth and knowledge by several learned books by him published.—He hath entertained so great an affection for the university of Oxon, that he hath lately presented the library with divers valuable books both manuscript and printed, and enriched the new musæum with several altars, coins, and other antiquities, together with a great number of curiosities of nature, whereof several cannot be matched for any price; which yet he declares to be but an earnest of what he farther intends,' &c. On the eleventh of the said month of March the diploma for his creation was sealed, &c. This learned Dr. who is a Yorkshire man born,⁸ and had been bred up under sir Matthew Lister (mentioned in the incorporations, in the FASTI of the first vol. of this work, an. 1605.) was educated in St. John's college in Cambridge, was afterwards of the royal society, and after, when doct. fellow of the coll. of phys.⁹ Among several things that he hath written, are (1) Historia Animalium Angliæ tres Tractatus, &c. Doctor of Divinity.

Jun. 4. THOM. WHITE mast. of arts and chaplain to James duke of York (or rather to the lady Anne) was declared D. D. and two days after was diplomated.—On the 13th of Aug. following, he was installed archdeacon of Nottingham in the place of Vere Harcourt¹ deceased (who had succeeded in that dignity Dr. Will. Robinson, in Sept. 1660) and being nominated bishop of Peterborough upon the promotion of Dr. Will. Lloyd to the see of Norwich, in the latter end of July 1685, was consecrated thereunto in the archb. chappel at Lambeth on the 25th of Oct. following, at which time Rich. Blechinden batch. of div. of St. Joh. coll. in Oxon preached the consecration sermon. This worthy person, who was born in Kent and educated in St. Joh. coll. in Cambridge,² was one of the six bishops, that were (with the most religious and conscientious William archb. of Canterbury) committed prisoners to the Tower of London on the 8th of June 1688 for subscribing and delivering a petition to his maj. king James II. wherein they shewed the great aversness they found in themselves to the distributing and publishing in all their churches his majesty's then late declaration for liberty of conscience, &c. which was then esteemed libellous and seditious. Afterwards coming to their tryal in Westminster hall on the 25th of the same month they were acquitted, to the great rejoycing of the generality of people. After the prince of Orange came to the crown and settled, he was one of those bishops, together with the archb. that were deprived of their respective sees for not taking the oaths of allegiance and supremacy to him and the qu. whereupon Dr. Rich. Cumberland of Cambridge being nominated to the see of Peterborough by their majesties, he was consecrated thereunto in the church of St. Mary le Bow in London on the 5th of July 1691.³

June 14. WILLIAM GRAHAM master of arts of Ch. Ch. and chaplain to her royal highness princess Anne of Denmark was diplomated doctor of divinity, or as 'tis said in the register was created simpliciter.—This divine, who is younger brother to Richard viscount Preston, was installed preb. of Durham, 26 Aug. 1684, and dean of Carlisle on the death of Dr. Tho. Musgrave, in April or May^a 1686.

Nov. 18. RENE BERTHEAU late minister of the reformed church in the university of Montpelier in France, was actually created doct. of div. by virtue of the letters of the chancellor of the university, who had a little before received letters of recommendation in his behalf from the lord high treasurer of England, as a man of great reputation in his own country, and very eminent both for learning and piety, &c.

Mar. 8. JAMES D'ALLEMAGNE a French minister of the protestant church lately retired into England upon account of religion, was actually created doct. of div. without the paying of fees.

Farmer. See more in Sam. Parker among the writers, an. 1687. At length the prince of Orange being about to come into England, to take upon him the government thereof, he was restored to his presidentship by the bishop of Winch. (commission'd for that purpose by his majesty king James II.) on the 25th of Octob. 1688, after Dr. Parker had enjoyed it during his natural life, and after the removal thence of his successor Bonaventure Gifford by his majesty's command. Afterwards Dr. Hough succeeded Tim. Hall in the see of Oxon, with liberty allowed him to keep the presidentship of Magd. coll. in commendam with it.

Creations.

In a convocation held 15 Dec. were letters read from the chanc. of the university in behalf of one ELIAS BOHEREL (born at Rochelle, partly bred under his father an eminent physician, and two years or more in the university of Saumur) to be created bachelor of the civil law, but whether he was created or admitted it appears not. He and his father were French protestants, and were lately come into England, to enjoy the liberty of their religion, which they could not do in France, because of their expulsion thence by the king of that country.

Tho' his majesty king James II. was entertained by the university in the beginning of Sept. this year, yet there was no creation made in any faculty, which was expected and gaped after by many.

The next day came a mandat from his majesty for George lord Jefferys lord chancellor of England to be elected chancellor of the university, but the former election being not in a possibility to be revoked, there were letters sent to satisfy his majesty concerning that matter. The said JAMES DUKE OF ORMOND was installed in his house in St. James's Square, within the liberty of Westminster, on the 23d of Aug. following: which being concluded, followed an entertainment for his noble friends, acquaintance, and the academians, equal to, if not beyond any, that had been made by the present king or his predecessor.

Incorporations.

The act being now the fourth time put off, not one Cambridge master was incorporated.

May 14. JACOB SARTREUS mast. of arts of the univ. of Puy-Laurence in Languedock.—He is now prebendary of Westminster; in which dignity he succeeded, if I mistake not, Dr. George Stradling.

21. HENRY DODWELL mast. of arts of the university of Dublin, who had been generously elected by the university of Oxford Cambden's professor of history, in his absence, and without his privity, (after the death of Dr. John Lamphire) on the 2d of April this year, was then (May 21.) incorporated in the same degree.—This learned person, who was the son of Will. Dodwell of Ireland, son of Hen. Dodwell of the city of Oxon, son of William, supposed to be brother to alderman Henry Dodwell mayor of the said city in the 34th of queen Eliz. Dom. 1592. was born in the parish of St. Warburgh, commonly called St. Warborough within the city of Dublin, in the beginning of the grand rebellion that broke out in that kingdom in Octob. 1641, educated in grammar learning under Christopher Wallis in the free-school, situated in the Bederew, within the city of York, from 1649, to 1654, and afterwards for a year's time in Dublin, entered a student in Trin. coll. there, an. 1656, and when batchelor of arts, was made fellow thereof. After he had proceeded in that faculty, he left his fellowship to avoid entering into holy orders, and in 1666 I find him a sojourner in Oxon, purposely to advance himself in learning by the use of the public library. Thence he return'd to his native country for a time, and published a posthumous book entit. De Obstinatone, Opus posth. Pietatem Christiano-Stoicam, Scholastico More suadens. Dubl. 1672 oct. Before which book, (written by his sometime tutor named Joh. Stearne M. D. and publ. professor in the university of Dublin) Mr. Dodwell put of his own composition Prolegomena Apologetica, de Usu Dogmatum Philosophicorum, &c. In the beginning of this book is Dr. Stearne's epitaph without date, insculp'd on a marble, on the north side of the altar in Trin. coll. chappel near Dublin, part of which is this—'Philosophus, Medicus, summusque Theologus idem Sternius hic,' &c. Afterwards Mr. Dodwell returned into England, spent his time there in divers places in a most studious and retired condition, and wrote and published these books following. (1) Two Letters of Advice. 1. For the Suspension of holy Orders. 2. For Studies Theological, &c. Printed at Dublin first, and afterwards twice at London in oct. At the end of the first letter is added A Catalogue

Being a just Account concerning the true Nature and Principles of Schism, according to the Ancients*. Lond. 1682-3. oct. (7) Dissertationes Cyprianicæ. There were two editions of these, viz. one in fol. at the end of St. Cyprian's works published by Dr. John Fell bishop of Oxon, an. 1682; and another in oct. printed in Sheldon's theatre 1684, purposely for the sake of such scholars who could not spare money to buy those in fol. which were to go, and were always bound, with St. Cyprian's works beforementioned. (8) Dissertatio de Ripa Striga ad Lactant. de Morte Persecutorum. Printed at the end of Lactantius Firm. his works, with commentaries on them made by Thomas Spark M. A. of Ch. Ch.—Oxon. 1684. oct. (9) De Jure Laicorum sacerdotali, &c. This book, which is written against Hugh Grotius, was printed at Lond. in oct. at the end of a piece of that author entit. De Cænæ Administratione ubi Pastores non sunt, &c. Much about which time was published Antidodwellism; being two curious Tracts formerly written by Hugo Grotius, concerning a Solution of these two Questions. 1. Whether the Eucharist may be administred in the Absence of, or Want of, Pastors, &c. Made English by one who calls himself Philaratus. (10) Additiones & Dissertatio singularis, in the Opera posthuma chronologica of the famous Dr. Jo. Pearson, sometime bishop of Chester.—London 1687-8. in qu. (11) Dissertationes in Irenæum. Oxon. & Theat. Sheldon, 1689. oct. To which is added a fragment of Phil. Sideta De Catechistarum Alexandrinorum Successione, with notes. Besides these books, the author, now in the prime of his years, designs others, which in good time may be made extant for the benefit of the church of England (for which he hath a zealous respect) and commonwealth of learning. His universal knowledge, and profound judgment in all sciences and books, has rendred him famous amongst all the learned men of France and Italy, and the great sanctity and severity of his life has gain'd him a veneration very peculiar and distinguishing among all sorts of people. His greatest study has been to assert the honour and interest of religion and the clergy; and his writings in defence of the church of England against papists and presbyterians, have been esteemed perfect pieces in their kind. But notwithstanding all this, the reader may be pleas'd to know, that whereas he suffered much in his estate in his native country, for not coming in, and taking part with the forces of king James II. when they endeavoured to keep possession of Ireland against king William III, and his forces, an. 1689, &c. for which he was proclaimed rebel: Or had he been there, as he was not, they would have imprison'd him, if not worse; so, soon after did he suffer in England (where he then was) for keeping close and adhering to the oaths of allegiance which he had taken to the said king James II, by being deprived of the professorship of history (founded by the learned Cambden) to the great prejudice of learning. He lives now obscurely (mostly in his cell in the north suburb of Oxon) and is preparing his learned lectures, and several useful discourses, for the press.

Creations.

June 15. JOH. MESNARD was actually created doct. of div. by virtue of the chancellor's letters; which say that 'he had been 16 years minister of the reformed church of Paris at Charenton, and afterwards chaplain to his majesty (king William III.) when he was prince of Orange for some years, in which quality he came with him into England—that he has his majesty's warrant to succeed Dr. Is. Feb. 26. GEORGE WALKER an Irish minister lately governor of London-Derry, and the stout defender of it against the forces under the command of king James II. when they besieged it in April, May, &c. this year, was, after he had been presented by the king's professor of divinity, actually created doctor of that faculty.—He was born of English parents in the county of Tyrone, as 'tis said, educated in the university of Glasgow, and afterwards beneficed at Donaghmore in the county of Tyrone, many miles distant from the city London-Derry: To which place retiring when the protestants therein, and in those parts, were resolv'd to keep and defend it against Richard earl of Tirconnel lord lieutenant of Ireland, and the forces under king James II. he became a defendant therein, and at length governor of it, which he managed with great prudence and valour. After the siege was raised, and that part of the country secured from the incursions of the said forces, he went into England to pay his respects to king William III, who receiving him graciously, was highly caress'd by the courtiers, and afterwards by the citizens of London; at which time the common discourse was that Dr. Hopkins bishop of London-Derry should be translated to Chichester, and Mr. Walker succeed him in Derry. He hath published (1) A true Account of the Siege and famous Defence made at London-Derry. Lond. 1689. qu. &c. (2) Vindication of the true Account, &c. Ibid. 1689. qu. &c. Afterwards being about to return to Ireland to do further service therein for his majesty, he obtained the letters of the chancellor of the university to have the degree of doctor of divinity confer'd on him: So that taking Oxford in his way, in the company of doctor Jo. Vensey archbishop of Tuam, he was created as before I have told you. Thence he went into Ireland, where having a command confer'd on him in the English army, he received his death's wound in the very beginning of July an. 1690, at what time the said army passed over the river of Boyne in the county of Lowth to fight the forces belonging to king James II, and soon after he expir'd, at or near Tredagh.

He died at Wroxton near Banbury in Oxfordshire on the 5th of September 1685, and was privately buried in a vault under part of the church there, among the ancestors of his wife named Frances the second daughter and co-heir of Thomas Pope earl of Downe in Ireland, uncle to Thomas the last earl of Downe of the straight or lineal descent of that family, who died at Oxon in the year 1660, as I have told you in Henry Beesley among the writers under the year 1675. But whereas 'tis said there (in the first edition of this work) that he married the eldest daughter and co-heir is an error, for it was the second, the first named Beata having been married to William Some of Suffolk esquire, and the youngest named Finetta, to Robert Hyde esq; son of Alexander sometime bishop of Salisbury.

Sir GEORGE MACKENZIE of Rosehaugh (de Valle Rosarum) in the county of Rosse in Scotland having left that country upon the change of the government there, and violent proceedings of the kirk party, an. 1689, he retired to Oxon in the month of September that year, became a sojourner there for a time, a frequenter of the public library, and on the second day of June 1690 he was, by the favour of the venerable congregation of regents, admitted a student therein, where he continued all that summer.—This most worthy and loyal gentleman, son of Simon Mackenzie (brother to the earl of Seaforth) by Elizabeth his wife daughter of a gentleman of an antient and heroic extraction named Dr. Andrew Bruce rector of the university of St. Andrews, was born at Dundee in the county of Angus, an. 1636, and having an ardent desire from his childhood for the obtaining good letters, he was, at about ten years of age, (at which time he had conquered his grammar and the best classical authors) sent to the university of Aberdeen, where, and afterwards in that of St. Andrews, he ran through the classes of logic and philosophy under the tuition of several eminent masters before he was scarce sixteen years of age. Afterwards applying his studies, with great zeal, to the civil law, he travelled into France, and in the university of Bourges he continued in an eager pursuit of that faculty for about three years time. After his return to his native country, he became an advocate in the courts at Edinburgh, being then scarce twenty years of age, and in 1661 was made choice of to be an advocate for pleading the causes of the marquess of Argyle; and afterwards became a judge in the criminal court, which office he performed with great faith, justice and integrity. In 1674, or thereabouts, he was made the king's lord advocate and one of his privy council; and notwithstanding the great troubles and molestations that arose from the fanatical party, yet he continued in those places, and stood steady, faithful and just in the opinion of all good and loyal men till the beginning of the reign of king James VII. at which time, being averse in lending his assistance to the taking away of the penal laws, he was removed, and sir John Dalrimple now secretary of state in Scotland under king William III. was put into his place. Some time after his removal, he was restored and continued lord advocate and privy counsellor till king William III. made a revolution in Scotland, and then he went into England, as I have before told you. He was a gentleman well acquainted with the best authors, whether antient or modern, of indefatigable industry in his studies, great abilities and integrity in his profession, powerful at the bar, just on the bench, an able statesman, a faithful friend, a loyal subject, a constant advocate for the clergy and universities, of strict honour in all his actions, and a zealous defender of piety and religion in all places and companies. His conversation was pleasant and useful, severe against vice and loose principles without regard to quality or authority, a great lover of the laws and customs of his country, a contemner of popularity and riches, frugal in his expences, abstemious in his diet, &c. His works, as to learning are these (1) Aretina, a Romance.—printed in oct. (2) Religio Stoici. Edinb. 1663, &c. in oct. The running title at the top of the pages is The Virtuoso or Staic. (3) Solitude preferred to public Employment, printed at Edinb. in oct. (4) Moral Gallantry, printed several times in oct. It is a discourse wherein the author endeavours to prove that point of honour (abstracting from all other ties) obliges men to be virtuous, and that there is nothing so mean (or unworthy of a gentleman) as vice. (5) A moral Paradox, maintaining that it is easier to be Virtuous than Vitious, printed with Moral Gallantry. (6) Pleadings in some remarkable Cases before the supreme Courts of Scotland since 1661, printed in qu. (7) Observations upon the 28th Act of the 23d Parliament of King James VI. against Dispositions made in Defraud of Creditors. Printed at Edinburgh in oct. (8) Of the Laws and Customs of Scotland in Matters Criminal, Edinburgh 1678, qu. (9) Observations on the Laws and Customs of Nations as to Precedency, with the Science of Heraldry, treated as a Part of the Civil Law of Nations; wherein Reasons are given for its Principles, and Etymologies for its harder Terms. This book being dedicated and presented by the author to the university of Oxon, the members thereof assembled in convocation on the 9th of June 1684, ordered a letter of thanks to be sent to him for the said book and his worthy pains therein, &c. (12) The Discovery of the Fanatic Plot. Printed 1684, fol. (13) Institution of the Laws of Scotland, printed in 1684, oct. (14) Process against Bayly of Jerviswood. Written in answer to An Historical Account of Church Government, &c. published by Dr. William Lloyd bishop of St. Asaph. This Defence of sir George Mackenzie was published in the latter end of June, an. 1685; but before it was extant, it was animadverted upon by Dr. Edward Stillingfleet (who had before seen the manuscript of it) in his preface to his book entitled Origines Britannicæ, published in fol. at London, in the beginning of June 1685. (16) The Antiquity of the Royal Line of Scotland farther cleared and defended against the Exceptions lately offered by Dr. Stillingfleet in his Vindication of the Bishop of St. Asaph. Lond. 1686, oct. (17) Observations upon Acts of Parliament. Edinb. 1686, fol. (18) *Oratio inauguralis habita Edenburgi Id. (24) Defence of the Proceedings of the Privy Council in Scotland. (25) Memorial about the Bishops to the Prince of Orange, &c. (26) Reason, an Essay. London 1694, oct. by sir George Mackenzie lord advocate of Scotland, who published (27) The Institutions of the Law of Scotland. Lond. 1694, oct." The said sir George Mackenzie hath also left behind him about fourteen manuscripts of his composition, which in good time may see light. At length this good gentleman dying much lamented by all the friends of the church, monarchy, learning and religion, in St. James's street near St. James's house within the liberty of Westminster, on the 8th day of May, an. 1691, his body was thereupon conveyed by land to Scotland, and being lodged for a time in the abbey church of Halyrood house at Edinburgh, was on the 26th of June following buried in great state and pomp (being attended by all the council, nobility, colleges of justice, university, gentry and clergy; and so great a concourse of people that hath not yet been seen on such an occasion) in a vault, made some time before by himself, with a cupulo of free-stone over it, in the yard of the Franciscan or Grey-fryers church in the said city. At the same time was fastned to his coffin a large inscription in Latin for him the said sir George; part of which runs thus.—Patriæ Decus, Religionis Vindex, Justitiæ Propugnator, Juris Regii Assertor strenuus & indefessus. Collegii Juridici, sive Juris-
